One thing deserves notice right here. When our forefathers incorporated in the Constitution that the General Government should guarantee to every State a republican form of government, they did not intend that we should guarantee license to a wild mob. The spirit of radicalism and utopianism which so rules the world at present had made but little show then. What they most feared was that States might be converted into petty kingdoms or principalities, but they never dreamed of the wild fanaticism that was to throttle and choke out the spirit of rational liberty. In those old days of innocence and ignorance they actually thought that both intelligence and virtue were necessary to maintain a republican government. Hence they restricted the franchise to those who could understand the nature of free government and had some interest in maintaining order and promoting good morals. In those days almost if not quite every State in the Union had a restriction upon the franchise of the people. Since that time the tendency has been to remove, one after another, all restrictions upon suffrage. Having conferred this precious boon upon all of our own race, we cast about for others. Beginning with the ignorant and lately enslaved African, we are still extending the broad ægis of our Constitution, so that it may defend and protect still others in the enjoyment of this sacred privilege. John Chinaman will soon be claiming this high prerogative of a freeman, and Mr. Lo, that elegant gentleman without a hat, will walk up to the polls with a ballot in one hand and a fresh scalp in the other. These are the tendencies of the age, and it is hard to conjecture to what lower depths we are still bound.

Bear in mind, if you please, that at the time of adopting the Federal Constitution, and up to within a few years, the whole power of regulating franchise was left with the States. Each Commonwealth enacted such laws and established such restrictions and limitations on this subject as seemed proper to its Legislature. The General Government wisely considered that what was good enough for a single State was good enough for the whole Republic. Those who were allowed to vote for members of the popular branch of a State Legislature were qualified to vote for President. In this way each State was allowed to regulate its domestic affairs in its own way, restricting or enlarging the privilege of voting as seemed best suited to its peculiar circumstances. But we have come to other times in the history of this nation, and all these little matters are regulated now in this Capitol or at the White House.

I have already intimated that the great changes effected in our governmental system were produced by the existence of civil war. Allow me just here to draw a distinction between the leading minds that controlled this Government eighty or one hundred years ago, and those that hold the reins of power at the present time. I do this, not to impugn the motives or the patriotism of any one, but to express my estimation of those who really governed the country then and now.

In the days of Washington, Jefferson, Adams, Hamilton, and scores of others of the same type, our leading men, both patriots and statesmen, were of the highest order. They were men of broad and comprehensive views; not men of a single idea, or absorbed in the study or advocacy of some utopian scheme. In addition to their thorough knowledge of the great principles of law as adapted to the government of communities they were emphatically men of common sense, which is, after all, the best philosophy in the world. They were men who fully comprehended the peculiar situation of the times, and were equal to the task of providing for every demand of that critical period. These were men who dealt more with hard facts than alluring fancies, and although they may have had their ideals of what a popular government should be, they worked hard to make it what it could be under the circumstances.

Coming down three-quarters of a century, we find another race of men. A new class of minds hold control of the Government and mold the destinies of the nation. These men are not lacking in intellect or moral power, but their political principles have run into radical theories—utopian, fanatical, impracticable, and destructive. I do not challenge their patriotism or philanthropy, but their common sense, their statesmanship. What should be statesmanship of the highest order dwindles into a sickly sentimentalism, or, becoming more eccentric, runs off into a wild, unbridled fanaticism. I know the world moves as well as they do, and I hail with delight every true advance made in the science of government, as well as in all the arts and industries of life; but I deprecate just as earnestly every species of blind fanaticism that would sacrifice good order, good government, the peace and happiness of whole communities, to the gratification of some idle dream or fancy.

If I may be permitted to speak in this Hall of the distinguished gentleman who was here with us but a few days ago, I would say that the fault I found with Mr. Sumner, pre-eminent as he was, doubtless meaning well, devoted entirely to his country, and with the strongest love for his kind, was the fact that he appeared to be led too much by sentiment and too little by wise statesmanship; too much by the idea of universal equality; and hence, in the advocacy of a bill which is left as a legacy to us in the Senate, he showed in my estimation but little statesmanship and a vast amount of sentiment, philanthropic sentiment—a kind of sentimentalism which is only one degree from fanaticism. Mere sentimentalists are mild-mannered fanatics—fanatics that would accomplish their ends by gentle speech and manners rather than by war and bloodshed; but they spring from the same great characteristic of the human organization; they are men of one idea, and they nurse that until it assumes colossal proportions and overshadows every other thought and consideration.

These sentimentalists, fanatics, utopians, one-idea men, or what you choose to call them, have done more harm to free government, and have made greater opposition to the progress of rational liberty than any other class of men. They destroyed the first French republic, and made Napoleon a necessity. Assuming the name of communists in 1870, they turned Paris into a habitation for furies. It is a great mistake that these communists were all ignorant men, with bloody and brutish instincts. On the contrary, there was much intelligence among them; and their leaders were patriots, or rather patriotic fanatics; men who were good at pulling down, but never built anything up. Rochefort, Victor Hugo, and men of that type stood at the head of this great class of social revolutionists, who will keep governments and communities in a broil wherever they go.

Robespierre was another example of this style of patriots. No man ever doubted his probity, or his honest desire to establish republicanism in France; but in carrying out his one idea of "Liberté, egalité, fraternité," he turned the streets of Paris into sluices for blood, and filled the world with horror at sight of the crimes committed in the sacred name of Liberty. He felt concentrated in his person the wrongs of France for a thousand years, and he saw no way to avenge these wrongs except to butcher the descendants of those who had inflicted them in previous generations. Hence the guillotine, hence the days of blood and terror, hence the death of the republic and the rise of Napoleon.

Thus history repeats itself again and again. We learn from its teachings that men of mere fancy and feeling—mere dreamers and fanatics—never make statesmen. They can tear a government to pieces with the purpose of reconstructing from its scattered fragments the beautiful ideal which they have nursed and almost worshiped in their own minds; but such men have no practical ideas, no power of construction or administration; and the creations of their fancy are as evanescent as the dreams in which they originated. Washington, Adams, Hamilton, Jefferson, and others of that noble company of patriots and statesmen were not dreamers, but practical workers; their statesmanship was of that high order that embraced correct theories of government, with all the details founded upon the teachings of practical common sense. Hence these workers wrought to some purpose, and their thoughts united and acts produced this Government—the most symmetrical, grand, and beautiful edifice in the history of past ages. For nearly a hundred years it was proof against foreign foes or domestic strife. It has lately come out of the most terrible civil war in the history of the world. We are trying to heal the wounds of that bloody war; but unless our legislation is wise and statesmanlike, our bungling surgery will kill the patient, and leave nothing but a multitude of fanatics to rejoice at the destruction of popular freedom in America.

Mr. President, we all understand how this Government originated, how it was framed by the people of the United States, the people of each State freely consenting to the delegation of so much power to the General Government as would enable it to conduct all such matters as properly belonged to it. There can be no dispute on that subject; but our present inquiry is in regard to the proper means of preserving the life of the separate States. What can be done to prevent them from drifting into anarchy? It cannot be that their case is utterly hopeless. Each State must be able in some way to preserve its autonomy, its power of self-government. It must either have this power inherent in itself, must gain it by combination with its neighbors, or receive it in aid from the General Government. As the two first conditions have failed, the last is the only hope remaining. The General Government must go to the aid of the suffering States. We gave them, or rather we did not take from them, at the outset, a self-sustaining power, by allowing each State to regulate the elective franchise within its own borders. This was one of the reserved rights retained by the separate States, but the fifteenth amendment to the national Constitution has swept away this right, and left a number of the States utterly helpless, and at the mercy of scheming demagogues and ignorant barbarians. By giving suffrage to the whole negro race without requiring any prerequisite in the shape of intelligence or the lowest order of education, numbers of the Southern States are completely under the control of ignorant, vicious, bad men. The thieves and scoundrels, native and imported, impose upon the ignorant negroes and make use of them to compass their vile purposes. The thieves are enriched with spoil, the State is impoverished, bankrupt, ruined, and cries out in agony to be saved from herself.

By the fifteenth amendment we have taken from the States the original and indefeasible right of self-preservation and self-defense. This is a right belonging alike to nations, communities, and individuals, and the destruction of this right can only be accomplished by act of oppression or tyranny. By our act we have at once elevated a servile race into the condition of a sovereign people, giving to them the right of suffrage, and thus endowing them with the power to revolutionize the government of any State where they happen to be in the majority. I look upon this act as a crime against God and humanity. It was a crime against the very people it proposed to benefit. By elevating them at once, and without the least preparation, to the condition of voters, they naturally became the dupes and victims of a set of scheming, bold, bad men, who used them only for their own aggrandizement, and then abandoned them to become the dupes and tools of other political harpies. By this course the African race in America, instead of being elevated, will be annihilated—the very act of their emancipation turned to a bitter curse.

When, by the means alluded to, a State has lost its autonomy, its power to govern itself, and has fallen under the rule of a mob, then this Government is appealed to for help. As our act has produced the wild anarchy that reigns in some of these Commonwealths, it would seem to be only right that we should restore order, and guarantee, according to the provisions of the Constitution, a form of republican government. But if we give nothing but the form, it may prove only a delusion and a snare. Napoleon I, the conqueror and despot of modern Europe, had coins struck with the "Emperor Napoleon" on one side and the "Republic of France" on the other. But this did not make the government of that country any less a despotism. We have quite a number of nominal republics in this nation at the present time, but the poor people are ground down under a despotism as cruel as the grave. We have States that, fifteen years ago, were the pride of the world, inhabited by wealthy, happy, and prosperous communities, and now if the whole property of one of these States was put up at auction, nay, if it was sold at a liberal appraisement, it would not bring enough to pay the public and private debt. This may be asserted of several of our reconstructed Commonwealths in the South, and notably of the great and beautiful but ruined State that is the immediate subject of our discussion to-day.

Mr. President, let us be done with this miserable farce that promises republicanism and gives anarchy; let us not give stones when they cry to us for bread; let us not hold the word of promise to the ear and break it to their hope, but seek if possible to bring order out of confusion, and restore peace and prosperity to these wronged, distressed, and distracted communities.

We do not lack for nominal republics in the South. Louisiana has a republican form of government. Mr. Kellogg is not called a king, prince, or consul; but simply a governor, which is a republican title. Louisiana has a Legislature, too, and a full corps of State officers. All the machinery is there; all the officers are there, but still it is a miserable cheat and delusion. It has no order, no sense, no soul. How shall we put a soul under these ribs of death, and make Louisiana what she was fifteen years ago? The task is herculean but we must do all we can.

Louisiana cannot help herself, and even if she could, she is not permitted to do it. The Executive of the United States assumes authority in these cases, but where he gets the power I do not understand, and should be obliged to any Senator who will enlighten me on this subject. Where does the President get power to send troops to New Orleans to protect this governor or that governor? Yet this power has been exercised so long that those southern governors come to the President, as a matter of course, in all cases of domestic difficulty. Under the beautiful reconstruction process, those southern republics have fallen into a chronic habit of having two or three governors at a time. This breeds family feuds, the people take sides, and when there is prospect of a fight the President is appealed to for a regiment of peace-makers. This gunpowder medicine may do for the moment, but it is sure to kill more than it cures.

Whence comes, I ask again, this power of the President to interfere in those cases? It is not given in any part of the Constitution, and even the law of reconstruction is quite silent upon this subject. I cannot call it anything but a usurpation of power, which, if it belongs anywhere at all, is in Congress. This process of Executive interference in State matters, if persevered in, must result in the destruction of the States, and of the whole Government of which they form a part. And if this magnificent structure, this great Government shall fall, where is he that shall rebuild it? What human hand can reconstruct the glorious fabric which is now the pride of civilization and the hope of the oppressed in all nations? Miracles are not wrought every day. It took the world some thousands of years to produce a Washington, and even he could not restore the fair fabric broken to fragments by the wild excesses of his children. If the States are destroyed, the foundation-stone, nay, the foundation itself of the whole political edifice must go down in a pile of ruins never again to be reconstructed. It will remain prostrated and ruined like the temple of Solomon destroyed by Titus. It never will be rebuilt, and like that temple will remain as a sad warning of the terrible results of party strife, party ambition, and party hatred, which have led to this fearful state of things in the South. Animosities, hatred born of party, have led to this terrible condition of things in the Southern States, and if this influence is not soon arrested by a wise and conservative public sentiment, the days of this Government are ended, and the end will not be far off.

You might retain, and doubtless would, a grand consolidated government. We see signs of it every day. Coming events cast their shadows before. Gentlemen in this Chamber of acknowledged experience and great influence are advocating measures here by which all power is to be concentrated in the Federal Government. The financial question which has occupied our attention for months past, while whole sections of the country have suffered the loss of millions for the want of means to transact ordinary business, should be relegated back to the States where it properly belongs. But the General Government has taken fast hold of this subject, and power once gained is not likely to be voluntarily surrendered. Under the plea of regulating commerce between the States, there is a disposition in Congress to assume control of all the railroads of the country; others wish to manage the telegraph; and so we go from step to step toward the achievement of a grand centralized government at Washington, around which the States may revolve as humble satellites, thankful for any little gift of light or power that may emanate from the great central orb. We first take from the States the power to regulate their internal affairs, change their laws of suffrage, and render them as helpless as possible. Then we step in and regulate their banks, their railroads, their telegraphs, their schools, &c. After all this, what is left of the States? Nothing but a shadow. They are gone, and will be worse off than the provinces of the Roman Empire, because it should be remembered that the Romans, pagans though they were, could not compete with our modern rogues and rascals. If a Roman general conquered a new country and made it a Roman province, he did not create new judges to justify his acts and declare him proconsul. Even Catiline would not have dared to act the part of some of our modern governors. Some of our Southern States have fallen into the hands of common thieves, liars, scoundrels, miserable knaves, and cut-throats, so low in the scale of humanity that you cannot describe them. They are the miserable scum that boiled over from the pot of our domestic revolution, and they poison the earth and the air wherever found.

Mr. President, I have given much attention to this bill. The principles involved in it underlie the very foundation-stones of our political system. The gravity of the subject can scarcely be overestimated. One thing is certain, it must be examined from a higher stand-point than that of mere party. It involves the welfare not only of a single State, but of the whole nation. It rises far above party questions and party principles, and in that higher light I have studied the question and intend to vote upon it. If it was simply one State I might say let it go; but the fate of Louisiana must be the fate of other great Commonwealths which have within themselves all these elements of destruction.

And then the question recurs, What shall we do? Is there no balm in Gilead to heal these terrible wounds already inflicted upon the body-politic? Our Government is much like the human system with its wonderful apparatus and agencies for maintaining life and health. If one of our limbs is wounded or broken the whole system is deranged—"the whole head is sick, the whole heart is faint"—and unless good surgery comes to the aid of the wounded limb the gangrene will form and spread till the whole system is poisoned and the patient dies.

The States of the Republic are its limbs, and as these extremities become wounded or diseased the signs of the disorder extend from one point to another until the whole Government and all its people and all their interests are directly affected by the presence and action of this political poison. If we would save the life of the patient we must act, and act at once. This horrid gangrene that commences in Louisiana will not stop there. Even amputation cannot save us. The wound must be cauterized. If we could catch and hang a hundred scalawags and scoundrels the ugly wound would heal and the country would be safe.

Let not the States of the North lay the flattering unction to their souls that in this matter they are safe, whatever may happen to the South. They may be rich, they may be powerful, they may have accumulated vast treasures, they may have ships on every sea, and commerce with every country on the globe; they may have thousands of schools, colleges, libraries, and learned professors; they may have all the requirements of the highest order of civilization; but all these will not give them back liberty. The North, too, will perish; and let the men of the North understand this fact. If a single State of this grand Confederacy is suffered to die, the whole Republic must perish with it. Liberty and Union may long dwell together in peace and safety. The blow that crushes one will destroy the other, and both will sink into a bloody and dishonored grave. Continue to grind the very life and soul out of these southern people, as you have done and are still doing to-day; destroy and lay waste one State after another; and the terrible consequences will come home to you in curses that shall desolate all the land.

What are the dangers attending the adoption of this measure? The exercise of a power of this kind by the General Government means this, that the majority in both branches of Congress, with a President of the same political views, could crush any State and destroy all its character as an independent Commonwealth. But is that power likely to be abused? Granting a majority in both Houses of Congress and a President of the same way of thinking, are they likely to exercise such a power for selfish and ambitious ends? I think, I trust, I believe, not.

Then come up the wisdom and policy of exercising this power at the present time. On one side is the exercise of a prerogative dangerous in itself, and verging at least upon interference with the rights of sovereign States; and on the other side we have States reduced to the condition of political chaos and social pandemonium, inviting all the hell-born spirits of the earth to gather for pelf and plunder. It is a simple choice of concentration of power on one hand, or of pandemonium on the other. This is why I speak of the immense importance and lasting influence of this great question which comes to us to-day for solution.

Mr. Madison, in the forty-second number of the Federalist, commenting upon the very clause of the Constitution to which I have referred, that it shall be the duty of the United States to guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government, says:

> In a confederacy founded on republican principles and composed of republican members, the superintending government ought clearly to possess authority to defend the system against aristocratic or monarchical innovations.

At the time this was written the States of this Confederacy, one and all, were republican in fact as well as form, in spirit as well as letter. The men of that day—the great statesmen of nearly a hundred years ago, who formed the Government under which we now live—were all republicans. They did not anticipate what is happening now every day. They could not imagine that such a government as that of Kellogg, in Louisiana, would exist under any circumstances. They only feared that a republic might drift into a monarchy or oligarchy, but did not dream of the danger of that wild anarchy that grows out of too much liberty—liberty that has run into unbridled license. With his eye upon the danger of despotism from which the Colonies had just escaped Mr. Madison naturally wrote:

> The superintending government ought clearly to possess authority to defend the system against aristocratic or monarchical innovations.

If that be so, ought not the superintending government clearly to possess the power to defend the system against ruffians and demagogues, who have ruthlessly seized the power of a State and deprived it of its character as a free Commonwealth? If there is authority for one thing there must be for the other.

Again, is it not better that Congress should exercise this power than that it should be left to the discretion of one man, and that man the President? Has it come to this, that Congress, the popular and legislative department of the Government, cannot exercise a power of this kind, and it is still legitimate for the President to do it? If we cannot legislate upon the subject because it is unconstitutional, how can the President act upon it? Congress is nearer the people than the President, and is supposed to be more directly in sympathy with their interests; and this is the body, if any, to exercise this most important prerogative. As a matter of prudence, then, in support of the principles of republican government, it is better that the legislative department should exercise this power, doubtful though it may be, than that it should be left in the hands of the Executive. It will be very little consolation to any of us to say the President is doing wrong, he is acting in violation of the Federal Constitution, he is becoming a despot and a tyrant. This might be so, but only made so by our unwillingness to act in the premises. Senators should remember that somebody must act, or this grand political structure, which has become the pride of its people and the hope of the world, will come tumbling about our ears. If Congress does nothing, the President is bound to act, and he will act. I care not whether he is republican or democrat, he cannot stand still and see great commonwealths sink into political chaos, and be the victims of ruthless ruffians and unprincipled demagogues, without stretching out a hand to save them. There is something conservative in power, despotic though it may be. Anarchy never grows out of the exercise of executive power; it is always order. It may be that order which "reigned in Warsaw," or that peace which followed in the track of Roman armies; it may be the tranquillity of political death caused by the exercise of despotic power; but it will be order, and not anarchy.

It is better for the General Government in its legislative capacity to take hold of this subject, to examine it thoroughly and profoundly in the light and spirit of true statesmanship, and then to take wise action in the premises. I honor the course of the Senator from Wisconsin who introduced the measure now under consideration. He showed himself capable of rising far above the level of party into the higher region of patriotic statesmanship. Questions of this grave character can never be solved by narrow-minded party politicians, who think more of their party than they do of their country. They must be examined, discussed, and acted upon by men whose patriotism is stronger than party affiliations; by men who love their country more than they do the honors and emoluments of office; men who would "rather be right than be President."

Louisiana, left to itself, goes down into political chaos, degradation, and ruin. I say let us interfere by some wholesome act of legislation to save the State and prevent the consummation of this great crime against free government. The bill of the Senator from Wisconsin may not cover the case so well and so fully as he might desire under other circumstances; but it asserts the power, and after examining the subject with long and patient thought, after considering all the objections that occurred to me, or have been suggested by others, I have come to the conclusion that there is no solution for the Southern States except in the exercise of this conservative power by the Congress of the United States. After a full consideration of all the facts and circumstances in the case, I see no remedy but in the exercise of that prerogative named in the Constitution and commented upon by Mr. Madison, the power and the duty to guarantee to every State a republican form of government. If it is competent for the Federal Government to exercise its power to guarantee and maintain a republican form of government in every State, then certainly it may interfere to save a State from falling into absolute anarchy, from becoming a lawless community filled with the worst spirits in the country, and gradually drifting back in a condition of hopeless barbarism.

Thus, Mr. President, I have tried to examine this subject carefully, patiently, dispassionately, in its different bearings and ramifications, and while my investigation may not have been exhaustive, it has at least been candid, and I can only regret my inability to do greater justice to so grave a subject. As I said at the outset, it is a subject that for the time overshadows all others, and its importance grows with every additional hour bestowed upon its consideration. If we exercise a doubtful power, we feel authorized to do it by the great and pressing exigency presented to us. Like the wise surgeon who ventures upon a very critical operation to save the life of a patient: the man may die under the operation, he is bound to die without it; under these circumstances he applies the scalpel and saves a life. We must do the same thing, and hope for a favorable result.

Allow me to suggest in this connection one other consideration that should have interest, if not influence, in this matter. Louisiana was acquired from France by the treaty of 1803, and that treaty contained the following provision in the third article:

> The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States, and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States.

That is a treaty stipulation. The faith of this nation was solemnly pledged to the republic of France that the inhabitants of that territory should for all time to come, at least during the existence of this Government, enjoy the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States. Are we redeeming this treaty stipulation at the present time?

Have the citizens of Louisiana the same rights which they possessed at the time of solemnizing this treaty? By no means. They then had the power to regulate their own domestic affairs in such way as best suited their interests. Do they have that power still? Far from it. The original white inhabitants, in whose favor this treaty stipulation was made, have been completely overpowered by a servile race, and the former proprietors are now virtually the slaves.

I cannot forget the historic fact that the Louisiana thus acquired by treaty embraced a vast territory, stretching from the Rio Grande in the south to the forty-ninth parallel in the north, and from the Mississippi on the east far away through the Territories of Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Washington, and the State of Oregon. It constitutes now the grandest industrial empire in America, and in my humble opinion will soon become the dominating power in the civilized world. Its climate ranges from the semi-arctic winters of the extreme north to the eternal spring and summer on the shores of the tropical Gulf. Its rivers are inland seas; its fruitful plains can fill the granaries of the world; its mountains are bulwarks of defense and treasure-houses filled with gold and silver. In fact, the sixteen great States and Territories that have been carved from the Louisiana for which we paid a bagatelle of fifteen millions of dollars have within their borders wealth enough to purchase whole kingdoms and principalities in Europe.

The State I have the honor in part to represent on this floor is a portion of that vast territory. I am a native of that State. I belong to the same race of people who were guaranteed certain rights by the treaty of 1803. The same blood courses through our veins. Therefore, a common origin as well as the same blood moves me to a warmer sympathy in this question than can be felt by other Senators. I feel for the people of Louisiana as one who mourns over the grave of his dead brother. I have witnessed their adversity when I had not the heart in public to make a speech in their behalf. I met there last spring the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, and heard him make a speech to these oppressed and subjugated people. My heart was full. I saw that gallant race—a race as true to the great principles of free government as any on the earth, as honorable and elevated as ever existed—I saw them in a state of abject degradation, forced upon them by that sum of all tyrannies, the great law of reconstruction and the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution.

Hence, viewing this subject in all its aspects and bearings, seeing the present condition and future prospects of the South under the laws that have been enacted by Congress, and knowing of no other remedy for the great and manifold evils now prevailing throughout the Southern States, I will without hesitation give my voice and vote in favor of the bill now under consideration.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, in rising to discuss so grave and important a question as the one now before the Senate, I must confess myself oppressed by the scene the Senate Chamber now presents. We have just heard a most sincere, a most feeling and able speech by a member of this body, (Mr. Bogy, of Missouri,) upon a subject which he has truly declared to be second in importance to none which could be brought before the Senate. He has trulysaid it not only involves the present and the prospective welfare and happiness of a large body of our own fellow-citizens, but the questions involved in the consideration of their case enter into and affect the existence of our federal form of government; and yet we have seen upon the Administration side of the Chamber scarce as many Senators as there are fingers upon a single hand, and even upon this side of the Chamber but few interested auditors. Nevertheless it is not the part of a true man to hesitate for want of success. Duty and duty alone should he consider, and leave the consequences to that Higher Power who in His own good time will cause the right to prevail.

Mr. President, in the amendment which I have offered to the bill introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] I have recited a series of facts relating to that community which we term the State of Louisiana. To recapitulate these facts—not to take the time of the Senate by having the amendment read again, as it is fresh in our memory—I will merely state them, as follows: First, that an election was held in the State of Louisiana on the 4th of November, 1872, in accordance with the constitution and laws of that State, whereby certain named persons, comprising what was known as the fusion or McEnery ticket, were elected to the offices which constitute the government of the State of Louisiana according to the actual count and the official returns of all the votes cast at that election; second, that the persons so elected did organize in their respective official capacities and did assume the functions of office so devolved upon them according to the constitution and laws of Louisiana and the election held thereunder; third, that the defeated candidates at this election did, by the unauthorized and illegal interference of the Federal authorities, civil and military, obtain and hold armed possession of the State-house of the State of Louisiana and dispossess and exclude the rightful officers therefrom; fourth, that this usurpation by force of Federal power continues in defiance of the will of the people of Louisiana, as expressed at their election, and in violation of the constitution and laws of the State of Louisiana and of the United States. And the deduction from these recitals is that it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to repair, so far as is possible, the wrong and injustice done aforesaid to the people of Louisiana and protect that people against this usurpation and to maintain them in the enjoyment of their chosen government.

These are the recitals of facts which I will simply say are thoroughly sustained by the reports of the committee to whom this question was submitted, and who by a voluminous report accompanied by more than a thousand pages of testimony have stated to the Senate the result of the investigation, elaborate and thorough, of the proceedings in that election. I do not propose to reiterate, prove anew, these allegations. I simply content myself by saying they are reported to the Senate by indubitable authority. But one member of the committee has been found in his report to deny the existence of these facts, and even he—I refer to the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON]—admits that the action of the United States court under which the government of Kellogg was placed in possession of the offices of Louisiana was an act of flagrant usurpation. So far even he goes. But the rest of the committee, the four Senators who signed the majority report, the Senator who drew that report, whose able and thorough demonstrations of the facts on which that report was based, is so fresh in our memories, the able statesman who unfortunately is no longer a Senator, Mr. Trumbull, of Illinois, and the then Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Hill,] all concurred in stating as true the facts which I have alleged in the preamble to this amendment.

I do not desire to weary the Senate by recapitulating their proof, but simply aver that they are all sustained by the debates, by the report, by the testimony taken. The Senate is spared any further necessity of examining into these facts. We have had as careful an inquiry into them, as full a report upon them, as any one could desire for the elicitation of truth. The speech we had from the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREERY] was memorable for its ability, for that mingling of logic, wit, and truth which marked his utterances. The speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] and that of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. HAMILTON,] within a few days, all have gone to substantiate these facts as recited in the amendment, and to render it a work of supererogation for me to introduce new authority further to sustain these recitals of fact.

Mr. President, the issue before the Senate of the United States is no mere question of party triumph. We are not sitting here as a court to hear and try the contested election of Kellogg or of McEnery. In my opinion, we have and can have no such jurisdiction, and our decision, even if backed by the military force of the United States, would be void in law and without authority in morals. The issue before the people of the United States in this case of Louisiana is nothing less than the preservation of our form of government, whether it now is or whether it is to be a Federal Union of equal States or a consolidated power of unlimited rule by a central government over outlying provinces.

This question is all-important to Louisiana to-day. It may be equally important to New York to-morrow, or to Massachusetts or to Indiana. Let no man suppose that the violation of a great constitutional principle of government can be committed, can become a precedent, without its evils reaching those who set it on foot. This is no claim simply for the right to hold and enjoy the powers and emoluments of an office. It is the cry of a sister State for relief from a foul usurpation set on foot and maintained by unlawful exercise of power by Federal authorities, civil and military. Let the people of Louisiana speak for themselves, they who are before the Senate for relief, whose petitions are signed by thousands, whose language is entirely respectful, nay, in my opinion, almost too humble for American citizens to use in addressing their public representatives. The people of Louisiana in whose behalf the measure which I have proposed is offered are not office-holders. They are not interested in the emoluments of office under the government of Louisiana. They truly describe themselves as follows:

> They take the liberty to say that they have had no connection with these suits as parties or attorneys—> neither do they claim any of the offices in dispute. They have not heretofore been concerned in the controversies among the political classes which have endangered the peace of, and brought scandal upon, the State. They affirm that, during the last four years, there has not been good government in Louisiana. There have been extravagance, prodigality, dishonesty, and waste in the public expenditures. The public debt has been enormously increased, with but little corresponding benefit. The credit of the State has been given to speculating corporations, for personal aims. The taxes on property have assumed such proportions that they might appropriately be called rents paid by the proprietors to the State for its occupation and use. The taxes upon business oppress the commercial and laboring classes. The laws to control elections, corporations, and public institutions stimulate these excesses of office-holders, and the consequence is universal depression and discontent. The State needs an honest, faithful, and responsible government, conducted to attain public objects, and not to enrich its members or to perpetuate their power. There was an earnest effort to obtain such a government at the last election, but a political conspiracy has unfortunately defeated it.

That is to say, the suits in the courts of Louisiana, or the Federal courts, for possession of the various offices in the State of Louisiana—

That is why they are here. Nay, further, a report—and I prefer to let these people speak by their own voice—the report of a committee of two hundred citizens of the resident population of New Orleans made in March, 1873, states—

> That the people of the United States are divided among States, and the humiliation and degradation of a State of the Union to the level of a province, deprived of the rights of self-government, can only be the harbinger of similar woes to themselves.
>
> We have asked nothing of the American people, of their President, Congress, or judges, in any intemperate, immodest, or minatory form of address. We have not asked them to execute any vengeance upon any person or party in our behalf. We have submitted to them whether it is not proper for them to uphold their own Constitution, to require fidelity and honor from their own officers in performance of duties they have imposed upon them, and whether it does not behoove them to maintain the covenants of union among the States, and to maintain the stability of State governments and the privileges of local self-government, so that tranquillity, justice, and liberty be maintained.

These, Mr. President, are the demands of our fellow-citizens of Louisiana, not a low squabble for official emolument or power, but a demand for the exercise of those principles upon which our Government was founded and upon the existence and perpetuation of which we alone can expect its honest and happy continuance.

I do not propose that, so far as I can prevent it, either the people of the United States or the Senate should be misled by the specious statements of the Senator from Indiana who has inveighed against the measure proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin on the ground that it would invade the rights of a State. Sir, the Senator from Wisconsin well said that when we heard the Senator from Indiana pleading for the rights of the State of Louisiana it was difficult to listen to him with a grave countenance. What, sir, after this State has been trodden to the earth by the foot of Federal power; after the Senator is willing, nay, anxious, that foot should be kept there; after this State has been throttled on the highway by Federal power aiding and backing up the foot-pads who are called the present government of Louisiana, and it is proposed that relief should be given, the Senator from Indiana assures us that it would be invasion of the rights of a State! Sir, he is no fit guardian of the rights of a State. I lately saw a picture of a wolf who had killed the shepherd, had possessed himself of his garments, his hat, cloak, and crook, and was employed in watching the unwary lambs who soon were to become his prey; and when I have heard the Senator from Indiana, turning to those of us in this Chamber who do profess to regard the rights of the States and who follow our profession by practice, warn us against interference in this case lest the rights of a State might be endangered, then, sir, again does that picture rise before my mind's eye, and I recognize what manner of shepherd the Senator from Indiana is where State-rights are concerned.

Mr. President, the issue for the people of the United States to consider is, shall this conspiracy, as the people of Louisiana have justly termed it, this conspiracy to overthrow a State, be successfully accomplished? Can an Attorney-General of the United States concoct and carry into effect a scheme with his party confederates to invade a State, ride rough-shod over her constitution and laws, prearrange with a corrupt and reckless judge of a district court of the United States for a violation of law, an unwarranted usurpation, an assumption of jurisdiction which was known to the Attorney-General and known to the judge and known to all men to be unwarranted in law and to be a usurpation, and to use this dishonestly assumed power as a pretext for the use of the armed forces of the United States Government to thrust down and keep down the lawful government of a State?

Sir, this is a case beyond mere technical pleadings and mere forms. Law is silent before arms. Law disappears and the Constitution of the State and of the United States disappear before the breath of the Attorney-General and his associates in this business. The pretense of law by Kellogg is a mockery; it is a bold, shameless, unmitigated fraud from beginning to end. The whole history of the means whereby even the forms of government were followed in Louisiana—the installation of Pinchback, the instant abolition of the courts of the State, the supply of the bench with new men and interested candidates to whom sole jurisdiction of these very questions was by special statutes given—all these things are such a tangled web of fraud that pretense of law or fair dealing nowhere can be found among them.

It is not necessary for me to repeat, for the Senate have heard it stated much more ably by the Senator from Wisconsin, the broad facts of this shocking history of what he terms "this comedy of errors and fraud," or, as I would say, "this tragedy of errors and fraud," in the State of Louisiana. There is not in that State government, as at present constituted, one place upon which an honest man's foot can rest with safety and security.

An attempt has been made to connect the movement of these citizens in search of their indubitable rights with the character and conduct of the individual who was the governor of that State at the time this election took place. The champions of the Kellogg government declare now that Warmoth was a man of stained character, that he was corrupt, that his intentions and his conduct in regard to the election were corrupt, and because he was not honest all those who in any degree sided with him in this fusion movement are to be affected and stained by his want of personal character. On this subject let the people of Louisiana say something for themselves:

> The parties engaged in these proceedings—

That is, the parties engaged in the overthrow of the State government of Louisiana—

> The parties engaged in these proceedings, aware that if the facts were properly understood they would admit of no defense, now seek to belittle and conceal the question at issue, and to treat a conspiracy to overthrow the government of the State as a mere struggle for political ascendency between Governor Warmoth and Mr. Kellogg. They allege that the former was endeavoring by some trickery or legerdemain to cheat the latter out of his election, and that the object of their proceedings was simply to frustrate this attempt. They have sedulously sought to produce the impression upon the public mind that this committee was composed of mere allies and agents of Governor Warmoth. We repel this insinuation as utterly false and unwarranted. We are not the representatives of any personal or party interest whatever. Governor Warmoth was not a candidate for any office whatsoever at the recent election, nor have we, directly or indirectly, any connection or affiliation with him. So far as his past career is concerned there are few if any members of this committee who have not been among his most pronounced opponents; while in those measures of his administration for which he has been most loudly denounced he had for his advisers, associates, and coadjutors the very men who now assail him, including especially Pinchback, Antoine, Herron, and numerous others whose names figure most conspicuously in these proceedings.

There you have in clear, distinct, emphatic terms the disavowal of any connection, directly or indirectly, with Warmoth with which the honest case of these petitioners is sought to be burdened down and to be discredited before the Congress of the United States and before the American people. Mr. President, it lies but illy in the mouths of those who stand assailing this man Warmoth here to-day, who so lately were the warmest admirers of his virtues—God save the mark!—and his personal character. I have no doubt, sir, in 1868, or in 1870, or in 1872, that this man was but a political adventurer; that he floated down to the State of Louisiana poor, and that he there soon made himself by mysterious ways rich; and I do not doubt that as wealth came to him a certain amount of that conservatism that generally accompanies wealth came with it; that having gotten wealth, he proposed to keep it if he could, and like all the men who have sense and money, he sought the association and protection of character and honesty in order to enjoy his acquisitions.

But, Mr. President, among those who have been so fluent in assailing him and his methods of election, none I believe have been more emphatic at a late date than the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. WEST;] who has assailed this election of 1872 and has engineered the cause of Kellogg and his associates on the floor of the Senate more especially than any other person. I remember well in 1871, shortly after that Senator came to this body, an associate of ours, Mr. Blair, of Missouri, commented unfavorably upon the character of Warmoth. The Senator from Louisiana on the night following, in a carefully written speech, proceeded to give his testimony as to the character of Warmoth; and as Warmoth is now assailed to-day by him, I propose the Senate should know what that Senator thought of him in 1871. He said:

Louisiana to-day, by her redemption, under republican rule, from anarchy, bloodshed, and riot, presents an unimpeachable refutation of the charge so commonly made by the democratic party that reconstruction is a failure; and the governor, to whose wise sagacity, firmness, and pluck much of this success is due, is no mean foe in the ranks of the opposition to that party who are looking to the South for a restoration to power which the North has so pointedly denied them.

He then proceeds to notice the charge of the Senator from Missouri, that Warmoth signed no bills except for a consideration, and also his assault upon the election law:

Under it—

This election law, the same under which the election was held in 1872—

Under it our last election was conducted in an orderly and a peaceful manner, and the fact that such election was held without the necessity of the use of any military force is a triumphant vindication of its wisdom and justice. Not one single bayonet, either State or Federal, glinted upon the field of political strife on the day we last met the combined host of the enemy, retrieved our State from a democratic majority of forty-seven thousand in 1868, and achieved a victory of twenty-five thousand majority for the cause of republicanism.

This was the law whose possibilities for fraud have been made the ground-work for the charges of the Senators who desire to set aside the election of McEnery, although the official returns under it proclaim a majority of nearly 10,000 votes in his favor. Now let us come back to the Senator's comments on Warmoth:

Governor Warmoth has vetoed bills granting subsidies and giving away the State's money without number. He has stood, and he stands to-day, the bulwark against legislative schemes, and the acknowledged defender, by the democratic party of Louisiana as well as by his own republican friends of the State treasury against illegitimate and plundering schemes. If the Senate will bear with me I will read a short extract from his message.

He proceeds to read an extract from Warmoth's message. A little further on:

By his statesmanship he has evolved order out of chaos; by his determination he has subdued the spirit of misrule; by his conciliation and magnanimity he has disarmed political enmity of much of its rancor; and by his fidelity to the high duties of his office he has set a noble example to the chief magistrates of other States which it would be well for the peace and welfare of our country should be followed. He is himself the impersonation of the success of the reconstruction measures of Congress and republican principles when faithfully and ably administered.

Such, Mr. President, is the picture of Governor Warmoth of Louisiana, drawn by his then political friend and associate when the action of Governor Warmoth under these very election laws was before him for his approval. Warmoth was the governor elected in 1868 for the term of four years and until his successor should be sworn in office. He was elected by the republican party, and he became, as many others did in 1872, what was known as a liberal republican, and therefore he was brought into fusion with the property-owners and tax-payers of that State in the attempt to save their property from plunder and misgovernment. I let his former associates and friends speak for him, and I have said precisely what the people of Louisiana themselves have said when they seek to disconnect themselves from the responsibility for his former acts. It is unfair, it is unjust, it is intended to deceive, when the shortcomings of Warmoth's character are sought to affect the late election in Louisiana and deprive the people of that State of their constitutional rights.

I have said there was a conspiracy. I turn for proof of that to the documents transmitted with the message of the President of the United States on the 13th of January, 1873, and to be found in a document of the House of Representatives. The beginning of this correspondence was by Mr. Kellogg, the defeated candidate for governor.

Mr. HOWE. From what document does the Senator read?

Mr. BAYARD. House Executive Document No. 91, third session Forty-second Congress. Mr. Kellogg writes to the Attorney-General on the 27th of November, 1872:

DEAR SIR: In view of the fact that complications may arise at no remote period when you may be called upon to advise the President regarding matters here, I have thought it best to make a brief statement of the condition of affairs.

He proceeds to give his statement of his side of the election. He then incloses him a copy of his bill in the United States circuit court, marked E, and he is "of opinion" that the court will maintain its jurisdiction. Therefore the Attorney-General of the United States had knowledge at that time of the nature of the application, and a copy of the bill setting forth the grounds was sent him; and here I mean to say it was not the case of the Attorney-General or the President acting without knowledge of the circumstances under which the jurisdiction of the United States court had been invoked and was asserting jurisdiction, but it was the full information in advance as much as Durell had it himself. The law officer of the President's Cabinet had it before him for his deliberate examination; and there is not a lawyer in this body who has spoken upon this subject, not one; there is not a lawyer anywhere that I have heard comment upon this subject but who, when he read this bill of Kellogg, would have known that the court had no jurisdiction whatever. But Kellogg was correctly of opinion that the court would maintain its jurisdiction. Good reason had he for it. And he goes on further to say that—

I should not be surprised to see the supreme court of the State, which is known to sympathize with us, and which has incidentally passed upon the legality of our returning board and the illegality of the action of Warmoth in issuing commissions before the result of the election is declared according to law, ejected from their seats by force, notwithstanding that the constitution provides they can only be removed by impeachment.

He therefore anticipated with confidence the opinion of Durell, and he had secret intimation that the supreme court of the State was known also "to sympathize with us" in regard to this matter.

In the mean time—

He says—

Governor Warmoth has called an extra session of the Legislature, and it is believed by many for the purpose of having the result of the recent election declared in favor of the democratic party, the supreme judges impeached, (unless previously forcibly removed,) and measures taken to stamp out the last vestige of republicanism in the State. * * * * * * * *

I have thought it best to make a statement of the facts, so that you may be advised in any contingency likely to arise.

I ought to mention that the supreme court will next Monday pass upon the case of Bovee, ejected over a year ago from the office of secretary of state by Governor Warmoth, without any legal right or showing. They will reinstate him in the office to which he was elected by the people, and from which he was illegally displaced by Governor Warmoth.

Here is a third tribunal whose decision in advance was confidently proclaimed by Mr. Kellogg, and he says to the Attorney-General:

You will at once appreciate the full effect of this point.

Because the replacing of Bovee in his office would have given a majority of the canvassing board to the republicans. He then further remarks:

But it must not be forgotten that this is a systematic and organized attempt to destroy the republican party in this State. * * * * * * * *

I therefore respectfully suggest that General Emory, who I think appreciates the necessity and sympathizes with the republican party here, be instructed to comply with any requisition that the United States courts may make upon him in support of its mandates and to preserve the peace.

That he understood the officer in charge of the United States troops sympathized with one of the political parties in Louisiana, and should be instructed to comply—carte blanche—with any requisition that the United States courts may make upon him. He then recommends consultation with Mr. William E. Chandler, of Washington, or members of the House of Representatives, and adds:

In conclusion, let me say that, should the United States courts hold with us, and if I can count upon the co-operation and sympathy of the Federal Government as far as it can be consistently given in aid of its firm and devoted friends in this State, who have done all they could to carry the State and have really carried it by a large majority against organized fraud, the State may be saved to the republican party for the future.

This is the beginning of this correspondence, in which for avowed party purposes, and party purposes alone, Mr. Kellogg shows the grounds upon which this whole proceeding is expected to succeed. The opinions of the courts he knew in advance; the personal sympathies of the officer in command of the troops he had also acquainted himself with; and knowing this, he asks that military force may be directed to uphold these prearranged, preannounced opinions of the judicial branch. Now what was the answer to that? The Senator from Maryland on Wednesday last read this telegram from the Department of Justice, dated the 3d of December, 1872:

S. B. PACKARD, Esq.,
United States Marshal, New Orleans, Louisiana:

You are to enforce the decrees and mandates of the United States courts, no matter by whom resisted, and General Emory will furnish you with all necessary troops for that purpose.

GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

My friend from Maryland thinks that dispatch was responsive to Kellogg's letter. Perhaps it was, but it seems then the dispatch should have been to Kellogg. If I can read the history of these dispatches aright there is a link wanting; there had been some other communication from Packard on this subject; because this is in response to him. Therefore Kellogg and Packard were acting together in New Orleans, and it leaves upon my mind the indelible impression that there has been a suppression of something that passed, either written or verbal, on the subject of this scheme prearranged to overthrow the constitution and laws of Louisiana and install in office candidates who were not the choice of the people of that State.

The whole scheme, Mr. President, as exhibited by these dispatches is a purely political scheme. There is no word of law or of justice. The invocation to President Grant, the invocation to George H. Williams, his Attorney-General, are all in the name and behalf of the republican party of the State of Louisiana. When they thank him for this lawless act after Judge Durell by prearrangement had issued his nocturnal order, and in the shade of night secretly, almost feloniously, almost burglariously, the State capitol of Louisiana is taken possession of by orders of Judge Durell by United States troops, they who write to thank him for this thank him not in the name of justice, not in the name of law, not in the name of the people of Louisiana, but "in the name of the republican party" of that State.

When Casey, the collector of the port, on the 6th of December, describes to the President (his brother-in-law) the seizure of the State-house by the military and Marshal Packard, and recites to him the decree, as he terms it, of Durell, in the circuit court of the United States, he declares that the decree was "sweeping, and if enforced will save the republican majority and give Louisiana a republican Legislature and a republican State government." From first to last, throughout all these numerous dispatches, which fill some twenty pages of this report, there is the history written throughout that it was a party victory that was sought for; it was party success that was obtained; it was in the name of party, for the sake alone of party, that the people of Louisiana were to be deprived of their rights as a State, and their constitution was to be stripped of everything like force in accomplishing the ends of that State government.

Why, sir, this was entirely a conspiracy of Federal officials. It is a mere handful of the people of Louisiana who are white that are acting with this republican party. The people who are acting with it are dealing to-day with the votes, the franchises, of the colored men of that State just as fifteen years ago they would have dealt with their bodies, and sold them on the block like cattle. To show how entirely this Kellogg administration is made up of Federal officials, that the people of the United States may comprehend what an official conspiracy this was, let me read from page 85 of the House document:

By the decree, or, rather, the interlocutory order of a United States district judge, it is attempted, in spite of the overwhelming expression of the will of the people of the State, to establish over the State of Louisiana a government consisting of a United States Senator for governor, the collector of a port as the lieutenant-governor, the United States treasurer for State auditor, a surveyor of the port for president of the senate, the postmaster of New Orleans for speaker of the house, a deputy collector for chairman of the finance committee of the Legislature, and a Legislature composed principally of defeated candidates, most of whom are in the employ and pay of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, look at these facts, and then think of the outcry that was made the other day in the State of Massachusetts, when a gubernatorial nomination was pending, when a member of the other House was a candidate for the nomination, and it was supposed the Federal Administration was using its influence through the office-holders of Massachusetts to secure his nomination. What was there? Instantly a rallying-cry among the people of that State denouncing the attempt at Federal interference; not Federal interference and influence to possess and control all State offices, but to interfere in the choice of their nominees by the people of that State. They did rally; they broke down overwhelmingly the attempt upon the part of the Federal officials to control their nominations. And just so do I believe that if this question can be brought home to their minds they will be honest enough and consistent enough to denounce, yes, and by their opinion and public sentiment to influence protection to a State against this monstrous conspiracy to govern it by Federal officials who actually take possession of the offices themselves.

Among the other mockeries and farces of this proceeding, we have found throughout these dispatches of those who were conducting the affairs of Louisiana the names of these leading Federal officials. We have Casey, the collector; Packard, the marshal; Kellogg, the United States Senator; and these are the people who alone conduct the correspondence, give all the information, and represent affairs in Louisiana to the Federal Administration at Washington. And we are told by the Senator from Indiana that there has been a "recognition" of Kellogg as the governor. He went so far as to say that we could not deny the existence of Kellogg as governor, but must take his signature to the certificate of election of his friend, Pinchback, because he called himself the governor, and the President had recognized him as such, and that the Senate of the United States, under the provisions of the Constitution constituting them the sole judges of elections, qualifications, and returns of members of their own body, were estopped to deny, and could look no further into the election of Kellogg who called himself governor, because the President of the United States had so "recognized" him. Mr. President, Louis XIV, in his full-blown pride, declared, "The State—it is I." The Senator from Indiana, pointing to the President of the United States, says, "The State—it is he." Those who like Cæsarism, those who look hopefully forward to the period when it shall take the country in charge, and relieve us of the troubles of legislation, will find great comfort from this most advanced position of the Senator from Indiana.

But he speaks not only of the President's recognition of Kellogg, but he speaks of these other authorities in Louisiana each recognizing Kellogg. Pinchback recognized Kellogg, and Kellogg recognized Pinchback, and Casey recognized them both, and they recognized the Legislature, and the Legislature recognized them; and there is a mutual system of recognition and admiration going around the group. At page 48 of these dispatches you will find all their sweet voices in the same chorus, all in the same key of general and mutual recognition. Pinchback telegraphs on the 11th of December to the Attorney-General, suggesting that troops be furnished for his ends. He says:

I beg you to believe that I will act in all things with discretion.

P. B. S. PINCHBACK,
Lieutenant-Governor, Acting Governor.

On the same day Mr. Casey, the collector, telegraphed to the President that—

If requisition of Legislature is complied with all difficulty will be dissipated, the party saved, and everything will go on smoothly. * * * *
Governor Pinchback is acting with great discretion, as is the Legislature, and they will so continue.

And in the same key sings Mr. Kellogg:

If President in some way indicate recognition, Governor Pinchback and Legislature would settle everything. Our friends here acting discreetly.

Yes, Mr. President, very "discreetly." And among this band of lawless, characterless men, gambling with the happiness and welfare of the people of Louisiana, they term this "recognition." It is such recognition as a band of burglars would probably give each other when they hobnob at night in some gentleman's pantry over the plate which they have abstracted from his sideboard.

Then we are told further that there is no necessity for moving in this matter because there has been acquiescence. McEnery has acquiesced; the people of the State of Louisiana have acquiesced; they want no change, and they would rather be left in the happy quietude in which they now exist. Let us see what is the truth. From the time he was elected governor McEnery has sought in every way, lawfully, peaceably, and dignifiedly, to assume the functions of his office; and the people of the State have never ceased their protest, despite their forcible dispossession, despite the presence of the United States armed forces, that alone prohibited them from ousting this Kellogg government. In the month of December last this large mass of petitions were sent up here [exhibiting several large bundles of papers] signed by thousands of the people of Louisiana, and I will ask the Clerk to read a portion of what they then said to see how much acquiescence there was.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Your memorialists, citizens and voters of the State of Louisiana, respectfully represent: That at an election held in due form and according to law on the 4th day of November, 1872, John McEnery, D. B. Penn, and others [naming the State officers and members of the Legislature] were elected representatives of the General Assembly.

The proofs of these elections are the returns thereof made by the commissioners of election and the supervisors of registration of the several parishes, who held and conducted the election, received and counted the votes, and made the returns in form and manner provided by law. These returns being the sole legal evidence of the results of elections were forwarded to the governor, by him opened in the presence of, and canvassed and compiled by, the returning officers of the State, as provided by law.

The result of such compilation and canvass was duly promulgated by said returning officers, a copy of which promulgation is herewith submitted.

On the 16th day of November, 1872, W. P. Kellogg, the contesting candidate for governor, before the returning officers had made canvass of the returns, instituted a suit in the circuit court of the United States, before Judge E. H. Durell, against H. C. Warmoth, governor.

The petition of said Kellogg claimed that he had been duly elected governor, that he had been defrauded of his election by the rejection of votes on account of race, color, and previous condition, and asked the United States court to take jurisdiction of and try and determine his right to the office of governor. He claimed his right to bring this suit before the United States circuit court under the provisions of the act of Congress of May 31, 1870, and the acts supplementary thereto.

This act provides that suits contesting a State office upon certain specified grounds may be brought before the United States circuit court, but only after the result of the election has been ascertained and declared. This suit was brought before any official promulgation of the election, and the United States circuit court had no jurisdiction thereof. Nevertheless, Judge Durell assumed jurisdiction and entertained the action.

Said Kellogg upon this original action thus illegally entertained instituted a supplementary proceeding in chancery, in the same court, wherein he asked for an injunction against Henry C. Warmoth, Jack Wharton, Frank H. Hatch, Durant Da Ponte, John McEnery, and the New Orleans Republican Printing Company, restraining them from canvassing and compiling the returns of the election, or from making promulgation thereof, and from doing any of the duties of their offices with regard to the election; and he also asked the court to try and determine who were the legal returning officers of the State, he, Kellogg, maintaining that John Lynch, Jacob Hawkins, James Longstreet, and George E. Bovee were the legal returning officers, while the governor of the State recognized Frank H. Hatch, Jack Wharton, and Durant Da Ponte, as such officers.

The right of the returning officers recognized by the governor had not been questioned in any State court. Judge Durell granted the injunction asked, and did assume to try and determine the right of office between the two sets of returning officers, all without lawful jurisdiction thereof, against the laws and constitution of the State and of the United States. He adjudged that John Lynch, Jacob Hawkins, James Longstreet, and George Bovee were the lawful returning officers of the State.

These persons, without the official returns before them, pretended to canvass and compile said returns and make promulgation of the election. Thus five persons unrecognized by any official authority of the State, thus constituted State officers by an interlocutory decree of a United States court, in a proceeding auxiliary to an original action in neither of which said persons (nor the lawful returning officers) were parties litigant, proceeded to declare the results of an election for a whole State, including the executive, legislative, and judicial officers for the State, and for every parish in the State, without a return before them, to set aside the election shown by the returns, and create an entirely different government throughout. In other words, these five persons elect by their own arbitrary will officers for a whole State, from the governor and Legislature down to the constables.

This monstrous and glaring usurpation being still insufficient to overthrow the legally elected government, the same judge, by a midnight order issued at his own house, without the seal of the court, at the instance of Judge Durell himself, and without notice to opposing parties, directed the United States marshal to seize and occupy the State-house. United States troops were furnished to the marshal to execute the order, and at midnight the United States troops marched into and garrisoned the State-house, and ejected the officials placed there by the State authorities. United States marshals guarded the doors, refusing and permitting ingress and egress to suit as they chose. This garrison continued in military occupancy o the State-house not only to the day of the assembling of the Legislature, but for the space of six weeks afterward. On that day the troops and marshals prevented the legal Legislature from meeting in the State-house, and admitted the legislature elected by Lynch, Hawkins, Longstreet, Herron, and Bovee.

This legislature declared Kellogg elected as governor, and pretended to inaugurate him as such. The President issued orders to the Army to sustain the Durell government.

The legal Legislature assembled at Lyceum Hall and organized, and at its regular session in January counted the votes for governor and lieutenant-governor, and declared John McEnery and D. B. Penn duly elected and did inaugurate them.

Wherefore, the premises being duly considered, your memorialists humbly pray that your honorable bodies, moved by the justice of the cause of your memorialists, will recognize as the true and legal government of Louisiana that government shown to have been elected on the 4th of November, 1872, by the official returns of said election, or such other relief be granted as the nature of the case may require. And your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Mr. BAYARD. That is but one petition. Here they are signed by the names of thousands, in the month of December, 1873. That is one illustration to the Senate and to the country of the nature of acquiescence in this great wrong which has been done to the people of that State. In November, 1873, on two days, November 24th and 25th, a convention was held in the city of New Orleans by the people of the State of Louisiana, protesting against this usurpation and the outrage to which they were subjected. They sent delegates here, and I have in my hand their strong, spirited, manly protest against the continuance of this monstrous usurpation which, so far from acquiescing in, they hate with all the hatred that true men should bear toward oppression:

The pretended State government at present existing in Louisiana is arbitrary and despotic, and therefore not republican in form; it represents no one but a small clique of political adventurers, who mold the colored element to their selfish purposes, and find their greatest profit in engendering and keeping alive an unnatural spirit of hostility between the two races; it stands as an impassable barrier to that reconciliation between the white and colored people which would inevitably follow from a community of interests; it oppresses the citizens of the State by the imposition and exaction of onerous taxes, collected at the point of the bayonet; it is a hideous mockery of the republican and representative government which was promised to the State of Louisiana upon its admission into the Union. Yet, notwithstanding all this, the people of that State would long since have quietly submitted to the outrages daily inflicted upon them by that government if it had been installed over them by even a faint semblance of observance of established and constitutional forms. But your honorable bodies know full well that in the origin and subsequent existence of that government every form and principle of constitutional law has been openly defied and violated; that it owes its life to a midnight order of a Federal judge; that it is propped up by Federal bayonets, and continues only by Federal sufferance; and that its existence is a standing menace to the perpetuity of republican institutions.

Is this the language of acquiescence by these people, a convention assembling in thousands to protest against the continuance of this usurpation? and yet the Senator from Indiana talks about the acquiescence of that people! Nay, sir; Governor McEnery, representing the lawful majority as returned by the votes cast in 1872, on the 25th day of December, 1873, from the executive office of the State of Louisiana addresses General William H. Emory, of the United States Army, commanding the department, as follows:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
New Orleans, December 25, 1873.

GENERAL: As I have in contemplation the issuance of a proclamation advising the assembling of what I claim to be the legal Legislature of this State on the 5th of January, 1874, as provided for by the constitution of the State, and as I desire not to place the government I in part have the honor to represent in any conceivable manner in opposition to the Government or the troops of the United States, I would be pleased if you would communicate answers to the following inquiries:

First. If I should issue such a proclamation and the Legislature assembled, would the troops of your department interfere to disperse such an assemblage?

Second. Would the force under your command be used in supporting the metropolitan police or Kellogg's militia in case either or both of these corps be called out to disperse said Legislature?

Third. In case opposition were offered, such as the dispersal of this Legislative Assembly by armed forces under control of Mr. Kellogg, would the United States troops interfere to assist them?

My anxiety to prevent by every precautionary means any conflict between this government and the executive forces of the United States leads me to urge as speedy a reply as possible at your hands.

I have the honor, general, to remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN MCENERY,
Governor.

Brigadier General W. H. EMORY, U. S. A.,
Commanding Department of the Gulf.

The reply is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF,
New Orleans, December 26, 1873.

To the Hon. JOHN MCENERY:

In reply to your communication, received last night, I have the honor to state that there is no change in my instructions communicated to you in my letter dated March 6, 1873; and as the situation contemplated in your letter is the same, my action will be the same as then.

Those instructions do not contemplate, and there will be no interference with any peaceable assembly of citizens at any time or for any purpose whatever, or any interference with any assembly claiming to be a legislative body.

But I am directed to recognize the present State government represented by Governor Kellogg, to prevent any collision of armed bodies of men and to keep the peace; therefore, if the condition of things happens contemplated in your third proposition—that is, an armed conflict between the forces of the State government recognized by the United States and the assembly convened under your proclamation—the United States forces would, if necessary, interfere to prevent bloodshed, and would support the State government represented by Governor Kellogg; but as the proposition is a grave one, I shall submit the purport of your letter and my answer by telegraph.

Appreciating highly your desire to prevent by precautionary measures any conflict with the executive forces of the United States, I have the honor to remain your obedient servant,

W. H. EMORY,
Brevet Major-General, U. S. A. Commanding.

Mr. SHERMAN. If my friend will allow me, I desire to present one matter to him. The point upon which he is now speaking, the acquiescence of the people and the McEnery legislature in the present government of Louisiana, is one which has controlled my opinion and will control my action in this matter, and I desire to submit to him some information which I have, upon which I have relied in the course I have pursued and intend to pursue in regard to Louisiana. I have here a statement furnished me from the governor of the State, Governor Kellogg, and I wish to see whether it is contested. This statement certifies to me that eighteen members of the house of representatives of the Legislature elected on the McEnery ticket, acting in the origin of this controversy with the McEnery party, admitted to be elected by both sides, have since the original controversy taken their seats in the present Kellogg legislature and acted with the Kellogg legislature and contributed to the passage of laws, and have by their acts expressed their acquiescence not only as citizens but as representatives duly elected by the people of Louisiana in the Kellogg legislature. The names are given. I have also a list of six who are said to have been thus elected legally and who have refused to acquiesce, and only six. I am informed that there are but six of those admitted to be elected to the house of the McEnery legislature that have not participated in the laws passed last winter by the Kellogg legislature. The names are given to me here with the districts they represent. I have also the names of senators elected on the McEnery ticket, certified to be elected and returned by the McEnery party, and who have participated in the legislation of the last session, and the names of two or three now contesting for seats in the Kellogg legislature who were elected on the McEnery ticket.

I frankly say to the Senator from Delaware that I believe there has been gross irregularity, gross fraud, gross wrong in Louisiana on both sides; but I desire to submit to his judgment the legal effect of this acquiescence, not merely by citizens who have the right to do as they please and whose action only affects themselves, but by the chosen representatives of the McEnery party who have participated and shared in the legislation of last winter and have acquiesced in the legality of the Kellogg government. That with me is a controlling fact. If this statement I have made is disputed, I should like to know the basis upon which this information is disputed. If this information is not correct, given to me as it is, I should like to have the proof.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I will frankly say to the Senator from Ohio that, welcoming as I do any fact, I feel very doubtful about accepting as a fact anything that is certified by Mr. Kellogg of Louisiana. It is seldom that a man is willing to gibbet himself before the public as that person did the other day by his telegraphic dispatches to different members of this body. If they were to be read in the Senate—and I do not propose to fatigue the Senate by reading them—it would be found that in his telegram to the honorable Senator from Indiana he was guilty of the suppression of the truth. He telegraphed to that Senator that there had been a repeal of a law that not only made fraud possible but probable at the hands of the governor in controlling the elections of the State. The next day the Senator from Louisiana read another telegram from the same person, still more specious in that it not only suppressed the truth but it suggested an untruth—both forms of falsehood in the same dispatch. And then when the truth no longer could be concealed, he telegraphs a third time to the Senator from Louisiana and admits then, and for the first time, that a second law of repeal, the existence of which he had denied both expressly and by implication, had been passed, but said he would not avail himself of it. Sir, it is amazing how dishonest men can lose their senses, and what a fortunate thing it is for mankind that honesty of intention and discretion are apt to accompany each other, and that when men's moral sense falters their intellect falters with it, and they are led to a disclosure of their own nefarious conduct. If this thing depended alone upon the statement of Mr. Kellogg, I would say, falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus; I would not accept the statement; but I am not prepared to say that these eighteen individuals have not finally bent under a burden the weight of which they no longer could endure; but does their acquiescence, their yielding hopelessly to force and taking the seats which have been given them for the purpose of their own ignominy, change the broad truth or touch the great principle which I have been here endeavoring to assert on behalf of that State? Does that wipe out the guilt of the Administration? Does it wipe out the guilt of Williams? Does it wipe out the guilt of Durell? Does it change any truth that is stated before the American people unanimously by this committee to whom the subject has been committed? No, Mr. President. If there has been an acquiescence by these eighteen men, it is their individual act, and against their acquiescence I produce the voice of thousands to show it is not the temper, it is not the will of the people of Louisiana to say that is right which in their souls they know to be wrong, and that is just which they know is the very quintessence of injustice and wrong. Nor can I undertake, for I do not know the names of those individuals; nor in the course of a discussion such as mine is, embracing a vast body of facts, necessarily passing over them somewhat cursorily, can I do more than take the main features of this case and submit them to my fellow-countrymen, more out of this Chamber than I do to those within.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will indulge me for a moment, I will when the Senator is through simply place upon the record this statement to me, together with the names given to me, and the information that I have; and I invite controversy, because if these are facts they ought to be known.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator misunderstands me. I have the most implicit confidence in his own good faith in offering the paper; nor have I any desire to exclude it from the record. On the contrary, let us have the truth. Whatever it may be, I should be ashamed to support an argument that could not bear the light of day.

Mr. SHERMAN. This statement was forwarded to me, addressed however to the Senator from Louisiana. It is signed not by Governor Kellogg, but by Mr. Clarke who seems to be a private secretary—I suppose the private secretary of the governor.

Mr. WEST. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. And he certifies the names and the residences not only of eighteen members of the house, but of some senators and also of some contesting senators. I ask the reporter to attach this to the end of the speech, so that it will not interrupt the Senator's remarks, and I invite any controversy or contest there may be about the facts.

Mr. BAYARD. I would rather the document be printed to come in at the end of my speech.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BAYARD. I have shown what has been the amount of acquiescence by the people of Louisiana. I could read still further from the most touching and most eloquent reports of their leading men on this subject, even as late as the fall of 1873. I have produced you a mass of petitions; I have shown you the proceedings of their convention. Look now to the action of their agent, of Governor McEnery, as late as the 25th of December, 1873, in that moderate, manly, dignified, and proper tone which it seems to me has characterized his course from first to last. To me he is personally almost an entire stranger. Of his antecedents I have no knowledge whatever; but I believe they are in all ways respectable and worthy. Certainly he had nothing to do with this election beyond being a candidate. He has been enabled to commit no act which has had force in Louisiana, except to assert his own rights and the rights of the people who elected him to be their governor. He has been temperate and steady and strictly lawful. There has been no bluster, no violence, no call by him for Federal intervention. He felt that he was strong in the hearts of the people who elected him, and he looked at home, where the facts were best known and felt. There he had his support, and he asked for it from no outside quarter. Sir, does not every man know, who knows anything of this subject, that were the Federal Army to-morrow withdrawn from the State of Louisiana the opposition to the righteous government of McEnery would slink away as the mists disappear before the sunbeams of the morning? Sir, he has made a calm, temperate demand for justice. He has asked of the power that has interfered between him and his just rights simply for an opportunity to exhibit and exercise his just and lawful authority of office. I have read his last communication to the government of his State, which is the military officer in charge; that is all. Under the thin veil of a pretended republican form of government, the real government of Louisiana to-day is military force. It is a sham to call it anything else. You lift the gown of the judge, and you find the saber of the dragoon; you enter the executive chamber, and the power there is the power of the sword and not of the law. The government of Louisiana to-day is nothing but military power, protecting dishonest men who wear the sham robes of State office.

Now let me read his first communication. I should have allowed it to precede the communication which he last made on the 25th of December to General Emory. Let me read his first and only application to the President of the United States:

NEW ORLEANS, 12*th December*, 1872.

His Excellency U. S. GRANT, President United States:

Claiming to be governor-elect of this State, I beg you, in the name of all justice, to suspend recognition of either of the dual governments now in operation here until there can be laid before you all facts and both sides touching legitimacy of either government. The people, denying the legitimacy of Pinchback government and its legislature, simply ask to be heard, through committee of many of our best citizens on eve of departure for Washington, before you recognize the one or the other of said governments. I do not believe we will be condemned before we are fully heard.

JNO. McENERY.

Alas, sir, would not the American people have echoed the belief did not sad experience teach them how futile to entertain it! What was the answer? On the 13th of December, 1872, not from the President of the United States who had been so respectfully, properly, almost touchingly addressed by this representative of his own and his people's liberties, but from the Attorney-General comes the following response:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, December 13, 1872.

Hon. JOHN MCENERY, New Orleans, Louisiana:

Your visit with a hundred citizens will be unavailing so far as the President is concerned. His decision is made and will not be changed, and the sooner it is acquiesced in the sooner good order and peace will be restored.

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

Mr. President, is there parallel for such an application and such an answer in the history of civilized government? I put it to the gentlemen of the country, I put it to that common sense of manly courtesy that belongs to every American, is there not in this reply a brutality that is simply disgusting and outrageous? Is it not mortifying to see that an American citizen cannot modestly, humbly almost, creep to the footstool of power without being repulsed in a manner that would disgrace some Muscovite general dealing with a captive Pole? Sir, as I read these things my blood boils as an American that such things should be tolerated by my country. If Mr. McEnery had been rude, if he had been imperious, if he had asked for something wrong, then we might have had this curt, unkind response; but when we read what he did say, and then read the answer, am I not justified in saying that there is a brutality almost equal to the lawlessness of the Federal authorities in the entire affair?

So, Mr. President, I end my comment upon the facts attending this election and the overthrow of the expressed will of the people of Louisiana. As I said before, it is unnecessary to read again from the reports to justify the recitals of this amendment. They are all sustained almost on every side. Few have been so reckless even in degree to deny them. Then comes the question as to remedy. It is simple and plain. The wrong which has been done you partly may undo. No one can question that there has here been the invasion of a State by the armed forces of the Federal Government. Withdraw your troops! "Call off your dogs." Set the State free to speak her own mind and live under her own laws. That is all. We are not to be driven from this plain path of duty by the threats of violence that may occur there.

Sir, if collision should ensue; nay, if blood should flow, it is better for a people to lose many of those they value most than to submit to such a wrong as that under which Louisiana groans to-day. If it shall be that the President of the United States, mindful of his oath, mindful of justice, mindful of duty, shall recall his armed force and leave McEnery and his associates free to assume the functions of their proper offices, and if in doing that men shall die in defense of their constitutional rights, their fate is rather to be envied than those who shall survive them to live as slaves and not as freemen.

Mr. President, a man of long and varied experience as a warrior and statesman, who had passed through a career that has become historical and knew as much practically of government, of war, and of the transactions of mankind as almost any man of his day was Arthur, Duke of Wellington. Late in his life, in referring to his Indian campaigns, he asked, "What brought me through so many difficulties in the war and negotiations for peace?" "It was good faith, and nothing else. Better lose ten provinces than sacrifice our reputation for scrupulous good faith."

The best underlying security for the performance of every obligation, political, moral, or pecuniary, is scrupulous good faith. Instill this into the minds and character of a people, and you will have permanence and stability, and the foul word "repudiation" will never be heard; and good faith applies to every transaction, and those in authority must never forget its exercise. It is as guilty and as dishonorable and dishonest for a government to repudiate its guarantees of civil and constitutional liberty to any portion of its citizens as to repudiate any portion of its pecuniary obligations. The one is no more sacred than the other. The effect of the repudiation of either is the same, and must eventually and necessarily lead to the same results.

By a refusal of the General Government to act in good faith with the people of a State, by thrusting upon them a government hateful to their feelings and ruinous to their property, their affections are destroyed and their means of payment of their share of the public burdens is taken away. I ask in candor how can the people of the other States of the Union expect a willing maintenance of the burdens of the General Government, payment of its taxes, and a hearty support of its financial honor from a community whom they have suffered to be trampled down by fraud and force, and over whom they have set a sham government, which exists only to plunder property instead of protecting it? I wish I could engrave this sentence where every man of the rich and populous North could read it: "JUSTICE TO THE SOUTH IS SELF-PROTECTION TO THE NORTH." Ours is a voluntary government; it is framed and based upon the idea that the people can and will govern themselves. If the will of the people be wanting, the form of government will soon fade away. If the Government is to be strong and continue to exist, it will be because the hearts of the American people strongly desire it; and if they lose their love for it or lose their faith in it, it must soon go to pieces.

Sir, I am tempted to these reflections at this time because there has been alarm created throughout the creditor portion of the Union lest late financial measures of Congress should affect the public credit and dishonor the promises of the Government to pay its debts. There has been exhibited a very natural and lively sensibility on this subject. Merchants, bankers, men famous for wealth, for enterprise, for intelligence and character, have hurried hither, either in person or by letter, to impress upon Congress and the Executive the necessity of scrupulous good faith in its financial transactions. I merely mean to say that one is part of the other; that the good faith of the country cannot be reserved for one purpose alone, and that it must exist like the honor of an honorable man, in every transaction in which he may be placed, whether with friend or with foe.

Mr. President, in my opinion the most fatal virus that can enter the viens of a people is a disbelief in the worth and permanence of their form of government. It is a perpetual lever in the hands of the unscrupulous by which to raise doubt and distrust, and produce a sense of insecurity paralyzing all enterprise and checking every scheme of advancement because of the insecurity which haunts every undertaking which depends upon the stable existence of a government for its protection. Property is the creation of labor under the protection of law. Without law no man could retain more of the fruits of his labor than mere manual possession and his physical force would secure him. If the people lose their faith in the permanence of their government, they will be unsettled in all their relations and indifferent to every act tending to revolution, and demoralization will infuse itself in every department of affairs. The public credit will be first to suffer, and the influence of demagogues and jacobins will be instantly and fearfully increased. Men will not trust a government whose permanence is so doubtful, and whose dissolution would leave every public creditor without a responsible source of payment. To be of value, all laws, especially those touching property, should be stable and certain. Unless these two elements are admitted to exist, all obligations, whether of individuals and more especially those of the Government itself, are most insecure and consequently discredited.

I make these suggestions because they exhibit in some degree the importance to citizens of every section of the country of insisting so far as public sentiment may—and what may not public sentiment in this country insist upon and produce?—upon such a course of action by their official representatives as shall tend to establish the confidence of the people in the permanence of their Government, and shall promptly rebuke every manifestation of an attempt at repudiation, not merely of pecuniary obligations but of the obligations of good faith, of justice, of constitutional right and duty between the States, and between the General Government and the several States. Every act that deprives a man of his legal rights and constitutional privileges disables him from the performance of his duties as a citizen, diminishes his ability and certainly his disposition to assume and perform those duties.

Believing the cure for present evils and disorders to rest in a revival of the proper public sentiment, and especially in the dominant section, in the populous and wealthy States of the North, I beg them to consider the effect upon themselves and upon their own prosperity of thus permitting the lingering spirit of hostility engendered by a civil war to control their action or tinge their legislation in respect of that portion of the country with whom they were some years ago at strife.

There are many good men who hate fraud and dishonesty, and yet who tolerate their rule in the Southern States because there linger in their minds the idea and the feeling that the South has deserved some punishment for her political offenses. From my heart I warn my countrymen against such sentiments. President Lincoln once said, and the sequel bore him out, that this country could not exist with half of its territory slave and half free as to labor. How much more forcibly and truly can it be said, this country cannot exist with the States of the South handed over to the rule of rapacity, ignorance, venality, and crime? Sir, as truly as that a gangrened limb will soon poison and destroy the entire human body, so will the moral, political, financial poison of an Africanized State spread throughout every member of the Union of States, and sap and destroy the political health and existence of all. And be it here noted, the Senator from New Jersey who spoke but a few days ago, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN,] and the Senator from Louisiana, who followed him, [Mr. WEST,] both in demonstrating the political condition of the State of Louisiana declared that the parties there were white or black simply. The Senator from New Jersey, illustrating the political condition of a parish where there were seven hundred whites and two thousand blacks, the parish of Iberville, declared that "of course the whites were democrats," and of course the blacks were republicans! The Senator from Louisiana, following the same idea, declared that "as a unit the blacks of the South were republicans." Then what is the issue raised? One of race. They make it; they proclaim it; their Administration sustains it. Now, sir, I want the northern people to look at the effect. It is not simply whether these two races shall permit their mutual interests to control them to let peace, harmony, and law make property and life secure in their midst, but whether the flames of dissension, being fanned by the base adventurers who flock to that part of the country to traffic in the votes of these deluded and ignorant people, shall Africanize the State by first making the issue between the races, and then exerting the powers of the Federal Government to give the preponderance to the black race. It is a crime to bring war into a land, it is a crime to sow discord, and yet that has been the business of these adventurers; and not satisfied with making that issue, the issue of race, the white man against the black man, intellect against ignorance, superiority of race against inferiority of race, but they call in the strong arm of the Federal Government, and, as lawlessly, as shamelessly was done by Durell and Williams in the case of Louisiana, they insist that the preponderance shall be against the white men of those States. That is the issue for the North to contemplate.

I believe that all that is asked by the people of the North is justice and law and peace in the southern country; and to whom must you leave it? You must leave it to those who can effect it—to the intelligence, to the virtue and character of the citizens of these States. It is to them the sympathy, the favor, the countenance of the other States must be given. Why, sir, what would be thought of the proposition that the poor black man of the South should be denied the services of the skillful white physician in case of the illness of himself or his family? What would be thought if when his life was in danger under a false charge in some court of justice the ablest white lawyer should not be allowed to step forward to his aid? And yet these are two of the ordinary tasks of law and medicine—the care of the body and the safety of the person from assault—which after all do not require half the powers, half the skill needed for the establishment of a good government and good laws. The most difficult task assigned to mankind is for man to govern his fellows wisely and with proper restraints; and that is to be denied to these people; they are to recruit their government either from corruption or from ignorance; and this is to be done, God save the mark, in the name of philanthropy!

Sir, it is not my disposition ever to deny the existence of things as they are. I meet the truth, however unpalatable, face to face; and he, I think, in a representative government serves the people best who tells them the truth, and endeavors to point out to them the just issues that must ensue from its consideration.

I said the principle involved goes far beyond the community of Louisiana. It is her case to-day; it may be the case of any other State to-morrow, and we may well consider our conduct in this regard. Let every man who stands take heed lest he fall, and let no man suppose that his feet are so securely planted that he may not fall, or any State suppose it; because when this example is once established, and this principle once admitted, who shall tell what future political majorities may do? Who shall tell how they may be composed? Who shall tell how perfectly reckless and wild may be their action? You have seen that one of your own creatures, this man Warmoth, can, almost single-handed say your committee, give a State over to your political opponents. Take from that your lesson. Such men as he, such men as his associates, are edged tools, and those who play with them play a most dangerous game. The safety of this country is in the good character of its people. It is in that scrupulous good faith which none but honest men can understand, and none but honest men are willing to apply under all and every circumstance.

[The communication referred to by Mr. SHERMAN, during the course of Mr. BAYARD'S speech, is as follows:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, February 5, 1874.

DEAR GENERAL: The inclosed gives a more detailed account of the status of our "fusion" members than the list telegraphed to-day.

Yours, H. CONQUEST CLARKE,
Pr. Secretary.

Hon. J. R. WEST,
United States Senator, Washington.

The following is the inclosure referred to:

The fusionists hitherto acting with McEnery, who have taken seats in our house are the following: W. S. Cockerham, Bienville Parish; E. D. Estelle, Saint Landry; T. Fontelieu, Vermilion; T. J. Humbel, Caldwell; J. P. Harris, Point Coupee; Paul Jones, Cameron; W. K. Johnson, Avoyelles; A. C. Bickam, Washington; W. H. Kirkman, Calcasieu; V. O. King, Orleans; Isaac F. Little, Saint Landry; W. F. Moreland, Claiborne; T. W. Norris, Franklin; T. Price, Claiborne; L. D. Prescot, Saint Landry; J. F. Smith, Sabine; J. R. Smart, Vernon; L. Trahan, Lafayette.

The fusionists entitled to seats in our house who have not taken their seats are as follows: J. B. Eustis, fourth district, New Orleans; J. Garadel, Sixth ward, New Orleans; E. H. McCaleb, Third ward, New Orleans; J. A. Shakespeare, Second ward, New Orleans; W. A. Strong, parish of Winn; H. F. Vickers, parish of Richland.

There are also five or six persons returned by fusion board not returned by legal board, who are now contesting the seats of those returned by legal board, thus acknowledging the legality of the Legislature. This applies to both house and senate.

In the Senate: S. M. Thomas, F. Daigle, old senators who went over to McEnery and have now returned; not taken oath of office, and entitled to his seat, B. F. Jonas.

The fusion contestants (senate) are as follows: J. F. Kelly, E. M. Graham, C. I. C. Puckette, J. W. McDonald.

Fusionists unseated: E. Booth, A. Voorhies.]

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I desire to reply very briefly to the remarks of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] as connected with the amendment which he has offered to the bill presented by the Senator from Wisconsin. That amendment is not that a new election shall be ordered in Louisiana, but that the President shall proclaim all authority withdrawn from Kellogg and his government; in other words, that the President shall recognize what is known as the McEnery government.

The Senator began by a eulogy upon the report made by the majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections at the last session, carefully referring to my minority report, and indorsing and relying upon the report of the majority. The Senator from Wisconsin must be good authority so far as the facts of this case are concerned to all who are upon the other side. The most of the argument that has been made has been but an amplification of what the Senator from Wisconsin has said. That report, which the Senator from Delaware indorses, corroborated and sustained by the speeches of the Senator from Wisconsin on several occasions while this question has been before the Senate, pronounces the McEnery government in its length and breadth a monstrous fraud, nothing more and nothing less; and when the Senator asks the President of the United States to recognize McEnery, he is asking the President to recognize a fraud the most monstrous known to any election in this country.

Now, to show how the report which the Senator indorses establishes this pretended McEnery government as a fraud, as an imposture, as an utter wickedness, I would ask the Secretary to read from the report of the majority of the committee the part that I have marked.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

First. A careful consideration of the testimony convinces us that had the election of November last been fairly conducted and returned Kellogg and his associates and a Legislature composed of the same political party would have been elected. The colored population of that State outnumbers the white, and in the last election the colored voters were almost unanimous in their support of the republican ticket. Governor Warmoth, who was elected by the republicans of the State in 1868, had passed into opposition, and held in his hands the entire machinery of the election. He appointed the supervisors of registration, and they appointed the commissioners of election. The testimony shows a systematic purpose on the part of those conducting the election to throw every possible difficulty in the way of the colored voters in the matter of registration. The polling places are not fixed by law, and at the last election they were purposely established by those conducting the election at places inconvenient of access in those parishes which were known to be largely republican, so that in some instances voters had to travel over twenty miles to reach the polls. The election was generally conducted in quiet, and was, perhaps, unusually free from disturbance or riot. Governor Warmoth, who was the master-spirit in the whole proceeding, seems to have relied upon craft rather than violence to carry the State for McEnery. In the canvass of votes which determined the McEnery government to be elected the votes of several republican parishes were rejected.

The testimony shows that leading and sagacious politicians of the State, who were acting with Warmoth, entertained the opinion before the election that Warmoth's control of the election machinery was equivalent to 20,000 votes; and we are satisfied, by the testimony, that this opinion was well founded. We believe that had registration been accessible to all, and polling places been properly established, the result of the election would have been entirely different. And although we cannot approve of such a canvass as that made by the Lynch board, who seem to have acted upon the principle of "fighting the devil with fire," and circumventing fraud by fraud, and cannot say that Kellogg's government was elected, nevertheless we believe that Kellogg's government was defeated, and the popular voice reversed, by the fraudulent manipulation of the election.

If the Senate should be inclined not to go behind the official returns of the election, then the McEnery government and Legislature must be recognized as the lawful government of the State, and McMillen, if regularly elected by that Legislature, should be seated in the Senate in place of Kellogg. But your committee believe that this would be recognizing a government based upon fraud, in defiance of the wishes and intention of the voters of that State.

Mr. MORTON. There, Mr. President, is the character given to this celebrated McEnery government by the report which the Senator indorses. The report says that to recognize the McEnery government would be recognizing a government based upon fraud; and now if the McEnery government is a fraud, and the Kellogg government is a fraud, the United States Government will not interfere at all but will leave the parties just as it finds them. A court of equity never interferes in behalf of a party whose hands are not clean, who has himself been connected with a fraud or with a wrong.

Mr. CARPENTER. The question is, whether they will not in this case interfere on behalf of the people and relieve them of the fraud committed by both parties.

Mr. MORTON. My friend from Wisconsin now comes in to the support of his friend from Delaware, although his friend from Delaware is insisting on a recognition of what the Senator from Wisconsin says is a fraud. My two friends had better settle this among themselves. If the McEnery government is such a fraud as described by this committee, I ask with what show, I ask with what purpose, can the Congress of the United States be asked to interfere and to pass a bill calling upon the President of the United States to recognize that fraud?

Sir, the republican party of Louisiana had a majority of from ten to twenty thousand; it was notoriously in the majority. This report shows it. It is not denied; it will not be denied. And it was not a small majority, but a large majority, and that majority was overcome by fraud, an enormous, systematic, organized fraud; and now it is proposed to utilize the fraud, to garner up the fruit of the fraud, and put the fraud into office, and to invest it with the powers of the State.

Suppose, Mr. President, that the governor of the State of Kentucky should desert his party, that party having a majority of twenty-five or thirty thousand in the State. Suppose under the laws of Kentucky he had the machinery of election in his own hands, and going over to the republican party, notoriously in the minority, he should by the manipulation of that machinery give to the republican party a majority and put that party in power, and then I should come into the Senate of the United States and insist that Congress should enforce that fraud, should carry it out—a fraud by which the minority was to be placed in power over a notorious majority—then that would be the case of Louisiana reversed. If McEnery had a majority of the votes actually polled, it was through the fraud practiced in that election; so says the report; so says the Senator from Wisconsin. McEnery is the creation of Warmoth. They were united in the election, and they cannot be separated in the Senate. The fruit cannot be cut off from the tree and carried off and all knowledge of the tree lost sight of. They were united in the election by a Siamese ligament which cannot be severed without death to both.

When the Senator from Wisconsin says that the election was null and void for fraud, we can understand what that is; but when the pretense is made in the Senate that there has been a great wrong in Louisiana, that the wrong has triumphed and the right has been suppressed, and then it is asked to take up a notorious wrong, a palpable fraud, a confessed fraud, and put that fraud into office, and that Congress shall become the instrument of putting into power what the committee has reported to be a monstrous fraud, I cannot conceal my amazement.

My friend from Wisconsin asked me a while ago if Congress should not interfere to protect the people of Louisiana against fraud. What people? Who are the people of Louisiana? Are they the minority or the majority? I suppose when you speak of "the people" you speak of the mass of the people. It is certainly as proper to call the majority the people as the minority, although the minority may have a more popular color, the most of them, than the majority have. Why, sir, the majority were overslaughed in that election, confessedly by the report of my friend from Wisconsin. There it is in black and white over his own signature, that the majority of the people were overslaughed by a fraud, and that but for that fraud the result of the election would have been entirely different. Yet my friend talks about protecting the rights of the people! In other words, the minority who succeeded nominally in an election by a gross fraud shall be put into power over the majority, overslaughed and trampled down by a confessed and declared fraud!

Mr. President, if we are to go to the substance of things, let us do so, and put away the forms and shadows; and how does the matter stand this day? Confessedly a majority of the people of Louisiana are of the politics and sentiments of Governor Kellogg, and a minority only of the sentiments and politics of Mr. McEnery. Not only so, that minority is largely diminished by the unwillingness of the great mass of that minority, as I believe, to have an interference in the election on the part of Congress in any manner or form. While the democratic party of Louisiana did not vote for Mr. Kellogg and would not vote for him if he were a candidate to-morrow, yet I have reason to believe, and I do believe, that the great body of that party are utterly opposed to any congressional intervention. They want peace and they want order. The government of that State is going on well, whatever may be said to the contrary. And when we talk about protecting the rights of the people of Louisiana, it simply means protecting the rights of a small minority secured by fraud over the majority.

Sir, it is not a partisan question; it is not a southern question; it is a national question. Whether the majority were republicans or democrats can make no difference and ought not to make any difference in the settlement of the question. It rises far above all party considerations. But when we hear so much said about the wickedness of Kellogg and the wickedness of the leaders of the republican party down there, and the wickedness of the Government and the crime of the Attorney-General, I must refer to the fact that we find it of record by this committee whose report is relied upon as the foundation of this whole proceeding that this pretended McEnery government is a monstrous fraud, begotten in fraud and born in iniquity.

I did not intend, Mr. President, to say anything more about this question; but the inconsistency is too monstrous. Senators cannot take that report and use a portion of it to make out a case and reject another part, and when they present to us the McEnery government we point them to the report where it is duly certified and borne out by the evidence, overwhelmingly borne out by the evidence, that the McEnery government is a fraud from beginning to end and nothing but a fraud; and when it is proposed to put that government in power it is a simple proposition to utilize the fraud, to make the fraud bear fruit and to reap the benefit of it.

Mr. CONOVER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SCOTT. Before that motion is made, if no other Senator desires to take the floor on the Louisiana question, I should like to have the bill in relation to the Louisville and Portland Canal taken up so that it may be proceeded with to-morrow.

Mr. CARPENTER, (Mr. STEVENSON in the chair.) I hope that will not be done. I hope this bill will be disposed of before any other business is taken up. It is time now perhaps to go to the consideration of executive business to-day; but if no other Senator desires to speak, let us conclude this matter to-morrow. I do not want to take up any time in debate that is not necessary and proper, but I want the bill treated like a business bill.

Mr. SCOTT. I will withhold my motion until to-morrow and the Senator from Florida may renew his motion.

Mr. STOCKTON. I beg leave to request the Senator from Florida to withdraw his motion for a single moment. I simply wish to take the floor on the Louisiana bill.

Mr. CONOVER. I withdraw the motion for the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President——

Mr. CONOVER. I now renew my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-four minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 20, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of the States and Territories, beginning with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back on motions to reconsider. Under this call memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented for reference and printing. The morning hour begins at eight minutes after twelve o'clock.

CATHARINE A. WINSLOW.

Mr. PIERCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3031) granting a pension to Catharine A. Winslow, widow of the late Rear-Admiral John A. Winslow; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN NEW YORK.

Mr. DUELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3032) to change the time for holding the terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States for the northern district of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revision of the Laws of the United States, and ordered to be printed.

ABOLITION OF GRADE OF COMMODORE.

Mr. O'BRIEN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3033) to abolish the grade and rank of commodore in the Navy of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INDIANS IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. O'BRIEN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3034) to authorize nations and tribes of Indians in their corporate capacity, and individual members and citizens thereof, to sue and be sued in the courts of the United States of America; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN G. WATTS.

Mr. COBB, of North Carolina, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3035) for the relief of John G. Watts, late postmaster at Williamston, North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DAVENPORT FEMALE COLLEGE, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. VANCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3036) for the relief of the trustees of Davenport Female College, in the State of North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM HEDGEPETH.

Mr. BELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3037) for the relief of William Hedgepeth, of Cobb County, Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN W. TUGGLE.

Mr. BELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3038) for the relief of John W. Tuggle, of Hall County, Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JONES & FULLER.

Mr. BELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3039) for the relief of Jones & Fuller, of Habersham County, Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ANNE ELIZA BROWN.

Mr. BROMBERG (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3040) granting a pension to Anne Eliza Brown, widow of Colonel Harvey Brown, United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ALABAMA CIRCUIT COURT.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3041) to change the time of holding the spring term of the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. SOUTHARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3042) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873, and to fix the compensation of the President of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

NANCY CURRY.

Mr. DURHAM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3043) granting a pension to Nancy Curry, widow of O. P. Curry, who was a member of Company L, Thirteenth Regiment Kentucky Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REFUND OF TAXES.

Mr. ATKINS introduced a bill (H. R No. 3044) to refund to H. Johnson and certain other citizens of Tennessee taxes illegally collected from them; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY FOR SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. ATKINS also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 89) directing a survey for a canal from New Orleans through Barataria Bay to the Gulf of Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MARTHA C. CAPPS.

Mr. CRUTCHFIELD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3045) granting a pension to Martha C. Capps, widow of William F. Capps, late a private of Company F, Twelfth Tennessee Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

STERLING A. MARTIN.

Mr. HOLMAN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3046) for the relief of Sterling A. Martin, late a private in Company I, Thirty-seventh Regiment of Indiana Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EDWIN R. FOSTER.

Mr. CLEMENTS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3047) for the relief of Edwin R. Foster, late lieutenant Company G, Eightieth Illinois Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES ARNOLD.

Mr. FORT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3048) to grant a pension to James Arnold, of the Kentucky Militia in the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, and ordered to be printed.

HOMESTEAD LAW.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3049) amendatory of the homestead law; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

Mr. HYDE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3050) to amend an act entitled "An act to enforce the rights of citizens to vote in the several States of this Union and authorizing judges of the United States circuit courts to establish election precincts in certain cases for the election of Representatives and Delegates in Congress;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Elections, and ordered to be printed.

LITTLE COTTONWOOD CAÑON TOLL-ROAD.

Mr. BRADLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3051) granting the right of way over the public lands for a toll-road in Little Cottonwood Cañon, in Salt Lake County, Utah Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES C. NELSON.

Mr. RUSK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3052) granting a pension to James C. Nelson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WISCONSIN BATTLE-FLAGS.

Mr. ELDREDGE presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, asking for the return of the battle-flags and other trophies captured by Wisconsin soldiers during the war, the same to be placed in the historical rooms of the capitol at Madison, in said State; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY A. NAGLEE.

Mr. HOUGHTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3053) for the relief of Henry A. Naglee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES M. LEE.

Mr. DUNNELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3054) for the relief of James M. Lee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON SALE OF STOCKS, BONDS, ETC.

Mr. STARKWEATHER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3055) levying a tax on the sale of stocks, bonds, gold and silver bullion, coin, promissory notes, and other securities in certain cases, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

EASTERN BAND OF CHEROKEE INDIANS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3056) for the relief of the Eastern band of Cherokee Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES BRITT.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3057) for the relief of James Britt, late a private Company H, Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ADELBERT C. FASSETT.

Mr. WILBER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3058) for the relief of Adelbert C. Fassett, late second lieutenant Sixteenth Independent Battery of Artillery New York Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON NATIONAL-BANK CIRCULATION.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3059) to amend the internal-revenue laws and increase the tax on the circulation of national banks from one-twelfth to one-quarter of 1 per cent. per month; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BECK. It should go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MAYNARD. In my judgment it ought to go to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BECK. I think not. It is now in the internal-revenue laws, and the bill proposes to amend the provision of law in that respect. The taxing of bank circulation has nothing to do with the duties of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. MERRIAM. This is intended to wipe national banks out of existence.

Mr. BECK. The bill provides for an amendment to the internal-revenue laws, which subject is under the charge of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MAYNARD. A tax upon the national banks is not a matter belonging to the internal-revenue law, but to the law in reference to banking and currency, and should go to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I ask that the rule be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] asks that the rule in regard to the Committee on Banking and Currency may be read. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

This committee, to consist of eleven members, is directed to be appointed at the commencement of each Congress. Its duty shall be to take into consideration all propositions relative to banking and the currency as shall be presented or shall come in question and be referred to them by the House, and to report thereon by bill or otherwise.

Mr. DAWES. I should like now to have the rule in regard to the Committee on Ways and Means read.

The SPEAKER. The rule will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

There shall be appointed, at the commencement of each Congress, a Committee on Ways and Means, to consist of eleven members. It shall be the duty of the Committee on Ways and Means to take into consideration all reports of the Treasury Department, and such other propositions relating to raising revenue and providing ways and means for the support of the Government as shall be presented or shall come in question and be referred to them by the House.

Mr. DAWES. It is very evident, Mr. Speaker, that there is a concurrent jurisdiction here. The bill raises revenue, and it also pertains to banks and banking. It has always been the usage that all these tax questions shall go before the Committee on Ways and Means. This tax was originated there and entered into the internal-revenue law, and it seems to me that the Committee on Ways and Means is the place where the bill should go.

The SPEAKER. It is a question for the House and not for the Chair to decide.

Mr. COX. I wrote that rule myself, and the object of it was that all bills that raised revenue should go to the Committee on Ways and Means, all questions as to the kind of money to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and all matters of paying it out to the Committee on Appropriations. It was not intended that there should be any concurrent jurisdiction between the various committees. Every matter of taxation naturally goes to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. RANDALL. If I understand it rightly, the whole of the revenue derived by the Government from the banks is under the general banking act, and is paid directly into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BECK. No, sir; it is under the internal-revenue law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] presents a bill which he moves shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. The gentleman from Tennessee moves so to amend the motion as to refer it to the Committee on Banking and Currency. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I ask that the bill may be read.

Mr. MAYNARD. The effect of the bill is to tax the national banks out of existence.

Mr. BECK. It is no such thing. I contradict that.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is not a revenue measure; it is a banking and currency measure.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill so to amend the internal-revenue laws as to increase the tax on the circulation of national banks from one-twelfth to one-quarter of 1 per cent. per month.

Mr. MAYNARD. The internal-revenue law does not impose any tax on national banks. The tax is imposed by the law creating the banks, the act of 1864. The tax is not collected by the internal-revenue officers. It is paid in through the Comptroller of the Currency, and goes directly into the Treasury of the United States without the intervention in any way or form of the Internal-Revenue Office.

Mr. BECK. The tax is part of the internal-revenue law, and is so put in all the compilations of the laws.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I wish to inquire of the Chair if at the time the banking law was passed there was a Committee on Banking and Currency?

The SPEAKER. There was not. The banking law was passed in 1864, in the Thirty-eighth Congress.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. From what committee would it have naturally come?

The SPEAKER. At that time the Committee on Ways and Means comprehended all the duties now devolving on that committee, the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. As I understand the proposition, it is to tax the banks. I ask that the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the 1st day of July, 1874, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent. per each month upon the average amount of circulation issued by any banking association, corporation, company, or person, including as circulation all certified checks and all notes and other obligations calculated or intended to circulate or be used as money; and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. RANDALL. That changes the whole character of the general banking law.

Mr. BECK. It is precisely word for word as it is now in the internal-revenue law, except that one-quarter of 1 per cent. is substituted for one-twelfth of 1 per cent.

Mr. MAYNARD. The internal-revenue law taxes all private banks, banking associations, &c., but not national banks. The object of this is to strike at the national banks.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to amend the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to refer the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, by striking out "Ways and Means" and inserting "Banking and Currency."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 61, noes 52.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will not consume the time by insisting on this bill going to his committee.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is not consuming time.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman is undertaking to take the taxing power away from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 102, not voting 77; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barrere, Barry, Bass, Biery, Bradley, Burleigh, Roderick R. Butler, Cannon, Cason, Clinton L. Cobb, Conger, Cook, Cotton, Creamer, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Darrall, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Durham, Elliott, Farwell, Fort, Frye, Gunckel, Hagans, Hamilton, Harmer, Harrison, Hathorn, Havens, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hynes, Kellogg, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McJunkin, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Morey, Negley, Nunn, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Pelham, Phelps, Phillips, Poland, Pratt, Rainey, Randall, Rapier, Ray, Rice, Richmond, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Sessions, Sheats, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Smart, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Starkweather, Strait, Thornburgh, Tremain, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, White, Whiteley, Wilber, George Willard, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, Wilshire, James Wilson, and Woodworth—111.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Atkins, Banning, Barber, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buffinton, Burchard, John B. Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Clymer, Comingo, Cox, Crittenden, Crossland, Curtis, Danford, Davis, Dawes, DeWitt, Eldredge, Field, Foster, Garfield, Giddings, Glover, Gooch, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Hatcher, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hereford, Herndon, George F. Hoar, Holman, Hyde, Jewett, Kasson, Kelley, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Leach, Loughridge, Lowndes, Luttrell, Magee, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, McLean, Mellish, Milliken, Mills, Myers, Neal, Niblack, O'Brien, Hosea W. Parker, Pierce, Read, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Milton Sayler, Sener, Sheldon, Sloss, John Q. Smith, Southard, Standiford, Stone, Storm, Sypher, Christopher Y. Thomas, Vance, Waldron, Walls, Wells, Whitehead, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, William B. Williams, Willie, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, and Pierce M. B. Young—102.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Barnum, Begole, Buckner, Bundy, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Corwin, Crocker, Dobbins, Eames, Eden, Freeman, Hancock, John T. Harris, Hersey, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Hunton, Hurlbut, Lowe, Marshall, McKee, McNulta, Mitchell, Morrison, Nesmith, Niles, Parsons, Pendleton, Perry, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Potter, Purman, Ransier, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Ross, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Shanks, Sherwood, Sloan, Small, George L. Smith, William A. Smith, Speer, Stanard, Stephens, St. John, Stowell, Strawbridge, Swann, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Todd, Townsend, Tyner, Waddell, Wallace, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Charles G. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Woodford, and John D. Young—77.

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. CALDWELL said: I was not within the bar when my name was called; if I had been, I should have voted "no."

The result of the vote having been announced as above recorded, the question recurred upon the motion, as amended, to refer the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BECK. Have I the right to withdraw the bill now?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BECK. I do not care about the bill being sent to a committee to be smothered.

Mr. RANDALL. It will not be smothered. I deny that.

Mr. BECK. Very well; I will not withdraw it.

The motion, as amended, was agreed to.

So the bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PROPRIETORS OF BONDED WAREHOUSES.

Mr. MERRIAM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3060) to regulate the responsibility of Government and bonded-warehouse proprietors for merchandise while in their custody; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

TITLE TO PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PHILLIPS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3061) providing for appeals in cases involving titles to public lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS TO PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PHILLIPS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3062) to provide for appeals in cases involving claims to public lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

KANSAS PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. FOSTER (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3063) for the collection of money and recovery of lands wrongfully withheld by the Kansas Pacific Railway Company from the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

EDWIN EBERT.

Mr. HAVENS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3064) for the relief of Edwin Ebert; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN FISHER.

Mr. BASS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3065) to remove the charge of desertion from private John Fisher, Company E, Second Regiment New York Mounted Rifle Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INDEPENDENCE OF CUBA.

Mr. POLAND introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 90) for the recognition of the independence of Cuba; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LUCINDA MAGUIRE.

Mr. CROSSLAND introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3066) for the benefit of Lucinda Maguire; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and, with the accompanying memorial, ordered to be printed.

HENRY BATTY.

Mr. BARRY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3067) for the relief of Henry Batty; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. RABUN.

Mr. BARRY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3068) for the relief of John H. Rabun, of Choctaw County, Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM A. MUSGROVE.

Mr. HUNTON, (on behalf of Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia,) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3069) for the relief of William A. Musgrove; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ALEXANDER DERCOURT.

Mr. LAMPORT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3070) for the relief of Alexander Dercourt; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PROTECTION OF TELEGRAPH LINES.

Mr. McCORMICK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3071) to protect lines of telegraph constructed or used by the United States from malicious injury and obstruction; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MARY WOOLEY.

Mr. BANNING introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3072) granting a pension to Mary Wooley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DIPLOMATIC SYSTEM.

Mr. BANNING also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3073) to amend section 19 of the act approved August, 1856, entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ADRIAN S. LEE.

Mr. HENDEE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3074) granting a pension to Adrian S. Lee, of Jericho, Vermont: which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

H. G. BOARDMAN.

Mr. HENDEE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3075) for the relief of H. G. Boardman, postmaster at Milton, Vermont; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3076) authorizing payment to certain citizens of New Mexico for Indian depredations; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ISAAC ANDREWS.

Mr. BUNDY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3077) granting a pension to Isaac Andrews, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, and ordered to be printed.

FORT ABERCROMBIE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. AVERILL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3078) for the relief of the settlers upon that portion of the old reservation of Fort Abercrombie subject to rule under the act to provide for the disposition of useless military reservations, approved February 24, 1871; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

FREDERICK HEIDELMAN.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3079) for the relief of Frederick Heidelman, late a private of Company F, Forty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NEW YORK SENECA INDIANS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs a bill (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cataraugus and Alleghany reservations and to confirm existing leases; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MONDAY MORNING BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has just now expired. The Chair desires to call the attention of the House to the operation of the rule every Monday morning. The Clerk will read the rule as given in Barclay's Digest and also the rule as given in the Rules of the House. There is a typographical error which has crept into the Digest, and which has misled many gentlemen.

The Clerk read as follows:

Except during the last ten days of the session the Speaker shall not entertain a motion to suspend the rules of the House at any time, except on Monday of every week, at the expiration of one hour after the Journal is read, unless the call of States and Territories for bills on leave has been earlier concluded, when the Speaker may entertain a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was misled by this rule himself some two or three weeks ago and entertained a motion to suspend the rules at the close of the call for bills and joint resolutions on leave. The Clerk will read that portion of Rule 145 which relates to this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules, except during the last ten days of the session, and on Monday of every week at the expiration of one hour after the Journal is read [April 26, 1828] unless the call of States and Territories for bills on leave and resolutions has been earlier concluded, when the Speaker may entertain a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. That involves the second call of the States, which members of former Congresses are familiar with. There has not been a second call of the States for resolutions during this Congress. In order to avoid that call every Monday morning, and to avoid the precipitating of legislation upon the House under the previous question, the practice has been by some means or other to delay the conclusion of the call for bills and joint resolutions for reference, so that nothing is done in reference to that second call except the wasting of thirty or forty minutes every Monday morning. Gentlemen are aware that this second call, even when reached, has rarely gone beyond the New England States. The rules provide that it shall begin with the State of Maine, and after once going through the States proceed back in the reverse order, but the Chair has hardly ever known the call to reach as far as the Middle States.

Mr. WOOD. In connection with this subject, may I be permitted to ask whether the Speaker still holds that under the call for resolutions, as provided in the old rule, a member may present a bill and ask to have it put on its passage?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly, if previous notice has been given. While that is the rule, however, the Chair does not think it a wise rule. Its operation is that, to avoid the presentation of bills for action, members, whenever there is a likelihood of reaching the second call, consume the time by asking for the reading of bills or by calling the yeas and nays, as was done this morning upon the question raised between the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] and the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.] If this portion of the rules were made to conform to the manner in which it reads in the Digest the second call would be dispensed with; and as soon as the first call for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions had been concluded, the House could proceed to other business.

Mr. WOOD. If the Chair will permit, I would suggest to the Speaker, as the chairman of the Committee on Rules, that inasmuch as this second call, under the rule or under the construction of it, commences with the State of Maine, that State may occupy the morning hour of Monday during the whole session, without any other State being reached.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is aware that during the last Congress the civil-rights bill, introduced by a gentleman from Maine on the second call, remained in the morning hour for seventeen consecutive weeks, and was the occasion during that time of dilatory motions to the absolute destruction of the morning hour of Monday so far as all other business was concerned.

Mr. WOOD. I am aware of that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair gives notice that the Committee on Rules (though he does not know what they will do) may possibly ask the House to act upon this subject.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to give notice that as soon as the Chair has done entertaining requests for unanimous consent I shall ask the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. POLAND. I wish to make a motion to suspend the rules.

NELSON AINSLIE.

Mr. HUBBELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3081) granting a pension to Nelson Ainslie; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC.

Mr. CHIPMAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3082) authorizing the construction of a substantial bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac, at or near the present navy-yard bridge; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

CORPORATIONS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CHIPMAN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3083) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the creation of corporations by general law," approved May 5, 1870; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES H. CROSS.

Mr. CHIPMAN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3084) for the relief of James H. Cross; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

UNIFORM RATE OF INTEREST.

Mr. KILLINGER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing by law a uniform rate of interest throughout the United States and Territories, and to report by bill or otherwise.

PROTECTION OF TEXAS FRONTIER.

The SPEAKER. At the adjournment of the House on last Monday there was pending a motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GIDDINGS] to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 1590) to provide for the better protection of the frontier settlements of Texas against Indian and Mexican depredations. The bill will be read.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of War to construct and operate a line of telegraph, beginning at or near the city of Denison, in Grayson County, Texas; thence by the nearest practicable route to Fort Sill, Indian Territory; thence to Fort Richardson, Texas; thence along the northern frontier-line of settlements to Forts Griffin and Concho; thence to the Pecos River, at or near the mouth of Toyah Creek; thence to Fort Clarke, on Las Moras Creek; thence to Fort Duncan, on the Rio Grande; thence down the Rio Grande, via Fort McIntosh and Ringgold's Barracks, to Brownsville, so as to connect the military posts which are now, or may hereafter be, established on said line with the military headquarters of said district; and the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GIDDINGS. This bill has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and has been recommended by every military official in command of that frontier during the last seven or eight years. It is recommended and urged upon Congress by the Secretary of War and by Generals Sheridan and Sherman. It has also the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior. The object of the bill appears clearly from the reading of its provisions. It is designed to connect the military posts of that frontier, situated from one hundred to two hundred and fifty miles apart, and extending over a distance of about fifteen hundred miles. By means of this telegraph-line troops can be concentrated.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Let me ask the gentleman whether he intends to permit debate on the other side?

Mr. GIDDINGS. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. NIBLACK. I suggest that by general consent a certain limit of time be assigned to each side.

Mr. GUNCKEL. On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs I desire a few minutes to reply to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Is this bill reported from any committee?

Mr. NIBLACK. I suggest that a time be fixed for debate upon this bill.

Mr. GIDDINGS. This frontier on the northern border is subject to Indian depredations for a distance of six hundred miles, and on the western border to the depredations of Mexicans for a distance of about eight hundred miles. The military posts situated on this frontier are from one hundred to two hundred and fifty miles apart, and bands of Indians and Mexicans can pass down between them into the settlements and commit depredations and be gone before the military know anything about it. By means of this telegraph line the troops can be concentrated and the citizens upon this frontier settlement can receive timely notice of the approach of Indians or Mexicans and be prepared to defend themselves.

General Reynolds in a communication to the Secretary of War, urging the establishment of this line, says that the cost will be less than for the support of a cavalry company for one year. He urges its construction in the strongest language upon the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War in turn urges it upon Congress.

At the last session of Congress this bill, or one substantially like it, was before the Committee on Military Affairs, and I understand they were unanimously in favor of it. At this session it was brought to the attention of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and that committee, in view of the importance and the necessities of the frontier settlers and that the amount of protection which would be afforded by the establishment of this line would be greater than could be afforded in any other way by the small amount of money which is here proposed to be appropriated, are unanimous in recommending its passage. The Secretary of War, too, is anxious that the bill should be passed at once, inasmuch as it contemplates the employment of enlisted men in the construction of the proposed telegraph line, and the work should be completed before the weather becomes excessively hot upon the plains.

I think any one, Mr. Speaker, who will take the pains to read the recommendations of the military officers in command upon the frontier, as shown in their reports and the recommendations of the Secretary of War and of the Secretary of the Interior as to the importance and necessity of this line will certainly not refuse to do this act of justice to these frontier settlers.

Mr. GUNCKEL. This is a proposition to build a line of military telegraph in Texas, and it is somewhat singular, Mr. Speaker, it should have been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and not to the Committee on Military Affairs, where the subject has been already under consideration.

Mr. POLAND. Is this debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It seemed to be the general understanding that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] should have a few moments to reply to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GUNCKEL. As I have said, this matter has been investigated by the Committee on Military Affairs and the testimony of military officers taken in relation thereto. I think the telegraph line proposed ought to be built, but I am satisfied from our investigation that it can be built for one-third of the sum named in the pending bill, which is $200,000. General J. J. Reynolds, for several years in command in Texas, said in his testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs that all that was desired of the Government was that it should purchase the wire and the officers and soldiers would themselves construct the line. This makes an appropriation without any provision for the work being done by the men of the Army, leaving the whole thing open to contract and to be controlled by rings, who may make it a job to the great injury as well as disgrace of the Government. I think, as I said before, the line ought to be built for military and other reasons, but at one-third of the sum named in this bill. I trust, therefore, the bill will not pass in this way, but be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, a committee which has already had the whole subject under consideration, and by which all the friends of the measure desire will be accomplished and yet a saving of over $100,000 be made to the Government.

The question recurred on seconding the motion for a suspension of the rules.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 23; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. GIDDINGS and Mr. GUNCKEL tellers.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I ask the gentleman having charge of the bill to reduce the appropriation to $50,000 or $75,000, and then some members here will vote for it, who now propose to vote against it. I believe General Reynolds says he can build it for $50,000. I do not like to vote against it.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I should like to have a few minutes to explain.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont objects to debate, and the tellers will take their places.

The House again; divided and the tellers reported—ayes 115, noes 34.

So there was a second to the motion for a suspension of the rules.

The question next recurred on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 38.

Mr. GUNCKEL demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

At the request of Mr. STARKWEATHER, the bill was again read.

Mr. KELLOGG. I hope the gentleman from Texas will reduce the appropriation from $200,000 to $50,000.

Mr. GIDDINGS. The only objection I understand to the bill is in respect to the amount proposed to be appropriated. By unanimous consent I will strike out $200,000 and insert $100,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. Say $50,000.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I beg the House to understand that the line ought to be built, and that my only objection is that the amount here named is too large. Competent military officers say the soldiers will build it themselves, and that all they want from the Government is the wire. I am willing to vote for $100,000, but no more.

Mr. GIDDINGS. The line recommended by General Reynolds was only about one-half the length of the line proposed in this bill.

Mr. GUNCKEL. About one-half, but they proposed to do it for $30,000. I do not think it ought to cost more than $60,000, but I am willing to vote for $100,000, so as to cover all it ought to cost, if constructed by the soldiers themselves, and with reasonable economy. I am willing to compromise on that amount.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GIDDINGS] desires to be allowed to amend the bill by inserting "$100,000" instead of "$200,000." Is there objection?

Objection was made.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the only way by which the gentleman from Texas can reach his object is to have the vote reconsidered by which the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I now move to amend the bill by striking out "$200,000" and inserting "$100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The rules were then suspended, (two-thirds voting therefor,) and the bill, as amended, was passed.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask that by unanimous consent the bill (H. R. No. 2986) to appropriate $3,000,000 in aid of the centennial celebration and international exhibition in 1876 be made a special order for consideration in Committee of the Whole, to the exclusion of all other orders except appropriation bills, on Tuesday, 5th May, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Let the bill be read, that we may see what it is.

The bill was read.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I object to the order being made.

Mr. RANDALL. This is merely asking a day in court.

Mr. MYERS. It only gives a hearing, and I hope no one will object to that.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the order I have indicated be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] asks that this bill may be considered on Tuesday, the 5th of May, and on ensuing days, if not then concluded, in Committee of the Whole, to the exclusion of all other orders except appropriation bills, and moves that the rules be suspended that that order may be made.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the gentleman to except also reports from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. Will the bill, if this order be made, be open to amendment?

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I desire to know what will be the position of this bill if this motion is not agreed to?

The SPEAKER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole on the general Calendar.

Mr. KELLEY. There are no previous orders ahead of it. I have been asked whether the bill under this order will be subject to amendments. It will come up for general consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. And will be open to unlimited debate and amendments.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I wish the House to allow me to say a word on this matter.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I object to debate, unless the other side, those who are seriously and honestly opposed to this measure, can be heard.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I am not going to debate the general question at all. I wish merely to be heard on the question of making this order.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. And I ask to be heard on the same point.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I desire to say a word, not on the merits of the question, but merely on the question of this special assignment of a particular day for the consideration of this bill. I beg the House to reflect that there is here a commission of gentlemen, selected from every State and Territory in the Union, who have been empowered by an act of Congress to take charge of this celebration. They have published this thing to the world. They have got ten governments to agree to come there through their representatives. They have got $4,000,000 promised. And now we want the House to hear us for an hour, or two hours, and then tell us plainly whether this thing is to be a failure, to our great shame and mortification, or whether it is to go on in a way that will reflect honor to this country. We want the House, as a tribunal, to hear the whole case and decide on it. I suppose that a two or there hours' presentation of the case would enable the House to come to a decision.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Let me say in reply to the gentleman that as regards a measure of this kind, involving so large an amount of money, I do not think the House is prepared, at this stage of the session, to set apart a time for the consideration of this bill, which comes here without having been submitted to the scrutiny, as all other appropriation bills have to be, of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KELLEY. I object to this discussion.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I am only answering the point of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.] I shall not go into the merits as much as that gentleman did. I hope, as the bill is not properly here like other appropriation bills, that the House will not allow it to come in in this way.

Mr. KELLEY. It comes from the committee to whom the President's message on the subject was referred.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I have never known before a committee of this kind to report and ask the House to put through in this way an appropriation bill involving $3,000,000.

Mr. KELLEY. I am merely asking that a day be named for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. If the order be made it will consume a great deal of time.

Mr. MYERS. I object to further discussion.

Mr. KELLEY. I have no doubt the bill will be disposed of in one day.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. Then let the gentleman limit his motion to one day.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] was mistaken in saying that this bill is reported to the House and its passage recommended. There is no recommendation from the Committee.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Does not the way in which it is brought before the House have the effect of a recommendation?

Mr. KELLEY. The bill was originally reported from the committee on the Centennial Celebration.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House so suspend the rules as to make the order requested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] that this bill may be considered in Committee of the Whole House, to the exclusion of all other orders, except appropriation bills, on Tuesday, May 5, and on ensuing days, if not then disposed of. The Chair appoints as tellers on the question of seconding the motion for the suspension of the rules the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. KELLEY.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 112, noes 37.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs, Will the House suspend the rules and make the order requested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 38.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask permission of the House to state that the committee recommended this bill for consideration; they did not recommend it for adoption. As I understand that gentlemen misunderstood me; I may have made a mistake myself.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules; and there were—yeas 154, nays 65, not voting 71; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Archer, Averill, Banning, Barry, Begole, Biery, Bright, Bromberg, Burleigh, Roderick R. Butler, Caldwell, Cason, Clayton, Clymer, Clinton L. Cobb, Comingo, Conger, Cotton, Cox, Creamer, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Davis, DeWitt, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Elliott, Farwell, Field, Fort, Freeman, Frye, Glover, Gooch, Hagans, Robert S. Hale, Hancock, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Havens, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Herndon, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hoskins, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hunton, Hurlbut, Jewett, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Lamar, Lamison, Lamport, Lawson, Leach, Lewis, Lofland, Lowndes, Luttrell, Lynch, Magee, Maynard, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McJunkin, McKee, Moore, Myers, Negley, Nunn, O'Brien, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Isaac C. Parker, Pelham, Perry, Phelps, Pierce, Pike, Poland, Purman, Ralney, Randall, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Rice, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Sener, Sessions, Sheldon, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloss, Smart, A. Herr Smith, J. Ambler Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Stanard, Starkweather, Stone, Storm, Strawbridge, Swann, Sypher, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Tremain, Vance, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, White, Whitehead, Whiteley, Whitthorne, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, and Woodford—154

NAYS—Messrs. Arthur, Atkins, Barber, Barrere, Bass, Beck, Berry, Blount, Bowen, Brown, Buffinton, Burchard, Burrows, Cain, Cannon, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Cook, Crittenden, Crossland, Dawes, Donnan, Durham, Eldredge, Foster, Giddings, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, Hatcher, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hereford, Holman, Hyde, Knapp, Loughridge, Lowe, McCrary, McLean, McNulta, Merriam, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Neal, Niblack, Pratt, Read, Robbins, James W. Robinson, John G. Schumaker, Sheats, John Q. Smith, Southard, Standiford, Strait, Waldron, Charles W. Willard, James Wilson, Wolfe, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—65.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ashe, Barnum, Bell, Bland, Bradley, Buckner, Bundy, Benjamin F. Butler, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Coburn, Corwin, Crocker, Dobbins, Eden, Garfield, Hersey, Hodges, Houghton, Hynes, Kasson, Lansing, Lawrence, Marshall, Martin, Mellish, Mitchell, Morey, Morrison, Nesmith, Niles, Parsons, Pendleton, Phillips, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Potter, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Ross, Milton Sayler, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Shanks, Sherwood, Sloan, Small, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, William A. Smith, Speer, Stephens, St. John, Stowell, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Todd, Townsend, Tyner, Waddell, Wallace, Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Wilber, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, and Woodworth—71.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the motion of Mr. KELLEY was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. SHERWOOD, is absent on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. HUNTER. My colleagues, Mr. COBURN and Mr. SHANKS, are both confined to their homes by sickness.

Mr. RANDALL. My colleague, Mr. SPEER, is absent. If here he would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles, namely:

A bill (H. R. No. 2667) to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to gather authentic information as to the condition and importance of the fur-seal trade in the Territory of Alaska;

A bill (H. R. No. 2675) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth J. King; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2907) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver certain condemned ordnance to the municipal authorities of Concord, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was presented to the House, by Mr. BABCOCK, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 519) to grant an American register to the Canadian tug Noah P. Sprague;

An act (H. R. No. 971) to forfeit to the United States certain lands granted to the Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad Company to aid in constructing a railroad from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville, in the State of California;

An act (H. R. No. 1923) authorizing the payment of annuities into the treasury of the Seminole tribe of Indians;

An act (H. R. No. 1922) to establish a reservation for certain Indians in the Territory of Montana;

An act (H. R. No. 676) for the relief of Joseph R. Blackwell, postmaster at Litchfield, Illinois;

An act (H. R. No. 517) for the relief of Sarah F. Lincoln, postmaster at Spencerport, Monroe County, New York;

An act (H. R. No 1222) for the relief of George W. Keyes;

An act (H. R. No. 1574) for the relief of Richard H. Dutton, postmaster at Cavendish, Vermont;

An act (H. R. No. 1892) authorizing the Passaic County National Bank of Paterson to change its name;

An act (H. R. No. 1932) for the relief of Frank M. Kelley;

An act (H. R. No. 1942) authorizing the Secretary of War to employ a retired officer at sea, and if physically and professionally qualified to perform his duties, the President is authorized to restore him to the active list;

An act (H. R. No. 2550) making appropriation for the payment of teachers in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and providing for the levy of a tax to reimburse the same;

An act (H. R. No. 2867) to authorize the use of certain unexpended balance for payment of expenses of board of Indian commissioners;

An act (H. R. No. 1930) to secure to the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States the land on the White Earth Indian reservation, in Minnesota, on which is situated their church and other buildings;

An act (H. R. No. 2124) authorizing the changing of the name of the steamer Fanny Lehr;

An act (H. R. No. 2549) to amend the act entitled "An act for enrolling and licensing ships or vessels to be employed in the coasting trade and fisheries, and for regulating the same," passed February 18, 1793;

An act (H. R. No. 1600) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the English-built brig Hattie Eaton;

An act (H. R. No. 2186) granting an American registry to the American-built Peruvian steamship Rayo, now rebuilt in the United States and converted into a sailing-vessel; and

An act (H. R. No. 912) to provide for the inspection of the disbursement of appropriations made by officers of the Army.

COURTS IN UTAH.

Mr. POLAND moved that the rules be suspended, and the following preamble and resolution adopted:

Whereas, by reason of conflict of authority and jurisdiction between the courts and officers appointed under the Government of the United States and the courts and officers appointed by the territorial Legislature of Utah, the laws of the United States cannot be enforced in said Territory, and proceedings in the courts have for a considerable time been delayed and obstructed to the great detriment of suitors therein and of the Government of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary of this House be directed to prepare and report a bill for the regulation of the legal jurisdiction of the courts and officers in the Territory of Utah, and for that purpose said committee be authorized to report such bill at any time.

The motion was seconded; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the preamble and resolution adopted.

GEORGE E. PICKETT.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3085) to remove the political disabilities of General George E. Pickett, of Virginia; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. KILLINGER. I move to strike out the word "general;" that should not be in the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is correct; it should be stricken out.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I have no objection.

The motion to strike out was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the bill was passed.

TRIAL OF CAPTAIN HURTT.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3086) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish copies of certain papers called for by resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of War to employ such number of temporary clerks as may be necessary to speedily copy and furnish to this House papers heretofore called for in the matter of the trial of Captain Hurtt, by resolution of March 10, 1874, and appropriates $250, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expenses thereof.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

TRIAL OF UNITED STATES AGENTS.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted a motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill to protect persons acting in the interests of the United States.

The bill provides that when any person has been or may be prosecuted, either at law or in equity, in any court, by any party, for any act done or omitted to be done, to any captured or abandoned property or property claimed to belong to the United States, or because of any act concerning such property or injury thereto, if it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Treasury that the acts done or omitted to be done, by the person so prosecuted, were done or omitted to be done by him in good faith in order to deliver up or preserve the property for the use of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury may direct the district attorney of the proper district to defend such suit in behalf of the United States; and if said suit shall have been brought in any State court, the district attorney shall file a petition in that court to have the same removed to the circuit court for the district in which such suit is pending, setting forth the order or direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and that the district attorney believes, and has reasonable cause to believe, that the subject-matter of said suit is for or concerning property hereinbefore described; and thereupon all further proceedings in said State court in said suit shall cease, and the process and all papers in or concerning the same shall be transferred to the circuit court, and the same shall have day and hearing therein the same as if brought in said circuit court, with like effect to the defendant as is provided in the case of suits against an officer appointed or acting under or by any revenue law of the United States, or a person acting under the authority of such officer.

Mr. BECK. That is a bill to destroy all the State courts at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury or any clerk in his office.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Not at all. The bill is very specific in its terms and explains itself. It refers only to the cases of captured or abandoned property and of parties seeking to preserve it to the United States, where they have done some act or omitted to do some act for which they are sued. In a case of that sort the Secretary of the Treasury, upon being satisfied that the party acted in good faith, may cause the suit to be determined in the name of the United States and be transferred to the United States court of the district.

Mr. WOOD. It leaves the Secretary of the Treasury to determine this whole question.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Rather than have a controversy about the bill I will withdraw it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. I hope not; let us pass it.

The SPEAKER. The bill is withdrawn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Does not that require a two-thirds vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the rule in that regard. The Chair does not feel justified in excluding the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] from making the motion; but at the same time, as Monday is given for suspensions of the rules by a two-thirds vote, the Chair would hardly think it fair and liberal to have all those motions cut off by one which may be decided by a majority vote only.

Mr. GARFIELD. I never knew it to require more than a majority vote.

The SPEAKER. Of course it is the duty of the Chair to administer the rule. But the gentleman ought not by a motion to be decided by a majority vote seek to exclude from consideration propositions to be submitted by gentlemen who may think they can obtain a two-thirds vote. A few more motions may probably relieve the business of the House, so that the motion to go into Committee of the Whole will not be seriously contested.

Mr. GARFIELD. My proposition of course is to go into Committee of the Whole on the appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair recognizes the gentleman of course the motion would be decided by a majority vote.

SCHOOL LANDS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. ORR. I am instructed by the Committee on the Public Lands to move that the rules be suspended so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of House bill No. 1764, and pass it now. I think there will be no objection to the bill. It is a bill to appropriate lands for the support of schools in certain fractional townships in the State of Missouri.

The bill was read. It provides that for all fractional townships in the State of Missouri which are entitled to public lands for the support of schools, according to the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 20, 1826, entitled "An act to appropriate lands for the support of schools in certain townships and fractional townships not before provided for," and for which no selections have heretofore been made, there shall be reserved and appropriated out of the public lands, for each of said fractional townships, the amount of land to which they were respectively entitled according to the provisions of said act.

The second section provides that the land to which said fractional townships are entitled as aforesaid shall be selected by the Commissioner of the General Land Office out of any unappropriated public land within the State of Missouri. The Commissioner, in making such selection, shall select such land as shall be designated to him for that purpose by the county courts of the counties in which such fractional townships are situated; and, when so selected, said lands shall be held by the same tenure, and upon the same terms, for the support of schools in such fractional townships, as sections numbered 16 are, or may be, held in the State of Missouri.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether this bill is limited to the State of Missouri, and also where these lands are to be selected?

Mr. ORR. I will make a statement which will satisfy the gentleman. This bill gives the fractional townships no more lands than they are now entitled to by law. The northern line of Missouri was so long in dispute that these fractional townships never received the land to which they are legally entitled. Under the law of 1826, which is now in force, they can select that land only in the land districts where the townships are situated. The bill does nothing more than remove this restriction, so that the lands may be selected anywhere in the State of Missouri.

The motion of Mr. ORR to suspend the rules and pass the bill was seconded, and was then agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

So the bill was passed.

GUBERNATORIAL CONTEST IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. WILSHIRE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the House, if not incompatible with the public interest, all correspondence by telegraph or otherwise between himself and the person claiming to be governor of Arkansas relating to the troubles in this State, together with copies of any orders or directions given by him or under his direction to the military officer in charge of the garrison or in command of the United States troops at Little Rock.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HINES. I ask consent to make a personal explanation. I am made to state in the Morning Chronicle that my colleague [Mr. WILSHIRE] holds his seat here as the "gift of Baxter." I simply wish to disclaim responsibility for that statement and to deny its authenticity. I recollect no such interview or conversation with the reporter of the Chronicle as I see published this morning; and I deem it my duty to say that as the contested election from the third district of Arkansas seems to me a question for the determination of this House in a judicial capacity, under the influence of only such considerations as should operate upon the minds of judges on the bench in the determination of a like issue, I therefore desire that I shall not be regarded as responsible, or taken as authority, for any statement that could possibly prejudice that contest before it is reported to the House. Besides this, which is due to courtesy, my colleague, and myself, I take this opportunity to deny the authorship of what I am made to say in that reported interview, kindly intended as it evidently is. Indeed I had no knowledge of the interview itself until I read it in the paper this morning.

CHEAP WATER TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, moved to suspend the rules and adopt the following resolution:

Whereas the great need of this country is some well-devised and sure system of cheap transportation by water, which will give not only outlets from the interior of the country to the sea, but the means of a free interchange of products between the States, a system which is needed by the whole country, and has been demanded by the people of all sections: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Railways and Canals be instructed to prepare and report a bill for the opening up and improvement of the great natural water highways of the country and their connection by such artificial channels as will give to our people the cheap transportation which they demand; and that the 14th day of May be set apart for the consideration of this subject, to the exclusion of all other business and orders, and each day thereafter until it be disposed of.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope we shall not make any more special orders.

The question being taken on seconding the motion of Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, there were—ayes 42, noes not counted.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, and Mr. GARFIELD.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will withdraw that part of his resolution which proposes to make this subject a special order. It is that alone to which I object.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. This is a question that has already received the consideration of the House, but no vote has ever been reached upon it.

The House divided on seconding the motion to suspend the rules; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 52.

So the motion was seconded.

Mr. McCRARY. Is it in order to move the reference of this subject to a committee?

The SPEAKER. Not while the motion to suspend the rules is pending.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Chair please state the proposed order?

The SPEAKER. It is to make a bill in relation to cheap routes of water transportation a special order for May 14, to the exclusion of other orders, and for succeeding days until disposed of.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I am willing to except appropriation bills.

Mr. McCRARY. If the House is willing to authorize an expenditure of $500,000,000 for the purpose contemplated, then it had better adopt the resolution.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I am willing to except all previous orders.

The SPEAKER. Previous orders would necessarily be excepted.

Mr. DAWES. The House gave the Committee on Ways and Means authority to report at any time upon moieties and the Sanborn contracts.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I am willing to except that subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia proposes to except from this order reports of the Committee on Ways and Means and of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I believe the resolution instructs a committee to report a bill.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Then I desire the yeas and nays on the proposition.

Mr. DAWES. What kind of bill does it instruct them to report?

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Any bill they may come to a conclusion on; they have half a dozen to select from.

Mr. DAWES. They can report any bill they please.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. It gives them the right to report a bill.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the proposition to be read as modified.

The proposition was read.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to also except reports from the Committee on Elections.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I am willing to agree to that.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman to change the committee, as the committee which should have charge of this subject is the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I cannot change that, Mr. Speaker; I must adhere to the resolution. I wish I could, but I understand the Committee on Railways and Canals was created for this special purpose.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Chair state that previous special orders will be excepted necessarily?

The SPEAKER. Special orders of prior date will of course take precedence.

Mr. CONGER. Unless the gentleman changes the resolution to refer to the proper committee I must object.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. The Committee on Railways and Canals is the proper committee, and I leave the question to the Chair to decide.

Mr. CONGER. Under the rules this subject could not be sent to the Committee on Railways and Canals. The improvement of the rivers and harbors of the United States is a subject which under the rules and the practice of the House has always been sent to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McCRARY. The Committee on Railways and Canals have this general subject now under consideration.

The question recurred on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, and Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 33, no quorum voting.

Mr. KILLINGER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 130, nays 74, not voting 86; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Averill, Barrere, Begole, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bromberg, Brown, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Caldwell, Cannon, Cason, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Clymer, Stephen A. Cobb, Comingo, Conger, Cook, Cotton, Creamer, Crittenden, Crossland, Crounse, Crutchfield, Donnan, Dunnell, Durham, Eldredge, Farwell, Field, Fort, Freeman, Giddings, Glover, Hagans, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Havens, John B. Hawley, Hays, Hendee, Hereford, Herndon, Howe, Hunton, Hyde, Hynes, Knapp, Lamison, Lamport, Leach, Lewis, Loughridge, Lowndes, Luttrell, Martin, Maynard, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McJunkin, McKee McLean, McNulta, Milliken, Mills, Moore, Morey, Myers, Neal, Negley, Niblack, Orth, Packard, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Perry, Phillips, Pratt, Purman, Ransier, Ray, Read, Robbins, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Sener, Sheats, Sloss, George L. Smith, J. Ambler Smith, Southard, Stanard, Standiford, Stone, Storm, Strait, Sypher, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Vance, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Wells, White, Whitehead, Whiteley, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, Willie, James Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodford, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—130.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Barber, Biery, Buffinton, Burchard, Burleigh, Cain, Clayton, Cox, Crooke, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, DeWitt, Duell, Eames, Elliott, Frye, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Holman, Houghton, Hunter, Kasson, Kellogg, Killinger, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lynch, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, Merriam, Monroe, O'Brien, Orr, Packer, Hosea W. Parker, Phelps, Pierce, Poland, Rainey, Rapier, Rice, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Sessions, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Smart, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Sprague, Starkweather, Tremain, Waldron, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, Whitthorne, and Charles W. Willard—74.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Beck, Bright, Buckner, Bundy, Benjamin F. Butler, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clinton L. Cobb, Coburn, Corwin, Crocker, Davis, Dawes, Dobbins, Eden, Foster, Hamilton, Hersey, Hodges, Hooper, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Jewett, Kelley, Kendall, Lamar, Lofland, Lowe, Magee, Marshall, Mellish, Mitchell, Morrison, Nesmith, Niles, Nunn, O'Neill, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Potter, Randall, Richmond, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Ross, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Shanks, Sheldon, Sherwood, Sloan, Small, William A. Smith, Snyder, Speer, Stephens, St. John, Stowell, Strawbridge, Swann, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Todd, Townsend, Tyner, Waddell, Wallace, Whitehouse, Wilber, Wilshire, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Woodworth—86.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of going into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the executive, legislative, and judicial appropriation bill, and if necessary will do so by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. RANDALL. I have a motion to submit pending that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have to submit that motion.

Mr. GARFIELD. If we are to save any time to-day for the work in committee, I must insist on my motion now.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 90, noes 61.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not two-thirds.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks upon a full review of the case it is competent for the majority to decide this motion. The new rule requiring a second for the suspension of the rules reads thus:

> All motions to suspend the rules except to go into Committee of the Whole shall, before being submitted to the House, be seconded by a majority as in the case of the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to draw the attention of the Chair to one fact. The Chair stated heretofore in regard to his recognition of one gentleman in preference to others that he was guided by the business they had to submit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will observe that the Chair could not feel justified in standing against the majority of the House if they desired to proceed to public business. The gentleman will see that the Chair could not place himself between the wishes of the majority and the public business by recognizing gentlemen on matters that concerned merely their own local constituencies. It must be, not the Chair, but the majority of the House who should decide.

Mr. RANDALL. There may be other matters of public concern to be brought up under a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. STORM. Do I understand the Chair to rule that a majority may decide to go into Committee of the Whole because the rule so requires, or merely because a majority of the House wish to do so?

The SPEAKER. Of course the rule justifies the decision of the Chair. If a majority desire to go into Committee of the Whole it is not for the Chair to thwart that by recognizing gentlemen to move a suspension of the rules on other questions.

Mr. RANDALL. If I should have a matter of public importance to bring up I understood the effect of the previous ruling of the Chair to be that he would recognize me in preference to any other gentleman.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair is doing. But for an entire Monday, while a very strong majority of the House, or even two-thirds of it, might be desirous of proceeding to the consideration of an appropriation bill, the Chair by recognizing gentlemen on demands for seconding a motion to suspend the rules, to entitle them to the yeas and nays, might be defeating the wishes of the House all day. Now, the purpose of the rule is to promote the public business as the majority shall determine; and the Chair cannot himself feel justified in withholding the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANDALL. The spirit of the rule in regard to Monday is to allow gentlemen to offer matters and ask for their passage or consideration under the two-thirds rule.

The SPEAKER. But the rule does not of course exclude this; because in this very rule amending the previous rule the exception is made, "except to go into Committee of the Whole."

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair will observe that in the printed order of business on Mondays there are "motions for a suspension of the rules."

The SPEAKER. So is this a motion for a suspension of the rules.

Mr. RANDALL. But lacking the two-thirds.

The SPEAKER. It lacks the two-thirds; but the rules give that precedence to the public business that for the promotion of the public business a majority may suspend the rules, but for other business it shall take two-thirds.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the Chair permit me to suggest that I think his ruling should be in favor of Monday being devoted to motions for a suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote, when the five days of the week can be had for other business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks just the reverse. The Chair thinks that, under the operation of the rules, far too little time is now given to the public business. There are but three days of the week which can be devoted now to the public business. The Chair does not desire of course to rule upon the relative merits of business beyond allowing the House to decide for itself.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood the Chair to say that the importance of the business would regulate his recognition of the member asking for a suspension of the rules.

Mr. BECK. My recollection is that the Chair said that he would not recognize any person on Monday who had not told him beforehand what he desired to present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not decide that.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon of the Chair; but I understood the Chair to say that he would require a gentleman to show him beforehand what he desired to submit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair never so decided.

Mr. BECK. Then the House must have misunderstood the Chair, but I think the RECORD will show it to have been as I have stated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided simply this: that if a gentleman had a matter of consequence, and could not get the floor to submit it, he could not hold the Chair accountable for not recognizing him on that matter of consequence if the gentleman had not told him what it was.

Mr. BECK. I understood the Chair to say what I have stated; but the RECORD will show what it was.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was very far from saying anything of the kind. The question came up in the case of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON,] who desired to move an investigation into the affairs of the District of Columbia, the Chair not recognizing that gentleman but recognizing other gentlemen, and afterward there was some complaint that the Chair had not recognized him.

Mr. BECK. There is certainly a very general misunderstanding on the subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair always desires to recognize a gentleman when he has a matter of consequence to submit. But the Chair desires that when a gentleman has a matter which he considers of consequence and does not communicate it to the Chair he should not afterward go to the reporters and say that the Chair refused to recognize him when the Chair did not know what he wanted.

Mr. BECK. The Chair will do me the justice to say that I have made no such statement to the reporters.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not mean the gentleman from Kentucky; not at all; but the Chair does say that in that case it was telegraphed all over the United States that the Speaker had refused to recognize the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON,] when the Speaker was really innocent of any knowledge of what the gentleman from Indiana desired to offer. The Chair then stated that if gentlemen desired recognition by the Chair they had better communicate to the Chair if they had matters of importance.

Now, the gentleman from Kentucky will agree with the Chair that four-fifths of what the House is called upon to vote on on Mondays is not of public importance.

Mr. BECK. I do agree with the Chair in that.

Mr. GARFIELD. That being so, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires that point to be distinctly understood, that he never asked a gentleman in his life, except in a friendly way, what he wished to introduce, and does not desire any gentleman to consider himself under the remotest obligation to tell the Chair what he is going to move a suspension of the rules for. He only desires a gentleman to know that if he chooses not to communicate it to the Chair, he must not complain afterward that the Chair refused to recognize him on that matter.

Mr. LAMAR. I believe I understand that the Chair does not object to being informed beforehand what gentlemen desire to introduce?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The Chair thinks that a gentleman promotes his object in giving the Chair notice, because it is the object of the Chair to give, so far as he can, the utmost latitude to legislation, and the utmost liberty to every member to bring before the House anything he desires to bring before it.

Mr. ROBBINS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. RANDALL. And pending that, I ask consent to offer what I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. It can be offered if there is no objection; it would require unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I will not ask it.

The SPEAKER. The House is dividing on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of Union, and the ayes were 90 and the noes 51. The gentleman from North Carolina asks for the yeas and nays.

The question was put on ordering the yeas and nays; and on a division there were—ayes 22, noes 98; not one-fifth voting therefor.

Mr. ROBBINS. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; only 25 members voting therefor.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BECK. I move that the House adjourn, if we cannot have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order. The Chair will order tellers, although not a sufficient number rose to require tellers; and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GARFIELD, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. BECK, will act as tellers.

Mr. GARFIELD. Why, I thought that tellers were refused.

The SPEAKER. Tellers were not ordered by the House; but the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] intimated that the Chair did not count well, and therefore the Chair orders tellers.

Mr. BECK. What is that remark of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kentucky to intimate that the Chair did not count accurately.

Mr. BECK. I never said any such thing, and never intended anything of the sort; and the Chair has no right to say that I did.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought that was the gentleman's meaning, but if not, then the Chair will not order tellers. Tellers are refused, the yeas and nays are not ordered, and the motion of the gentleman from Ohio is agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 193) for the benefit of Uriah Porter; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2907) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver certain condemned ordnance to the municipal authorities of Concord, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House then resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WOODFORD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The pending paragraph was that making appropriations for the Second Comptroller's office, Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question when the committee rose on Saturday was upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DUELL,] which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the words "chief clerk, $2,000," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Twelve clerks of class four; twenty clerks of class three; twenty-eight clerks of class two; eight clerks of class one; twelve copyists, at $900 each; one messenger, and three laborers; in all, $123,200.

Mr. CONGER. Before the committee rose on Saturday, I had moved pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I now withdraw that motion.

Mr. McCRARY. I renew the motion of the gentleman from Michigan pro forma. I have supported the Committee on Appropriations in all their propositions to cut down expenses, and I desire to do so wherever I can consistently, but feeling that the Bureau of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury was perhaps the most important one in any Department of the Government, I have taken the trouble to look into the question, and I am satisfied the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DUELL] to amend the bill of the committee ought to be adopted.

The committee will observe that the whole number of the clerks allowed in that office under existing law is ninety-two. The Committee on Appropriations propose to cut the number down to sixty-four, being a reduction of twenty-eight. The Second Comptroller has thoroughly examined the business in his office and reports that he can get along with the number proposed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DUELL,] which, I believe, is eighty. That of itself is a reduction of twelve from the number now allowed by law.

If the committee will consider the fact that about 66 per cent. of all the money that is appropriated to carry on the Government, aside from that which goes to the payment of the interest on the public debt, is under the control of the Second Comptroller, it will be seen that there is no Bureau which compares with this in importance.

Every member knows the high character of the gentleman who holds that office; and I think the committee ought to accept his statement, that the number proposed by the amendment now pending is the very lowest number that he can get along with. It is well known to gentlemen who have investigated this question that this is one of the most faithful and efficient of our public officials, and that large sums of money have been saved by his administration of the affairs of that office. This is one of the Bureaus that have discretionary powers in the allowance or disallowance of very large claims. I think it is not good economy to reduce the force in that Bureau below a number sufficient for the proper discharge of the important duties that devolve upon it. I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DUELL] will be adopted by this committee.

Mr. KELLOGG. I rise to oppose the amendment to the amendment, and I shall take but a moment of the time of the Committee of the Whole to say what I desire to say. I agree entirely with what was said on Saturday by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DUELL] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] and what has been said to-day by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCRARY.] I think this office is altogether too important to have its force cut down in the manner which this bill proposes to do. The bill really cuts down the force by twenty-nine clerks. The Second Comptroller agrees that ten clerks may be taken off; but the Committee on Appropriations go further, and propose to take off nineteen more. I do not believe it would be economy to the Government or that it would be well for us to follow the recommendation of the committee. And if the House shall pass the bill as it comes from the Committee on Appropriations I have no doubt that the committee of conference, be the members who they may, will say that it was all wrong, and put the force back again.

In the bill reorganizing the Treasury Department we have made the force in this office eighty-two. But we were satisfied that in that case as well as in others we had put the force too low for a year to come, and therefore we put in an additional section providing for temporary clerks for a year. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DUELL] will prevail.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole for a moment to the facts of this case. The Committee on Appropriations think they have made a mistake in one place in this office, and only one. We did not at the time observe that the Book of Estimates called for a smaller number of clerks than was allowed by the law of last year. Either by accident or design there was in the Book of Estimates a reduction of ten clerks in the grade of first class below the number allowed by the law of last year. Overlooking that fact, or not observing it until the bill got into print, the committee reduced from the number in the Book of Estimates rather than from the number allowed in the bill of last year, and therefore the reduction from last year was twenty-nine instead of nineteen, as we intended. We propose to correct the error in that place; and that correction being made, I think the Committee of the Whole will agree with the Committee on Appropriations.

Let me state briefly how this Bureau of the Treasury Department has grown up. Taking into consideration only the clerks of the three classes and the copyists, not counting the chief clerks and laborers and messengers, there were in this Bureau in 1861 fourteen clerks and in 1862 fourteen clerks. In 1863 the number had been increased to fifty-two, in 1864 to sixty-five, and in 1865 to sixty-nine. In 1867 there were one hundred and seventeen; they reached the top in that year, when the vast accounts of the war had come in. In 1868 they had one hundred and thirteen; in 1869, ninety-four; in 1872, ninety-two; and last year they had eighty-nine, though I believe under the law they were entitled to ninety-three. We examined the Second Comptroller upon this subject, and I have here the notes which were taken at the time. He said that during the last year nine clerks had been lent by his office to the Second Auditor, not used in the Comptroller's office at all. We did not think that the Second Comptroller was in great distress if he could lend nine clerks for the entire year. Furthermore he said that if his force was to be reduced he would have the reduction made in the first and second classes, and admitted that there should be some reduction. Especially considering the fact that nine clerks had been lent for a year, we thought it but fair to cut off that number.

Another fact. There came to the Second Comptroller's office from the Second Auditor, in settling up old Army accounts, accounts to the amount of $176,000,000 in 1872. Last year the accounts amounted to $63,000,000 only, being a falling off of $113,000,000 in the accounts that are passed through that office from the Second Auditor's office. The committee believed that with such a falling off in the amount of work, growing out of a settlement of the old Army accounts, we were justified in making the reduction which we have made, with the correction to which I have referred.

The Committee on Appropriations are willing to consent to an increase of one in the clerks of class four and of seven in the clerks of class one. This will be an increase of eight. As a substitute for the pending amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DUELL,] I move to make these modifications in the pending paragraph: "that of the clerks of class four there shall be twelve instead of eleven, and of the clerks of class one fourteen instead of seven."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCRARY] withdraw his formal amendment?

Mr. McCRARY. Yes, sir. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] what difference his amendment will make as compared with the motion of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GARFIELD. It will simply allow eight clerks more than the bill as it now stands would authorize. It will make a reduction of twenty-one instead of twenty-nine. The amendment of the gentleman from New York would allow a force of eighty; my amendment will make it seventy-two—a difference of eight.

Mr. CONGER. The proposition of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is simply to increase the number of copyists in the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir; first-class clerks.

Mr. CONGER. Well, the first-class are the lowest grade of clerks.

Mr. GARFIELD. There are now twenty-one first-class clerks, and my amendment proposes to make the number fourteen.

Mr. CONGER. But the gentleman proposes to reduce the number of those whose final determination goes to the Comptroller for his signature.

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir; I restore the number of the fourth-class clerks to twelve.

Mr. CONGER. How many were appropriated for last year?

Mr. GARFIELD. Twelve.

Mr. CONGER. If that is the result of the motion, I do not oppose it. I was going to oppose a reduction of the fourth-class clerks, those who perform the highest grade of clerical duty.

Mr. GARFIELD. The bill reduces the number of those, but my amendment makes no reduction.

Mr. GARFIELD's substitute for the amendment of Mr. DUELL was agreed to; and the amendment, as thus amended, was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fourth Auditor:

For the Fourth Auditor, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; five clerks of class four; seventeen clerks of class three; ten clerks of class three; ten clerks of class one; six female clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; and two laborers; in all, $73,200.

Mr. DONNAN. I move to amend the paragraph just read as follows:

Strike out "seventeen" and insert "eighteen," so as to provide for eighteen clerks of class three; strike out "ten" and insert "twelve," so as to provide for twelve clerks of class two; strike out "eight" and insert "eleven," so as to provide for eleven clerks of class one; strike out "two" and insert "three," so as to provide for three laborers.

This amendment will leave the clerical force in the Fourth Auditor's office precisely what it has been since 1870. At the close of the war the clerical force in that Bureau was double what it is now under existing law. The amount of business accruing in that office on account of the war caused an increase in the force; but as that business was gradually disposed of, the force was reduced in 1868 to seventy-seven, and in 1870 to fifty-two. The Fourth Auditor states that this is absolutely the minimum force with which he can perform the duties of the office. Owing to several recent acts of Congress granting relief and indemnity, the current work of the office has been materially increased within the last two or three years. The Auditor states that he really needs four additional clerks for the proper transaction of the current business; but owing to the present feeling and the financial pressure upon the Treasury, he is disposed to ask for no additional force, but will attempt to get along with the present force, although it may require additional hours of labor. But he does ask that the present force be not diminished.

I believe this is one of the few cases in which the Committee on Appropriations have, as was suggested by its chairman the other day, cut too deep. I ask the House that the clerical force of this office be left where it has been for the last three years. It has been shown by the statement made to the Committee on Appropriations by the Fourth Auditor, who we all know is a worthy and trusted officer, that the current work of his office is now increased over what it has been within the last two or three years. I believe that the Committee on Appropriations will not seriously oppose this amendment, and I trust that it may be adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. The duties of the Fourth Auditor's office are grouped into seven divisions. One has charge of questions relating to prize-money; another of claims; another of paymasters' accounts; another of book-keepers' accounts; another of pensions; another of accounts of Navy agents; and another is known as the record division. Gentlemen will see by this statement that the business of this office is very considerably related to the war, including both the Army and the Navy.

The Fourth Auditor's office when the war began was a modest division with a force of only fourteen persons. Of course, during and immediately after the war the force was very much greater. It is still forty-nine, being more than three times as many as the office had when the war began. It seemed to us that several of these divisions—and we heard the Fourth Auditor's statement——

Mr. STARKWEATHER. In the prize-money division, for instance, not one-fourth the business is done now that was done four years ago.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is true. The business in several of these divisions, as gentlemen will see, must necessarily have fallen off as the result of settling up the accounts of the war. We only propose to cut that office down by taking away six clerks and one laborer. At the same time we increase by one the number of copyists; so that a net reduction of five clerks and one laborer is all that we propose.

There is one other thing to which I wish to refer in this connection. We have inserted in this bill a section which, should it be adopted, will, we think, fully make up for any reduction of force which we have made in this office. We propose to require that there shall be seven hours' work done daily in the several Departments. It is a notorious fact that all over the country business men employ their clerks, book-keepers, and laborers for more time, almost double the time, that we employ ours in the several Executive Departments; and the Committee on Appropriations believe it is high time we tried to put these Departments on a business basis. During the war the clerks worked seven or eight hours, but when the war was over and business began to slacken they have run down in the time of their daily service. Clerks now go to the Departments at nine o'clock in the morning and come away at three, and during the summer weather three o'clock is but a little past the middle of the day. They can carry on a profession outside while they are acting as clerks in the Departments. If we increase the hours of labor it will be just, and at the same time we will get quite as much work done with a reduction of the force as we propose as with the force now employed at the present hours of labor.

Mr. DONNAN. Let me make a suggestion to the gentleman from Ohio. By recent law Congress required that all disbursing officers shall render their accounts every three months instead of every three years, and that has largely increased the labor of the clerks in that Bureau.

Mr. GARFIELD. Their labors have been increased; but it has been running on in the same way for three years.

Mr. KELLOGG. The number of clerks and copyists provided for in this appropriation bill is forty-seven, which is a reduction from the present number, fifty-three; and that is precisely the number we have fixed in the bill reorganizing the Treasury Department; but we at the same time added a section to our bill authorizing the employment of one hundred clerks for one year to give an opportunity to finish up the old business.

And I will say in regard to the Fourth Auditor's office one word more. I think a large sum has been saved by changing the old rule requiring the paymasters of the Navy to make settlements only every three years, or at the end of a three years' cruise, to the present one requiring them to send in monthly statements, and to make a settlement at the end of every three months. That makes twelve settlements where formerly they had but one, and necessarily calls for more clerical labor.

The following statement will show that the number of clerks in the office has been reduced from one hundred and four in 1865 to fifty-three in 1873. I think if we should continue the present force for one year to come they will then be able to get along with a smaller force.

Statement showing the number of clerks employed in the office of the Fourth Auditor in each year from 1865 to 1873, inclusive.

Year.	Clerks.	Copyists.	Total.
1865	90	14	104
1866	76	13	89
1867	69	12	81
1868	67	10	77
1869	60	8	68
1870	46	8	54
1871	46	8	54
1872	46	7	53
1873	46	6	52

The present force is as follows:

One chief clerk, at $2,000 per annum; five fourth-class clerks, at $1,800 per annum; eighteen third-class clerks, at $1,600 per annum; twelve second-class clerks, at $1,400 per annum; eleven first-class clerks, at $1,200 per annum; six copyists, at $900.

Whole number, including chief clerk, 53.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department:

For compensation of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; nine clerks of class four, and, additional to one clerk of class four as disbursing clerk, $200; fifty-seven clerks of class three, sixty-nine clerks of class two, thirty-seven clerks of class one, one messenger, one assistant messenger, and eighteen laborers; also, fifteen female assorters of money-orders, at $900 each; in all, $281,620.

For ten assorters of money-orders, $10,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I see a provision there for ten assorters of money-orders, $10,000. No such persons were provided for in the last appropriation bill, and I should like to have some explanation of this paragraph.

Mr. GARFIELD. Here is an increase, Mr. Chairman, in this section, and I will state to the committee the reason for it. The office of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department is one which was not affected by the war otherwise than to be reduced. And indeed it is curious to observe the effect of the war upon the different Departments of the Government. Nearly all the offices of the Treasury were vastly increased in their duties as a result of the war. But in the case of the Post-Office Department eleven States were cut off, and the returns of business from them ceased to have any relation to the Post-Office Department, and of course accounts and adjustments relating to that Department were all correspondingly decreased. After the war, however, the South began to come back—even yet we have not fully restored the South to all its postal relations to the Union—but ever since the war there has been a steady increase in the accounts and business of the Post-Office Department.

Aside from the effect of the war upon it perhaps no one fact has worked so important a revolution in the business of the Post-Office Department as the introduction of the money-order system. That system has been increasing with great rapidity, and has more than doubled within the last two years. Among the other duties connected with it is the necessity of having every money-order as it comes back to the central Post-Office examined, recorded, and assorted by States and filed away, so as to have a perfect body of accounts and vouchers and everything relating to the money-order business; and the Postmaster-General has requested a very considerable increase of the force.

In the Sixth Auditor's office, which is called an office of the Treasury, but is nevertheless in the position of doing wholly Post-Office business, the committee were satisfied there should be an increase of clerical force; but we did not give so much of an increase as the Postmaster-General asked. We gave him in fact about one-half the increase which he asked. We found that a certain class of the work, the assorting of these money-orders, could be as well performed by ladies as by gentlemen, and we therefore took this lower class of pay, such as is assigned to the copyists. We do not wish, however, to call them copyists, as that would be a misnomer. The business is not to copy but to assort the returned orders, classify them, and have them in a shape for preservation. We follow, therefore, the recommendation of the Postmaster-General and call them assorters of money-orders, and we have given him fifteen instead of the twenty-five he asked for.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that within the last three years, by this paragraph of the appropriation bill, the salaries in the Sixth Auditor's office are increased $52,740.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to say that I forgot to add that the estimate for the Sixth Auditor's office for this year was $311,000, and we give $281,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I find that in 1871 the appropriation was $228,880. In this bill it is $281,620; so that there is an increase in these three years of $52,740.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I desire to say in regard to this money-order business that the first year it amounted to only two or three thousand orders daily. Now the number of money-orders examined every day is fifteen thousand; and the class of labor here provided is required for that work. The Post-Office Department say that in the course of a year the number will go up to twenty or twenty-five thousand daily. This money-order business has created some expense in the way of additional clerks, &c.; but it more than pays for itself. There has been a very great increase in the business, and it is a very great accommodation to the people. While this reform makes an increase in the expenses of the Post-Office Department, it more than pays all the expense after all. I yield the balance of my time to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. TYNER.]

Mr. TYNER. If the Committee of the Whole has any doubt as to the propriety of making a slight increase of the clerical force in the Sixth Auditor's office, I think I can relieve that doubt by a very brief statement. The only increase in the pending paragraph of the appropriation bill over last year is for the employment of fifteen assorters. There is no other increase over the appropriation of last year, and only a slight increase over the appropriation of the year before.

I have before me a tabular statement of appropriations for the clerical force in the Sixth Auditor's office for several years past to which I desire to call the attention of my colleague, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who seems to have raised that question. For the year ending June 30, 1873, the appropriation amounted to $266,660. For the next year, the year ending June 30, 1874, that is the current fiscal year, it amounted to $281,620. We propose in this bill the same appropriation as for the fiscal year that we are now concluding.

I have said already that the additional appropriation asked for was for the employment of these assorters. My colleague on the Committee on Appropriations has stated the reason why it was necessary to employ these additional persons. There are now, sir, in existence over twenty-eight hundred money-order offices. These money-order offices submit daily accounts of their business, and the result is that there are between fifteen and eighteen thousand money-orders that have to be assorted and checked every day by the clerks in the Sixth Auditor's office. And when I tell the committee, without taking up any more of its time, that every one of these money-orders has to be assorted and checked three different times, which is equivalent to assorting and checking forty-five thousand orders every day, they will see the necessity for the appointment of this additional force.

All this money-order business has sprung up, we may say, within the last eight or nine years; and when I say to the committee that the net revenue derived from the money-order business for the last fiscal year was $68,584 over and above all the expenses of transacting the business, the committee will at once see that it is a business which pays for itself and that we ought not to be stingy in employing persons to perform it.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that they have increased also the number of clerks in class three from forty-nine to fifty-seven.

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes; I should have mentioned that. The increase in both cases is for the same reason; both these classes are employed in managing the money-order business. My attention was more especially called to the other. I think it is very proper that when there is an increase in the business, there should be some corresponding increase in the persons who take charge of it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to say that after a thorough investigation of the Sixth Auditor's office, I do not think the committee have increased the force in the office so much as they ought to have increased it. I have tables here which I will not occupy the time of the committee in reading, but which show that while in ten years the clerical force has been increased four and a fraction per cent., the business has been increased 16 per cent. in the Sixth Auditor's office, where all the money-order business and business of a like nature are taken charge of. The bill we propose gives two hundred and twenty-eight clerks to the Sixth Auditor's office, while the present bill gives two hundred and nineteen, the number last year being two hundred and nine. I think they need this force to get along.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee why a discrimination is made between the pay of male and female assorters who all perform the same service?

Mr. GARFIELD. They are not of the same class. It was found necessary to have ten persons as assorters who are able to lift very heavy books, and they have to be men; the lady clerks could not perform that work.

The Clerk read as follows:

Treasurer:

For compensation of the Treasurer of the United States, $6,500; assistant treasurer, $3,800; cashier, $3,800; assistant cashier, $3,500; five chiefs of division, at $2,700 each; two principal book-keepers, one at $2,600 and one at $2,500; two tellers, one at $2,700 and one at $2,600; one chief clerk, $2,700; two assistant tellers, at $2,350 each; thirteen clerks of class four; thirteen clerks of class three; nine clerks of class two; eight clerks of class one; sixty female clerks, at $900 each; seven messengers; five male laborers, at $720 each, and seven female laborers, at $240 each; in all, $180,460.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to direct the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the salary of the assistant treasurer, which, I believe, is increased by this bill $1,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will remember that for the last six years Congress has given $8,500 to the Secretary of the Treasury to enable him to give such increased salaries to the more important officers in the Treasurer's office—General Spinner's office—and it has been considered as much the law that they should receive that addition as though we had ourselves distributed it. The committee simply followed the distribution that was made last year and had regularly been made for several years past. If the House thinks that that distribution is unwise and ought to be made differently, let us make it differently; but we have followed simply what has been known to be the distribution during that time.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman what this officer did receive last year; first under the law and second by favoritism, out of the "slush-fund?"

Mr. GARFIELD. I will tell the gentleman. On the thirty-first page of the report accompanying this bill he will find the statement that the assistant treasurer received $1,000 out of the distributive fund.

Mr. RANDALL. What is his salary by law?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Twenty-five hundred dollars.

Mr. GARFIELD. I believe it is $2,500.

Mr. RANDALL. And he received $1,000 in addition to that?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. And now you have raised the salary to $3,800?

Mr. GARFIELD. No; we have not raised it above what he actually got last year.

Mr. RANDALL. My question is whether you have not raised it over both the amounts he received last year?

Mr. GARFIELD. No; we have not. The assistant treasurer received $3,800 last year; $2,800 by law and $1,000 out of the distributive fund.

Mr. RANDALL. I observe that the salary of the cashier is increased in the same way $1,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. The cashier received $1,000 from the distributive fund, and the assistant cashier received $1,000, and several of the chiefs of divisions received $500 each. Those divisions are recognized in a special act. They are not Bureaus created by the Secretary.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object to that part of it; but the principal book-keepers received $2,200 last year, and this year they receive $2,600.

Mr. GARFIELD. The principal book-keepers, and the tellers and assistant tellers, and the chief clerk, received additional amounts out of the distributive fund last year, and all we have done is just to add the $8,500 to what is given to these officers by the law according to the distribution which has been made for some years past.

Mr. RANDALL. Then in repealing the act which allowed this $8,500 to the Secretary as a distributive fund we have not in fact saved anything; we have only placed the salaries of these officers on a more legitimate footing.

Mr. GARFIELD. In repealing the $22,500 allowed as a distributive fund in the Secretary's office we saved more than half, but here it seemed to the committee that this was a reasonable distribution. The special duties of the divisions of General Spinner's office are so very important and so very large an amount of money is handled by the officers, that it is of the utmost importance that men of sufficient character and of sufficient ability that they can be trusted should be in those places, and we did not wish to take the responsibility of doing what the chief of that Bureau himself says would cripple the efficiency of his force, and we therefore made this distribution.

Mr. MERRIAM. I would ask the gentleman if the assistant treasurers everywhere else do not receive $5,000 a year, excepting in New York, where the salary is $8,500?

Mr. GARFIELD. I believe the gentleman from New York is right. But the assistant treasurer, for instance, in New Orleans, or in Philadelphia, or in any one of these cities, must, of course, be the head of the establishment there. The assistant treasurer here is a subordinate to his chief, and of course it does not need so high a grade of quality to be lieutenant to a chief here as it does to be head of a separate establishment in another city.

Mr. MERRIAM. He acts as chief when his chief is absent.

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes; but his chief, excepting for a little time this spring, has hardly ever been absent in his life.

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire to ask the gentleman one question. I would ask if he has not divided up the fund of $8,500 so as to give the officers precisely what they had during the last three or four years?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is not that right?

Mr. GARFIELD. We think so.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think so, too. Now, I ask the gentleman if the committee did not in regard to the divisions in the Secretary of the Treasury's office adopt the same rule in the bill as first reported, and if they did not afterward cut down the salaries?

Mr. GARFIELD. No; we cut them down in the bill as reported.

Mr. KELLOGG. I admit that; but you know you put in $3,000 first, just as they had been getting. I stand by the committee now, and I wish the committee had stood by itself in the first part of this bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. You have had your election; now let us vote.

Mr. MERRIAM. I know this assistant treasurer has been offered $5,000 a year to take a position elsewhere.

Mr. RANDALL. He had better take it, then.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

Commissioner of Internal Revenue:

For Commissioner of Internal Revenue, $6,000; deputy commissioner, $3,500; seven heads of divisions, at $2,500 each; thirty clerks of class four; forty-three clerks of class three; forty-two clerks of class two; fifteen clerks of class one; seventy-five copyists, at $900 each; five messengers; two assistant messengers; and twelve laborers; in all, $308,380.

Mr. GARFIELD. By a mistake, either in the committee or in the printing office, one deputy commissioner has been left out. I move, therefore, to amend the bill so as to provide for two deputy commissioners, at $3,500 each. There are now three deputies; the committee desire to reduce the number one, but by some accident the number is reduced in this bill by two.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to substitute for the pending paragraph, as amended, that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Commissioner of Internal Revenue, $4,000; two deputy commissioners, $2,500 each; three heads of divisions, $2,000 each; twenty-three clerks of class four; thirty-nine clerks of class three; forty-two clerks of class two; fifteen clerks of class one; fifty copyists, at $900 each; three messengers, at $840 each; two assistant messengers and ten laborers, at $720 each; in all, $248,760.

Mr. GARFIELD. I raise the point of order that the amendment proposes a change in the law.

Mr. RANDALL. It does propose a change in the salary of the Commissioner, and this is the only time in my life that I have been in favor of nullifying the law. The law now gives the commissioner $6,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. The salary, as fixed by law, cannot be reduced.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be compelled to rule the substitute out of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I will change my amendment so as to make the salary of the Commissioner $6,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the Chair rule that salaries cannot be reduced in an appropriation bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is fixed by law at $6,000 a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it not in order to appropriate a less sum than that?

The CHAIRMAN. To pay him less than $6,000?

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it not in order to appropriate a less sum?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HOLMAN. The ruling has always been to the contrary; we can refuse to appropriate at all for a given officer.

The CHAIRMAN. This debate is not pertinent, because the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has modified his amendment so as to make it conform with the law.

Mr. RANDALL. I have changed it so as to make it in order beyond dispute. The first three officers who held the position of Commissioner of Internal Revenue were Mr. BOUTWELL, Mr. Lewis, and Mr. Orton, and they received but $3,500 a year. If I recollect aright the salary was changed to $6,000 a year during Mr. Rollins's term of office. My amendment provides for the exact force in this Bureau which was employed in December, 1866. During that fiscal year there was collected of internal revenue the sum of $311,000,000. The operations of the office reached every business, every pursuit, every article of consumption. Last year there was derived from internal revenue, I think, but $110,000,000, and the estimates of the Department for the coming fiscal year is but $100,000,000.

I maintain, and I do not think my assertion can be successfully contradicted, that the force which was sufficient in 1866 to collect over $300,000,000 should be able to collect not only the amount of the present fiscal year, but the estimated receipts, according to the showing of the Department, for the next fiscal year of only $100,000,000. I think that statement too plain for contradiction, and therefore it is that I have offered this amendment.

In addition I will say that the number of reports in 1866 were vastly greater than the number of reports at the present time from various sources. This I showed in some remarks that I made about a month ago, which, by the by, remain uncontradicted in any particular. I maintain that this Internal-Revenue Department has not only not decreased in proportion to the decrease of revenue collected by the Government, which is now but one dollar where it was three in 1866, but the absolute expenses of this Bureau have been greatly augmented and the number of clerks greatly added to, with a reduced amount of revenue received. I should like to hear some explanation of this if it is possible, or else I would like to have the committee adopt my amendment, which proposes a saving of $60,000 a year, no public interest being injured thereby.

The question was upon the amendment moved by Mr. RANDALL; and upon a division there were—ayes 44, noes 75.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not a quorum I must insist upon tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RANDALL and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 95.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend by striking out "two deputies" and inserting "one deputy." There are now so many officers in that Bureau that they stand in each other's way.

Mr. GARFIELD. We have just adopted an amendment to provide for two deputies instead of one; and it is not in order to strike out what has been inserted by a vote of the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move to amend by striking out "seven" and inserting "three," so as to provide for "three heads of division," as it 1867, instead of seven.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the committee will allow me to say a word——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes; he is a genial enemy on this occasion.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; I am not genial, but very stubborn when I am doing right.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations propose in this bill a very considerable reduction in the force of the Internal Revenue Bureau—a greater reduction than the Committee on Ways and Means, whom we consulted, recommended us to make. I was desirous, and so were the Committee on Appropriations, that we should in nowise cripple so important a Bureau as that, which has charge of collecting the whole of our internal revenue—an organization that collects in the neighborhood of $125,000,000 a year from so many interior sources. I am well aware that the business of this Bureau has been vastly cut down by the repeal of internal taxes; but everybody knows that it takes more force proportionally to collect a few small taxes than it does to collect great taxes. That is a perfectly plain proposition. The number of accounts that must pass through the hands of the internal-revenue officers is relatively much greater in proportion to the $125,000,000 or $150,000,000 we now collect than when $300,000,000 or $400,000,000 were collected. The force in that Bureau cannot be gauged by the amount of revenue collected. If it could be there might be a greater reduction.

I will, however, state the reduction which we propose. One deputy commissioner has been recently abolished by law. Instead of thirty-four clerks of class four we propose to allow thirty; a reduction of four. Instead of forty-eight clerks of class three we allow forty-three; a reduction of five. Instead of twenty clerks of class one we allow fifteen; instead of seven messengers, five; instead of three assistant messengers, two; instead of fifteen laborers, twelve. The number of copyists we do not disturb. By these reductions we diminish the expense for salaries in the Internal-Revenue Bureau from $354,140 to $308,380—a reduction of $46,000. I think this is all the reduction we can safely make. It is a considerably greater reduction than the Committee on Ways and Means, with whom we consulted, were willing to recommend. But in view of the fact that we propose an increase of the hours of labor we thought we might make a reduction to this extent. I shall be pleased to hear from gentlemen of the Committee on Ways and Means on this subject.

Mr. BECK. I rise to oppose the amendment. I had hoped it would not be necessary for me to take any part in this debate; but as reference has been made to the Committee on Ways and Means, of which I am a member, and as that committee intrusted the examination of the Internal-Revenue Bureau to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] and myself, and as we have looked into the subject with a great deal of care, I feel bound to state why we made the report that we did.

As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is aware, (for I have shown him the paper,) I have here a comparative statement of the number of persons employed by the Internal Revenue Bureau December 1, 1866, and December 1, 1873. I submit that statement as showing the reduction which has been made in the force of that Bureau:

Comparative statement of number of persons employed by the Internal-Revenue Bureau December 1, 1866, and December 1, 1873.

	December 1, 1866.	December 1, 1873.
Collectors	241	225
Deputy collectors	1,850	882
Assessors	241	.....
Assistant assessors, at $5 per diem	3,318	None.
Tobacco inspectors, paid by fees	748	19
Revenue inspectors, at $4 per diem	178	None.
Inspectors of coal-oil, paid by fees	106	None.
Inspectors of distilled spirits, paid by fees	1,309	None.
General inspectors of distilleries, paid by fees	393	None.
Special agents	10	None.
Revenue agents	12	25
Store-keepers, from $4 to $5 per diem	.....	942
Gangers, fees	.....	987
Surveyors of distilleries	.....	150
Supervisors	.....	10
Commissioner, $6,000 per annum	1	1
Deputy commissioners	2	3
Solicitor, $4,000	1	None.
Heads of divisions, at $2,500 per annum	3	7
Fourth class clerks, at $1,800	23	33
Third-class clerks, at $1,600	39	47
Second-class clerks, at $1,400	42	45
First-class clerks, at $1,200	15	35
Copyists, at $900	51	84
Messengers, at $1,000	4	1
Messengers, at $840	3	8
Laborers, at $720	9	27
Laborers, at $300	.....	2
Grand total	8,599	3,533

Another reason why a greater reduction of force could not be made in the office of the Commissioner at Washington is that last year we abolished the offices of assessors and assistant assessors of internal revenue, the assessors numbering something more than two hundred and twenty, all of whom received large salaries. At the same time we abolished more than two hundred and twenty clerks and eleven hundred and fifty assistant assessors. I have here, and submit in connection with these remarks, a statement by districts, being a close approximation of the saving that was made to the Government by dispensing with the assessors, assistant assessors, their clerks, &c.

Statement by districts of approximate saving made by dispensing with assessors, assistant assessors, their clerks, &c.

Districts.	Cost of assessing and collecting under the old system, 1873. Assessing.	Collecting.	Total.	Cost of collecting, new system, 1874.	Collections, 1873.
Alabama, 1st	$15,317 68	$9,750 00	$25,067 68	$8,700	$81,836 63
2d	16,883 86	9,950 00	26,833 86	9,200	40,369 94
3d	5,222 00	6,300 00	11,522 00	6,600	30,286 78
Arizona	3,588 34	3,680 00	7,268 34	4,100	13,562 73
Arkansas, 1st	6,234 26	4,150 00	10,384 26	5,750	23,252 19
2d	7,494 16	6,920 00	14,414 16	5,910	37,482 57
3d	6,685 98	4,300 00	10,985 98	5,300	28,126 26
California, 1st	34,281 34	25,200 00	77,971 14	42,700	1,990,602 83
	10,329 80	8,160 00			113,445 41
4th	13,099 82	8,900 00	21,999 82	13,130	174,218 97
5th	8,230 16	7,900 00	16,130 16	9,480	89,643 86
Colorado	7,714 88	8,000 00	15,714 88	8,850	75,749 64
Connecticut, 1st	5,518 64	5,198 32	28,778 90	11,670	498,758 69
	9,957 24	8,104 70			51,390 01
2d	8,000 24	5,708 26	27,678 88	10,850	194,806 04
	8,856 42	5,113 96			129,030 25
Dakota	3,926 18	2,200 00	6,126 18	3,800	7,597 34
Delaware	9,782 92	3,250 00	13,032 92	8,900	429,392 88
District of Columbia	9,458 16	4,225 26	13,683 42	7,930	133,424 58
Florida	10,811 68	7,700 00	18,511 68	9,740	158,142 21
Georgia, 1st	15,651 96	6,400 00	22,051 96	7,750	90,492 97
2d	12,746 68	7,300 00	20,046 68	11,150	57,361 33
3d	15,405 40	6,800 00	22,205 40	11,150	117,647 87
4th	13,791 08	7,350 00	21,141 08	11,690	212,457 73
Idaho	7,563 88	4,000 00	11,563 88	6,080
Illinois, 1st	32,601 38	15,564 40	48,165 78	24,650	6,798,288 11
2d	4,638 46	3,987 92	8,626 38	5,400	60,209 18
3d	11,101 36	7,365 68	18,470 04	8,450	550,937 78
4th	11,315 44	7,657 64	18,973 08	10,650	1,203,453 25
5th	23,625 18	11,857 96	35,493 14	14,250	4,766,975 11
6th	7,411 58	6,500 00	13,911 58	6,400	354,950 98
7th	5,823 44	5,234 80	11,058 24	5,925	170,921 89
8th	13,047 28	16,400 00	29,447 28	13,400	1,866,513 65
9th	4,417 26	5,750 00	10,167 26	6,000	135,419 32
10th	5,397 20	3,688 76	9,085 96	6,950	53,687 14
11th	2,117 16	2,318 76	4,435 92	4,400	29,236 40
12th	7,706 00	7,531 44	15,237 44	7,000	457,274 96
13th	6,097 04	2,801 90	8,898 94	5,150	45,301 57
Indiana, 1st	12,435 58	7,330 48	19,766 06	10,350	952,972 93
2d	4,943 28	3,818 12	8,761 40	6,000	96,651 70
3d	5,383 50	8,894 40	14,277 90	6,238	582,858 35
4th	9,685 82	10,808 76	20,494 58	9,925	2,407,099 98
5th	3,672 64	2,755 76	6,428 40	3,625	36,512 98

Statement by districts, &c.—Continued.

Districts.	Cost of assessing and collecting under the old system, 1873. Assessing.	Collecting.	Total.	Cost of collecting, new system, 1874.	Collections, 1873.
Indiana, 6th	$7,613 18	$6,895 84	$14,509 02	$6,300	$467,826 35
7th	6,492 96	6,061 64	12,491 60	7,750	562,012 78
8th	5,194 06	4,950 72	10,144 78	4,925	252,993 97
9th	4,746 00	5,171 84	9,917 84	5,490	122,828 20
10th	4,112 72	3,696 56	7,809 28	5,100	66,820 97
11th	3,105 12	4,750 00	7,855 12	5,625	29,654 30
Iowa, 1st	5,927 20	5,495 08	11,422 28	6,070	175,697 96
2d	6,361 26	5,897 92	12,259 18	6,050	262,438 55
3d	6,817 96	7,664 00	14,481 96	7,500	412,006 68
4th	2,157 79	5,318 12	7,475 91	6,175	53,106 82
5th	3,868 78	4,000 40	7,868 78	6,000	55,485 34
6th	4,384 78	3,420 00	7,804 78	5,320	54,261 94
Kansas	12,242 26	7,495 00	19,737 26	10,400	161,469 76
Kentucky, 1st	8,611 20	6,000 00	14,611 20	6,925	191,598 40
2d	9,069 36	5,664 32	14,733 68	7,650	253,464 40
3d	7,754 60	4,686 62	12,441 22	5,032	118,641 50
4th	10,249 36	6,744 66	16,994 02	8,750	329,211 58
5th	17,336 08	10,024 36	27,360 44	13,100	1,832,197 50
6th	16,409 92	11,413 16	27,823 08	14,698	1,615,782 40
7th	14,667 52	11,830 38	26,497 90	12,475	872,323 96
8th	9,626 36	4,983 82	14,610 18	7,550	141,330 52
9th	6,818 38	5,500 00	12,318 38	7,350	102,078 21
Louisiana, 1st	23,493 72	13,370 00	36,863 72	18,820	1,261,368 61
2d	10,181 14	7,960 00	18,141 14	8,810	42,947 66
3d	9,454 26	7,000 00	16,454 26	9,150	32,291 03
Maine, 1st	4,553 18	4,879 60	9,432 78	4,350	124,363 19
2d	4,416 55	2,328 78	6,745 10	4,240	27,868 53
3d	3,249 32	2,513 72	5,763 56	3,325	19,108 03
4th	3,990 72	2,407 24	6,397 96	3,500	25,864 49
5th	3,328 06	2,175 60	5,503 66	3,400	17,492 02
Maryland, 1st	16,189 60	7,623 68	23,813 28	12,500	740,755 74
3d	27,719 90	11,858 72	39,578 62	21,000	1,570,819 21
4th	7,464 76	4,667 60	12,132 36	6,400	92,965 49
5th	9,161 04	7,539 84	16,700 88	8,600	249,261 39
Massachusetts, 1st	6,475 20	4,659 84	11,135 04	5,150	132,328 98
2d	5,313 56	3,351 60	8,665 16	5,450	51,984 18
3d	21,419 10	10,030 08	31,449 18	14,580	1,488,143 26
4th	18,499 68	9,099 00	27,598 68	13,000	552,823 85
5th	10,953 38	6,368 84	17,322 22	7,500	319,630 49
6th	9,537 16	9,736 52	19,273 68	9,750	631,677 91
7th	7,000 68	3,937 32	10,938 00	7,500	89,167 25
8th	7,034 06	2,760 94	9,795 00	5,300	55,300 99
9th	9,066 56	3,777 34	12,843 90	7,400	62,862 94
10th	10,333 44	6,816 92	17,150 36	8,500	377,065 10
Michigan, 1st	13,480 30	7,700 00	21,180 30	11,325	1,673,968 46
2d	4,805 64	4,701 88	9,507 52	5,305	57,741 26
3d	7,114 70	3,903 20	11,017 90	6,850	103,442 62
4th	5,445 92	4,097 12	9,543 04	5,850	94,569 34
5th	2,833 22	3,132 56	5,965 78	4,700	48,489 90
6th	8,540 04	6,590 84	14,130 88	7,750	227,509 14
Minnesota, 1st	6,153 74	4,350 00	10,503 74	7,700	69,351 50
2d	10,132 10	6,500 00	16,632 10	8,750	162,053 44
Mississippi, 1st	10,416 24	4,650 00	15,066 24	5,750	32,102 34
2d	10,606 46	8,900 00	19,506 46	8,850	49,865 07
3d	10,113 24	7,375 00	17,488 24	6,750	46,111 90
Missouri, 1st	24,428 44	17,010 00	41,438 44	23,850	3,323,795 53
2d	8,524 00	7,880 00	16,404 00	8,130	100,750 96
3d	6,177 94	4,861 12	11,039 06	5,750	119,562 51
4th	5,059 14	5,193 48	10,252 62	6,750	208,442 06
5th	11,712 36	5,158 68	16,871 04	8,230	112,208 33
6th	12,949 06	10,900 00	23,849 06	11,200	394,559 76
Montana	9,675 44	8,275 00	17,950 44	8,700	24,018 11
Nebraska	5,988 18	6,500 00	12,488 18	11,740	242,962 38
Nevada	6,992 00	9,210 00	16,202 00	10,120	72,305 32
New Hampshire, 1st	5,057 18	5,407 24	10,464 42	4,850	200,387 70
2d	4,564 08	5,693 72	10,257 80	4,575	104,918 85
3d	3,556 82	2,485 16	6,041 98	3,700	20,148 81
New Jersey, 1st	5,003 90	4,996 00	9,999 90	6,200	139,553 31
2d	8,714 90	5,261 76	13,976 66	8,850	273,948 36
3d	15,853 28	7,888 40	23,741 68	10,945	526,359 72
4th	12,960 90	6,092 76	19,053 66	7,900	341,587 24
5th	18,117 62	11,250 00	29,367 62	18,750	1,285,903 74
New Mexico	7,525 36	5,487 00	13,012 36	6,950	23,237 51
New York, 1st	71,058 02	20,650 00	91,708 02	34,600	4,029,458 55
2d	38,121 18	20,950 00	59,071 18	28,650	2,433,782 46
3d	38,168 06	10,850 00	49,018 06	31,800	1,961,195 36
8th	21,536 82	12,400 00	33,936 82	15,100	802,156 96
9th	24,976 14	11,135 00	36,111 14	17,514	1,007,992 39
10th	13,077 98	8,918 96	21,996 94	11,350	529,219 27
11th	10,147 38	5,352 98	15,500 36	7,200	156,637 68
12th	9,620 18	6,511 88	16,132 06	6,800	260,785 63
13th	5,018 42	5,126 90	10,145 32	5,060	119,638 13
14th	12,546 28	7,762 00	20,308 28	10,050	1,242,623 17
15th	10,637 78	5,650 16	16,287 94	6,550	226,780 20
16th	3,689 38	2,847 84	6,537 22	4,130	30,924 33
17th	3,622 68	2,380 96	6,003 64	4,250	30,515 32
18th	6,754 54	5,152 64	11,907 18	5,140	119,447 73
19th	4,113 60	3,155 84	7,269 44	3,630	44,244 36
20th	3,943 86	2,846 78	6,790 64	4,150	54,590 22
21st	8,608 64	5,862 52	14,471 16	6,230	294,446 82
22d	7,869 90	3,985 20	11,855 10	4,450	103,207 28
23d	10,663 94	7,323 56	17,987 50	7,950	412,925 26
24th	8,976 94	7,022 76	15,999 70	8,150	483,655 08
25th	5,065 56	3,416 02	8,481 58	4,100	114,755 69
26th	4,734 72	5,070 92	9,805 64	5,750	173,785 96
27th	5,028 68	6,371 50	11,400 18	7,450	157,384 42
28th	11,456 46	7,742 18	19,198 64	7,344	576,558 71
29th	6,553 24	3,847 32	10,400 56	5,840	80,609 08
30th	23,875 68	9,215 00	33,090 68	16,725	1,541,746 87
32d	36,355 82	21,050 00	57,405 82	27,250	2,230,437 59
North Carolina, 1st	11,484 16	4,050 00	15,534 16	6,675	38,892 73

Statement by districts, &c.—Continued.

Districts.	Cost of assessing and collecting under the old system, 1873.			Cost of collecting, new system, 1874.	Collections, 1873.
	Assessing.	Collecting.	Total.
North Carolina, 2d	$9,217 52	$5,460 00	$14,677 52	$7,930	$57,244 85
3d	10,295 80	5,800 00	16,095 80	8,700	33,868 86
4th	19,470 28	9,000 00	28,470 28	15,100	449,684 85
5th	16,735 28	9,500 00	26,235 28	13,350	543,251 86
6th	14,214 14	8,300 00	22,514 14	13,250	252,126 40
7th	9,420 16	5,615 00	15,035 16	8,350	33,252 17
Ohio, 1st	39,131 88	17,717 40	56,849 28	24,670	7,161,277 20
2d*
3d	16,462 50	10,191 40	26,653 90	15,400	1,495,458 80
4th	7,840 86	6,902 68	14,743 54	6,620	699,070 56
5th	3,926 06	3,500 62	7,426 68	4,345	64,737 83
6th	6,985 26	7,286 88	14,272 14	7,120	625,625 11
7th	9,409 66	7,963 70	17,373 36	7,455	495,343 53
8th	3,740 60	3,270 56	7,011 16	3,900	31,435 30
9th	9,057 14	7,351 00	16,408 14	7,800	749,461 97
10th	10,750 66	8,571 04	19,321 70	9,900	1,091,836 75
11th	8,314 12	6,866 88	15,181 00	7,050	575,446 58
12th	7,456 14	6,029 16	13,485 30	6,600	580,975 06
13th	5,137 06	3,685 88	8,822 94	5,410	69,988 15
14th	4,021 30	3,087 20	7,108 50	4,475	56,144 42
15th	3,558 88	4,500 00	8,058 88	5,125	93,001 34
16th	5,050 18	5,687 41	10,737 59	5,675	72,540 14
17th	5,129 34	5,660 72	10,790 06	5,155	204,827 07
18th	15,484 60	8,850 00	24,334 60	12,465	720,189 71
19th	3,500 00	3,511 68	7,011 68	5,850	63,949 93
Oregon	8,038 12	6,500 00	14,538 12	8,280	73,544 48
Pennsylvania, 1st	36,099 08	9,714 54	45,813 62	23,700	1,383,508 05
2d	39,298 54	12,021 62	51,320 16	21,420	1,739,755 19
5th	12,281 84	5,022 52	17,304 36	10,900	354,693 33
6th	12,297 38	5,563 68	17,861 06	11,400	359,983 79
7th	5,582 48	3,563 90	9,146 38	4,200	53,028 11
8th	7,712 22	5,472 10	13,184 32	8,090	253,967 27
9th	10,750 36	6,073 44	16,823 80	10,150	284,512 19
10th	8,251 62	5,077 62	13,329 24	7,670	170,248 31
11th	7,848 60	6,124 52	13,973 12	7,090	146,672 30
12th	7,300 26	5,630 06	12,930 32	7,300	200,123 70
13th	4,775 52	2,367 10	7,142 62	4,300	36,156 39
14th	7,761 20	4,164 52	11,925 72	7,025	108,956 93
15th	13,012 64	6,480 14	19,492 78	11,450	290,961 51
16th	7,188 94	4,683 52	11,872 46	7,200	117,956 97
17th	5,048 58	3,190 70	8,239 28	4,625	53,409 31
18th	3,342 27	2,702 42	6,044 69	4,650	63,572 77
19th	8,160 30	5,600 00	13,760 30	7,479	114,402 95
20th	6,495 44	4,866 20	11,361 64	6,800	96,728 66
21st	11,668 08	8,985 46	20,653 54	8,350	542,160 26
23d	16,669 12	9,149 42	25,818 54	12,350	860,651 81
23d	9,640 74	7,600 00	17,240 74	9,250	469,996 94
24th	7,859 06	4,779 84	12,638 90	7,100	124,828 95
Rhode Island	12,900 00	6,174 64	19,074 64	8,700	{267,159 81 37,392 36
South Carolina, 1st	7,506 98	5,500 00	13,006 98	5,650	32,166 76
2d	13,095 80	6,150 00	19,245 80	8,400	63,487 36
3d	8,045 88	5,500 00	13,545 88	6,100	71,559 46
Tennessee, 1st	4,320 66	4,260 00	8,580 66	5,150	28,073 27
2d	4,315 16	5,710 00	10,025 16	6,470	51,937 18
3d	7,497 14	6,650 00	14,147 14	5,320	54,482 65
4th	7,198 82	5,650 00	12,848 82	6,575	81,708 59
5th	12,510 00	8,195 00	20,705 00	11,725	259,234 25
6th	7,221 12	5,800 00	13,021 12	6,550	36,835 68
7th	6,176 74	4,675 00	10,851 74	5,375	28,415 28
8th	5,029 47	6,600 00	11,629 47	8,600	103,793 86
Texas, 1st	17,021 80	8,550 00	25,571 80	10,550	63,972 53
2d	10,929 78	6,735 00	17,664 78	9,135	46,874 63
3d	7,418 86	6,650 00	14,068 86	9,350	65,481 21
4th	9,770 29	8,081 00	17,851 29	9,600	95,997 40
Utah	9,006 22	5,050 00	14,056 22	6,200	40,786 23
Vermont, 2d	2,681 18	1,208 61	3,889 79	3,380	34,410 60
3d	1,683 38	1,099 42	2,782 80	3,400	{19,037 46 22,412 34
Virginia, 1st	6,029 88	4,015 00	10,044 88	6,700	19,439 26
2d	14,636 12	8,098 08	22,734 20	14,760	998,889 96
3d	12,681 76	13,143 32	25,825 08	18,000	3,706,225 58
4th	13,054 30	5,410 00	18,464 30	9,390	63,204 09
5th	15,359 50	11,732 84	27,092 34	20,050	2,246,279 28
6th	11,914 96	7,750 00	19,664 96	11,100	177,117 49
7th	6,852 48	4,252 72	11,105 20	7,100	89,924 02
8th	4,216 36	2,132 36	6,348 72	6,800	42,719 61
Washington	5,359 64	5,600 00	10,959 64	6,500	15,698 64
West Virginia, 1st	7,270 00	6,481 96	13,751 96	7,650	294,343 01
2d	6,239 08	3,480 32	9,719 40	6,775	127,321 51
3d	3,667 64	2,465 56	6,133 20	4,875	27,997 07
Wisconsin, 1st	15,435 66	7,830 70	23,266 36	11,800	1,476,800 80
2d	9,473 90	4,792 24	14,266 14	8,200	165,515 94
3d	12,316 40	5,159 92	17,476 32	9,906	164,673 18
6th	7,128 14	4,359 50	11,667 64	6,900	74,830 99
Wyoming	3,278 88	2,500 00	5,778 88	3,450	10,652 94
Total			3,825,488 66	1,998,061	106,255,537 51

* First and second districts are consolidated.

The foregoing approximate statement, which forms the basis of special allowances for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, is taken from adjustments made for six months and the amount multiplied by two in order to give the probable aggregate expense of assessing and collecting for the year 1873. The reason for this was that at the time of making the allowances the accounts had not been adjusted by the accounting officers for a longer period. Many of the accounts have not yet been finally adjusted, so that the exact difference cannot now be stated. The final adjustment of the assessors' accounts will be for the period ending on the 19th of May, 1873, one month and twelve days less than one year; the estimate of the assessing expenses in this statement is made for a full year, inasmuch as the new system is charged with a full year's expense.

J. W. DOUGLASS,
Commissioner.

JANUARY 23, 1874.

It will thus be seen that before this reduction of force was made it cost the Government to collect about the same revenue we are collecting now $3,825,488.66, while it now costs $1,998,061; a saving to the Government, as certified by the Commissioner, of $1,827,427.66, and a reduction of nearly two thousand in the number of persons employed.

Mr. DUNNELL. How do the amounts collected compare?

Mr. BECK. The amount collected is now within $5,000,000 annually of what it was when the collection cost nearly $4,000,000. The adoption of a uniform tax of twenty cents on tobacco, instead of the two rates of thirty-two and sixteen cents, while causing a slight falling off in the revenue (not so much as was expected) did not diminish at all the labor of collection.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman mean to say that the difference between the amount of revenue collected in 1866 and that collected now is only $5,000,000?

Mr. BECK. I do not.

Mr. RANDALL. It is $211,000,000.

Mr. BECK. And five thousand and thirty fewer people to collect it. The territory has not diminished; the country to be watched is just as great.

Mr. RANDALL. Not at all.

Mr. BECK. I beg the gentleman's pardon. But I was answering the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.] When this reduction of $1,820,000 of expenses was effected there was only a falling off of five or six million dollars. The cry is now raised that we must cut down the number of officers in the Bureau of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, notwithstanding all the work of the assessors is transferred to headquarters here. When we had concluded our examination we found the fact to be that when the reorganization of the internal-revenue system in the country took place, all of the reports of collectors and deputy collectors had to come directly to this office instead of going to the assessors, so that all of the business of the assessors and assistant assessors with the collectors and deputy collectors has to be done here. We now require a large amount of money to be paid by stamps which was not paid by stamps before that adds largely to the work of the office here. I have lying on my table samples of all the stamp books which have to be kept at the office. Every coupon on each of them has to be counted and a list made so as to keep an accurate account of the number used by every collector in the United States, instead of being kept as they were formerly by the assessors in the various districts. It was necessary, of course, also, when the books of two hundred and odd assessors and all the assistant assessors were sent here, that their papers, which came in great boxes, had to be assorted and put into shape that was no small work. Now all orders have to go out to all the collectors from the office here, and all these stamps have to be counted and every coupon numbered and proved to see that every account is kept fairly. Of course all this required some increase of the service here to answer the additional demands made upon the Bureau.

I want also to send to the Clerk's desk to have printed in the RECORD, so gentlemen can see it to-morrow morning, a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to the Committee on Appropriations, (which was submitted to the sub-committee of the Committee on Ways and Means,) showing every fact necessary to enable the Committee of the Whole in the morning when they meet, if they do not pass this paragraph to-night, to understand perfectly what the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is doing. The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, February 25, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to a few suggestions in connection with that portion of the appropriation bill lately introduced by you which proposes a reduction in the clerical and other force of this Bureau. In doing this I am impelled solely by an earnest regard for the public interests, as affected through that branch of the public business committed to my care. Allow me to premise further by the remark that whatever the wisdom of Congress may determine in this regard shall be faithfully and zealously enforced; and this is the feeling of those associated with me in the duties of this office.

You will remember, when in December, 1872, I recommended the abolition of the offices of assessor and assistant assessor of internal revenue, that I said to your committee, as I did to the Ways and Means of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate, that to insure a proper dispatch of the greatly increased business that would inevitably be thrown upon this office twenty-five more clerks might be asked for, but that the effort would be made to do the work with the present (then) force and avoid an increase, if possible. The great reduction (in numbers over twelve hundred and in per annum expenses over $1,500,000) effected by the act of December 24, 1872, was recommended under the supposition that the working force of this office would not be reduced. I should not have dared, in view of the large and varied public and private interests to be influenced, to recommend the present system, except under the presumption stated.

Your attention is respectfully invited to Executive Document No. 99, which shows in detail the increased labor thrown upon this office by the acts of July 20, 1868, and December 24, 1872. The tendency of legislation and the object of the consequent regulations thereunder since 1868 have been to increase the direct supervision by this office of the collection of taxes, and with increasing favorable results. To this principle largely, in connection with the stamp system, is due, for instance, the striking contrast in the amount of tax collected on spirits at fifty and seventy cents, as compared with the amounts collected at two dollars per gallon; the lower rate giving the higher tax result.

The immense reduction in the force of internal-revenue officers generally is also shown in detail in the document referred to, amounting, between December 1, 1866, and December 1, 1873, to over five thousand persons—an army in numbers.

To perform the additional labor in this office the clerical and other force was increased by law between 1866 and 1873 less than eighty; while the preparation and distribution of the new stamps, under the acts of July 20, 1868, and December 24, 1872, alone require one-half of that number.

The number of letters written and sent out during the seven months subsequent to July 1, 1873, was three thousand five hundred and twenty-two greater than the number sent out for the seven months immediately before that date. These were letters of which press copies were taken, not embracing written or printed circular letters.

The twenty-two clerks, &c., discharged on the last day of January, 1874, was an extra force that had to be employed on and after May 20, 1873, the date when the assessors and their assistants went out of office, to take care of the great number of papers and records that came into this office after that date and to assist at the additional current work under the new system.

When that extra force was discharged, the number left was in my judgment the minimum to which reduction could be safely carried.

It is said that the reduction proposed in the clerical force is but the equivalent mathematically of the hour of labor proposed to be added to the Departments generally. While the maxim that figures will not equivocate is generally accepted as true when aptly applied, I would respectfully suggest that, aside from copying and counting stamps, clerical and professional labor involve so many conditions of a mental, moral, and physical nature as to lie in a region mostly outside of pure mathematics.

A mathematical standard would seem to be as inapt for such measurements as would be the rules of rhetoric or the laws of metaphysics to determine the size or weight of a block of granite.

Permit me to refer now to two general considerations of much wider importance to the revenue of the Government and to the interests of the tax-payers.

Prior to the 20th of May last the monthly assessments of all taxes unpaid by stamps were gathered, considered, and arranged by the assessors and their assistants in the different districts of the country. The force thus occupied numbered, as above stated, over twelve hundred. Their work consisted in assessing the taxes on banks, all taxes due under unrepealed laws upon excess of material or capacity by distillers, on tobacco or cigars sold without being stamped, on special taxes, (licenses,) and penalties, and the reception of reports from store-keepers, gaugers, &c.

The total aggregated a large labor and many papers. These monthly lists are now made up in this office for every district (two hundred and twenty-four) in the United States.

The collectors and their deputies gather the data and transmit it to this office for consideration and action, the result being a list of taxation for each district. It will be readily understood that these determinations involve a great variety of questions of law and fact, to be settled in this office without delay, and to be followed by prompt action. The execution of a national law that finds its jurisdiction over persons and property in every town and county of our vast country involves frequent conflict, of course, with State, county, and municipal laws. In all such cases, and they are numerous, the first decision is made by this office, and its decision enforced by summary process, if necessary, upon the property of the tax-payer.

This power, almost arbitrary, should be exercised with the greatest caution and upon the fullest deliberation. To afford this just treatment much time and labor are required. But the time allowed for the perfection of any one list after its data have arrived in this office is twenty-four hours, on an average, for each of the districts. It is plain, at once, that the only possible equivalent of time in this matter is in the number of persons engaged in the work.

Each and every item of the many on these lists is made by law a lien on the property of the person indebted. This lien takes effect from the date of the receipt of the list by the collector from this office, as he then issues his notices to the persons therein assessed. An hour's delay here may, by missing one mail, make a day's delay in the attachment of the lien.

Every lawyer and business man will appreciate the disastrous effect of such mischances upon the intended precedence of the Government lien. Local liens under State laws in favor of judgment creditors, mortgagees, mechanics, and "materialmen," State, county, and city taxes, are going on record by the thousands daily in every section, involving contests for precedence or pro rata allowance.

Time is emphatically potential in all such contests. In comparison with an interest so large in amount or so extensive in territorial scope, the employment of twenty or thirty clerks is strikingly inconsiderable. To avoid as far as possible these dangers to the Government the clerks employed in the assessment division are frequently at their desks in the evening hurrying forward the lists.

In addition to these new and important duties all the old work of this office is continued as heretofore, and includes the consideration of all cases of fraud, seizures, suits, arising under the internal-revenue laws, and all matters pertaining to special taxes, stamp taxes, taxes on incomes, legacies and successions, and on dividends, &c.; claims for abatement and refunding; extension of time on distraints; lands purchased for the United States on distraint; taxes on tobacco, snuff, and cigars not in bond, and on medicines and preparations under Schedule C. Also the examination and reference of the revenue and disbursing accounts and estimates of collectors, and their applications for special allowances, and of all matters relative to advertising and the purchase of blank-books, newspapers, and stationery for revenue officers; the examination and reference of the monthly bills of supervisors, revenue agents, gaugers and distillery surveyors, and of miscellaneous claims, and the preparation of estimates; the records of statistics; direct taxes, copying &c., of press copies, and recording of all letters received and sent; the supervision of all matters pertaining to distillers, distilled spirits, fermented liquors, wines, rectification, bonded warehouses, gaugers' fees and instruments, and the assignment of store-keepers; the preparation, safe-keeping, issue, and redemption of stamps for distilled spirits, tobacco, and cigars, fermented liquors, special taxes, and stamps issued under Schedules B and C, and the keeping of all accounts pertaining thereto; supervision of all business with the Adams Express Company; the preparation, custody and issue of steel dies for canceling stamps; also the custody of official postage-stamps, and the stamping and dispatch of the mails; correspondence, appointments, commissions, leaves of absence, office discipline, assorting and disposition of the mail, custody of the office files, and all matters relating to messengers, laborers, office stationery, printing, advertising, and the preparation of blanks and blank-books for the Bureau.

My report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, showed 7,949 registered distilleries of all kinds, grain and fruit. Since the acts of 1866 and 1872 distilleries are individually dealt with by this office. Formerly the detail was managed exclusively by the assessors and collectors, general reports from each class being sent to the Commissioner at the end of the month. Under the present system all the reports of gaugers and store-keepers are received (daily and monthly) at this office, and the examinations and calculations necessary to determine the liability of all distilleries in operation constantly being made here.

To do this involves the receipt, classification, recording, and scrutinizing by items of the daily reports of, on an average, six hundred store-keepers and seven hundred and fifty gaugers in active service. Store-keepers make two daily and one monthly report, while gaugers make one daily and one monthly report each.

Your attention is respectfully called to exhibits A and B, and herewith inclosed, which show in detail the various matters that have to be considered and determined by this office and its subordinates before a distillery can be started. These questions of law and fact are often intricate and always important, both to the Government and the tax-payer, and are being multiplied daily by changes in ownership and distillery capacity.

When the distiller has laid in his stock of grain, purchased his cattle—a large incidental feature at many grain distilleries—and hired his operatives, he should not be delayed one moment, if possible, in commencing work. While the Government must and does require a scrupulous regard by the distiller of every law and regulation, she should be equally careful and prompt on her part. Unless the preliminary supervision and control which this office takes of distilleries preceding distillation is immediately exercisable, the citizen is being virtually oppressed. There are many distilleries in the country that would pay in less than one week all the salaries (some $45,000) involved in the proposed reduction of clerks in this office. An average delay of one day in starting the distilleries operating in any one year would insure a loss of revenue to the Government vastly greater than the proposed saving in salaries.

I have above given some of the reasons which occur to me as bearing with some weight upon and against the proposed reduction in this office. They are honestly held and stated, and from no other motive than a desire to be able to perform with dispatch the duties required by law and with the minimum amount of loss and inconvenience to the tax-payers.

Respectfully submitted.

J. W. DOUGLASS,
Commissioner.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, House of Representatives.

EXHIBIT A.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, February 24, 1874.

SIR: In compliance with your request, I have the honor to submit the following statement relative to the starting and running of distilleries, the duties of the distiller and of officers of internal revenue. The law and regulations require every person having in his possession, &c., a still or distilling apparatus, to register the same with the deputy collector of the division in which said still, &c., shall be, and prescribes a penalty for a failure so to do; they require the party or parties intending to engage in the business of distilling, &c., to give notice of such intention in writing on Form 27 a, stating the place and building giving the number and kind of stills to be made, and the cubic contents of each; the mode of boiling, number and kind of boilers; number of mash tubs, and cubic contents of each; mode of mashing, number of fermenting tubs, and cubic contents of each tub, designated by serial number; mode of fermenting; number of receiving cisterns, and cubic contents of each; kind of material to be used; number of hours in which each tub or mash of beer will be fermented; estimated quantity of distilled spirits capable of being produced every twenty-four hours; estimated mashing and fermenting capacity per day of twenty-four hours, in bushels or gallons; particular description of the lot or tract of land on which the distillery and warehouse are situated; description of distillery warehouse; size and description of all other buildings on the distillery premises, and material of which constructed; statement of present condition of title; distance of distillery from nearest place or premises authorized to be used for rectifying or refining distilled spirits; name of every person interested or to be interested in the business, and nature of interest, with residence, (if in a city, designated by street and number.)

An accurate plan, &c., of the distillery must accompany the foregoing notice, and said notice having been received by the collector he shall proceed with his designated assistant to make a survey of such distillery, &c.

Every distiller is required to provide, at his own expense, a warehouse, to be situated on and constitute a part of his distillery premises, &c.

A plan of said warehouse, with an application for the approval thereof, and the assignment of a store-keeper thereto, is forwarded by the collector to this office, and if upon examination it appears that the papers heretofore mentioned are correct and that the law and regulations have been fully complied with, then the warehouse is approved and a store-keeper assigned thereto.

The collector is then notified of the action of this office, and he then approves the distiller's bond and permits him to commence the business of distilling; but until all the aforementioned acts are performed and approved by this office a distiller cannot operate his distillery without subjecting himself to the penalties imposed by law.

Having commenced operations, the distiller may give notice of suspension, Form 124; notice of resumption, Form 125; and notice of change in capacity, Form 126.

Grain distillers forward to this office monthly account on Form 14, showing the quantity and kind of material used by them for the production of spirits, and the quantity of spirits distilled and placed in warehouse by them during the month. This report is subscribed and sworn to by the distiller. Store-keepers forward to this office daily report, Form 86, showing the entries into and withdrawals from warehouse; the serial number of each package; number of wine and proof gallons; the serial number of warehouse stamps, and on withdrawal the serial numbers of tax-paid stamps and the amount of tax. They forward monthly report Form 87, which is a consolidation of Form 86.

Forms 88 and 88½ are reports made monthly by store-keepers, the former showing the kind and quality of material used for the production of spirits, number of fermenting tubs used, the quantity of mash or beer, the quantity of spirits produced, and the quantity entered into warehouse, and upon what date; the quantity and kind of material on hand at first of month, the quantity received on the distillery premises during the month, the quantity used for the production of spirits during the month, and the quantity on hand at last of month, with totals of each. The latter shows the time of filling and emptying fermenting tubs, giving the number of tubs, and the day and hour when filled and emptied.

The reports referred to in the forgeing statement furnish the data for all assessment, either for deficiency in quantity of spirits produced or for excess of material used.

Very respectfully,

A. H. HOLT,
In Charge of Section of Distilled Spirits.

Hon. J. W. DOUGLASS,
Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

EXHIBIT B.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, February 24, 1874.

SIR: In response to your verbal request through Colonel Holt, I have the honor to report that it is the duty of gaugers to inspect, mark, brand, and stamp all packages of spirits produced at distilleries, and make report of the same in triplicate, one copy of which report is forwarded to this office, and shows for whom the spirits were gauged; serial number of package; wine gallons capacity of the package; wantage; correction to volume; indication, temperature; wine proof and taxable gallons; serial number and kind of stamps; and the amount of tax due. It is the duty of the gauger to gauge all spirits before being placed in the bonded warehouse, and attach the warehouse stamp, and when the spirit is withdrawn from warehouse it is his duty to again gauge such spirit and attach the tax-paid stamp, and make a similar report to this office and the collector. Gaugers on duty at rectifying establishments are required to gauge and mark every package drawn from the rectifying tubs, and attach thereto the rectifier's stamp, making report of such gauging to the collector.

Every package filled for shipment or sale on the premises of a wholesale liquor dealer must be gauged and stamped, and if containing more than ten gallons, must also be marked and branded as required by section 47, act of July 20, 1868, making report of such gauging to the collector.

Reports of gauging at the houses of wholesale liquor dealers and rectifiers show all that is in the reports of gauging done at distilleries, except the amount of tax due.

Having been informed that you wished this report as brief as possible, I have made it so, and will merely say, in conclusion, that I consider the duties of the gauger more responsible and onerous than any other revenue officer.

Very respectfully,

E. S. HOLMES.

Hon. J. W. DOUGLASS,
Commissioner.

Mr. Chairman, we were in earnest in our efforts to reduce the force here if it could be done with safety to the public interest, and we found we could in one regard if we could be content with only press-copies of letters sent out from the Bureau of Internal Revenue, but on examination of these press-copies we did not think the work of the Government ought to be intrusted to them, and therefore we were not prepared to advise economy in that direction. A number of copyists are required as a matter of course, as most of these letters which have to be copied are letters which represent large amounts of money. They contain often orders from the Department to the collectors and are records of the Government and are necessary to understand the accounts. As they are necessary to the accurate keeping of the accounts of the Government we did not think it prudent for a great Government like ours to trust only to press-copies. Hence we agreed that all these letters ought to be kept in a permanent form.

Mr. GARFIELD. I should like to suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky in this connection that it has been found most of the letters in the various Executive Departments taken by press-copies are fading out so as to be valueless.

Mr. BECK. These press-copies were submitted to us and many of them, made five years ago, we could not read. And when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] and myself looked at them carefully, although the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was willing if we thought proper to reduce the force and to make press-copies as perfect as he could, we thought it was not safe for the Government to allow that to be done, because of the consequent insecurity of these records of the Government, representing as they do many millions of dollars.

I will say here, Mr. Chairman, in behalf of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that in all our interviews with him we saw no sort of desire on his part to keep a supernumerary. He may have some; of course we could not tell; but he satisfied us that he was willing to do all he could to make every proper reduction of the force and expense of his Bureau. He showed us from his book of correspondence that over thirty-four hundred more letters had been written from his office in the last six months than in the six months before when there was a large force of assessors and assistant assessors to do the work. He said to us that if each gentleman would look in his own district into the force of deputies and clerks employed there and see how far they could be reduced, that he should like to do whatever was proper in that regard by every means in his power in order to reduce the expenses of the Internal-Revenue Bureau still further. He said to us also that if we wished to cut down the gaugers from seven dollars a day, which they now get, to five dollars—that being the amount paid to the store-keepers—we could save $125,000; but he made no recommendation in that regard. The sub-committee acted in that direction and recommended it should be done.

That sub-committee, of which I was a member, after spending several nights with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, after examining his books and looking into his papers, and hearing all his statements, were satisfied, and so reported to the Committee on Ways and Means, that he was by every means in his power, as an efficient officer, doing all he could to save money to the Government while collecting its revenues faithfully and well. That is my opinion of him.

Mr. DAWES. After the very full and fair statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] of the manner in which he and his associate of the sub-Committee on Ways and Means have discharged their duties, and the conclusions to which they have come, I do not think it is necessary to add anything further. I have a desire at all times to co-operate with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] in the efforts he has made year after year to cut down the force in the Internal Revenue office. From the nature of the duties of that office it is constantly coming in contact with the Committee on Ways and Means, and if the committee do their duty they ought to know what is going on there.

It has been the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Ways and Means, I believe, for several years that the manner in which business has been transacted in the Internal-Revenue office is an assurance of the efforts of the head of that Bureau to reduce its expenditures to the lowest point consistent with efficiency of service. I do think there is no Bureau of the Treasury Department so entitled to the confidence of the Congress of the United States as that. It is refreshing to me that there is a head of one Bureau at least who seems to be as earnest as any gentleman in this House to study out methods of reducing the expenditures of his office on one hand, and on the other of bringing it to a condition of greater efficiency and fidelity in the public service. You cannot point out to that officer any matter in which you may think there may be any improvement, that he will not be ready at once to examine and weigh without any pride of opinion and adopt what you can satisfy his judgment will bring either of those elements into the administration of his Department to a greater degree than they are now.

You know, Mr. Chairman, that little more than a year ago we passed a law which brought great scandal on the Bureaus in the Treasury Department, which was carried through and is attempted to be justified and maintained now upon the ground that there is not force enough in the Internal-Revenue Bureau to collect the old taxes that are not yet paid. While on the other hand the Commissioner of that Bureau believes himself and his force capable of collecting all the old taxes as well as the current taxes of the Government, yet whatever ground there is for sustaining these unusual proceedings under that law rests solely upon the idea that he has not now force enough to collect the old outstanding taxes, and that all of the force, and more than all of the force in his Department, is necessary to collect the current taxes of the country. And I think that any one who goes beyond the endeavor of the present head of that Bureau in curtailing his force will do well to look to it and see whether he does not at the same time cripple the efficiency of the force itself.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, in answer to what has been said by the gentleman from Kentucky, I wish to direct the attention of the House to the fact that there are now twenty-one hundred and fifty-nine less reports made by this Department than there were in 1866. Now, I am quite aware it is not a pleasant task to find fault or to expose what you deem to be wrong or extravagant, more especially when I do not find much encouragement from quarters whence I may have a right to expect it. But gentlemen must take my figures unless they can show them to be wrong.

Let us look at the management of this office in 1866, as regards the contingent fund. I find that the contingent expenses of that office in 1866 were $40,000; and I find that in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, they had grown to the enormous sum of $187,000; while in the former year over $300,000,000 were collected, and in the latter year but $114,000,000 were collected. I would like to have some explanation of these facts. In 1866 the amount collected was about $311,000,000, of which $20,000,000 were from stamps; while in 1873, of $114,000,000, $110,000,000 were from stamps. And everybody knows that in 1866 the internal taxation entered every household and every business man's office, that it permeated everywhere; while at this time the internal revenues are in fact collected mainly from two sources: spirituous and fermented liquors, and tobacco.

I maintain that the force provided in my amendment is sufficient; and moreover I believe there are members of the Committee on Appropriations who have since examined this subject who agree that there can be a reduction of at least twenty clerks in this Bureau, and a saving of about $30,000. When we reach the proper point I shall further propose to amend, and I hope the committee will give me a more willing ear and be more disposed than they showed themselves a few minutes since to make these reductions. I have said that it was an ungracious thing to put these people out of their positions, but I have a duty to perform, and I mean to perform it as far as I am able.

Mr. KELLOGG rose.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] was recognized and given the floor before the Chair heard the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. KELLOGG. I shall not stop now to discuss with my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] the Sanborn contracts, but shall wait till the gentleman's committee make their report. That, I think, will be the proper time to discuss those contracts, and I shall go with the gentleman then probably as far as he wishes me to go. But I am very glad to find him, for once, in favor of giving more force to a Bureau than our ambitious Committee on Civil Service Reform, as he called it the other day, were disposed to do. We have investigated this matter as we thought, and I am very happy to state that in one place the Committee on Appropriations have got thirty more employés in this Bureau than we had in our bill. We may have made a mistake, and if we find we have we shall cheerfully amend our bill so as to give more force.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I would like to ask my colleague how much his bill reduces the force?

Mr. KELLOGG. My colleague must wait until I get through. Now I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] whether in the number of employés which he gave he included the two thousand and forty-one store-keepers and gaugers that appear in the Blue-Book for the first time this year?

Mr. BECK. We did not go over the number of store-keepers and gaugers.

Mr. KELLOGG. I supposed not. Now I want to say right here, for the information of the committee, that we are paying from the United States Treasury two thousand and forty-one of these gaugers and store-keepers, when formerly the distillers themselves paid them. There are places all over the country where the gaugers' fees cost actually more than all the revenue received from their work.

Mr. DAWES. Does not the gentleman know that we put an additional tax on distilled spirits in order to pay those fees? Has not the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service discovered that fact?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; we discovered it; but I will say to the gentleman that he can make a further improvement if he will take advice from our ambitious young committee. There are places all over the country where we can make a saving if we will stop having these gaugers at seven dollars a day where they do not gauge enough, taking one year with another, to pay the expense.

One word more. In the Blue-Book this year there are two thousand and forty-one store-keepers and gaugers and other officers, making over thirty-four hundred, which were never included in any Blue-Book before, but which the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] included in the table he presented, and which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] indorsed. I want that to appear upon record, that there are over thirty-four hundred of these officers for the first time in the Blue-Book as connected with the Treasury Department.

Mr. BURCHARD obtained the floor.

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman allow me to say one word?

Mr. BURCHARD. I will yield a moment.

Mr. BECK. The remark was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that he was not supported in the motion he made just now in quarters where he supposed he would be. I presume he alluded to me.

Mr. RANDALL. I was alluding to you, of course.

Mr. BECK. I want to say to him in answer to that, that when I was put upon a committee to look into this business and to report exactly the facts and I found that we had made a reduction of the force from eighty-five hundred to thirty-five hundred, I thought that was doing very well.

Mr. RANDALL. But it seems you overlooked the thirty-four hundred gangers.

Mr. BECK. I cannot yield now. I want to say this to the gentleman from Connecticut: that a year or two ago, when the same contest was made as to the Internal-Revenue Bureau that is being made now, and when gentlemen on my own side of the House and others insisted there was no reduction, I took occasion then to show them what the House and the country know, that up to the year before last the distillers paid their own store-keepers and gaugers and now we pay them. That is an expense charged upon the Internal-Revenue Bureau that was not charged then, because it was paid by the distillers. I showed that on the floor of the House two years ago; but we put a tax of five cents a gallon on distilled spirits, because we paid these expenses ourselves, and that tax of five cents amounts to $2,250,000 a year, so that we make a profit of $750,000 over and above what we pay the store-keepers and gaugers, and over and above what we made before. The five-cent tax per gallon yields $2,250,000, or as some gentlemen say $2,500,000, when you pay to the gaugers and store-keepers only $1,600,000.

That is the reason why the expenses appear greater. Let the distillers pay the store-keepers and gaugers as they did before, and the expenses would appear $1,500,000 less than they are now, and but for this five-cent tax a gallon we would be $750,000 a year worse off than we are now. That is the explanation of it.

Mr. BURCHARD. I wish to say a few words only.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I would ask if debate is not exhausted on the amendment; if it is, I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. BURCHARD. I rise to oppose the amendment to the amendment if there is one pending.

The CHAIRMAN. There is not.

Mr. BURCHARD. Then I move to strike out the last word. I wish to say but a word to the committee in reply to the remarks made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] in regard to the force employed in the Internal-Revenue Bureau. There is now a greater amount of work required to be performed in that Bureau under the present law than there was prior to the passage of the law of April 24, 1872. The gentleman from Kentucky, perhaps, has alluded to that. Prior to the passage of that law the assistant assessors retained duplicate returns. Now the collectors or deputy collectors are required to forward their reports to the Internal-Revenue Bureau, there to be examined, there to be adjusted, there to be assessed, to be returned to the collectors for collection. That work which was performed by the assistant assessors is now performed in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Again, there are some other taxes that are required by that act to be directly assessed in that office, such as the tax upon national banks, and others which I have not time to enumerate.

Mr. HOSKINS. All the taxes upon banks of deposit and the individual banks are also assessed directly here.

Mr. BURCHARD. That is true. Now, I believe the Committee on Ways and Means will give the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the credit of inaugurating and suggesting the reduction that was made in the force in the country. My impression is that he prepared the bill, or perhaps not the bill that passed, but a bill revising the service, which saved nearly $2,000,000, as was stated by the gentleman from Kentucky, reducing the force in his employ throughout the country to the extent of nearly three hundred assessors and some eleven hundred assistant assessors. He is entitled to credit; and I believe if the Committee on Ways and Means, or the Committee on Appropriations, or any other committee should point out to him wherein a saving could be made to the Government in his office by reducing his force, he would concur in their recommendation, and follow out any economical reduction that could properly be made. Therefore I am ready to vote in favor of this bill as it stands, and in support of the recommendation made by the sub-committee of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. I trust that the amendment will not prevail. It is very evident that if the Committee of the Whole understood it they would vote it down. There is no reason why a gauger should not have more pay than a store-keeper.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. We have not reached the gaugers yet.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. Because the one travels over the country and the other remains in one place. Take my own district, for instance; the gauger frequently travels a hundred miles and pays his own expenses, and the difference between five and two dollars a day is not too much.

Mr. RANDALL. The provision about gaugers is further along in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate in regard to gaugers is evidently not in order at this time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. FORT. Let us vote on this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I have another amendment to offer.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for a vote on the pending amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WOODFORD reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MAGINNIS obtained the floor to move a suspension of the rules, but yielded to Mr. MAYNARD.

WIDOW OF JUDGE SAMUEL MILLIGAN.

Mr. MAYNARD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3087) for the relief of the widow of the late Judge Samuel Milligan; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill provides that the salary of the late Samuel Milligan, judge of the Court of Claims, for the remainder of the present fiscal year, shall be paid to his widow.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECUSANT WITNESS DISCHARGED.

Mr. ELDREDGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following resolution; which was adopted:

Resolved, That George H. Patrick, a witness in proceedings for the impeachment of Richard Busteed, United States district judge of the district of Alabama, and against whom the attachment of the House issued as for contempt, having appeared and testified before the sub-Committee on the Judiciary, and his explanation of his previous non-attendance being satisfactory to the House, be, and he is hereby, discharged from arrest.

BUSINESS ON MONDAYS.

Mr. BECK. I desire to have the Clerk read the remarks of the Speaker, as published in the RECORD of February 3, relative to the order of business on Mondays. And the Speaker will do me the justice to say that during the seven years past I have never charged any improper conduct on the part of the Speaker, and I do not now.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. In connection with what the gentleman from Indiana has just said, the Chair desires to make one general observation, and that is that gentlemen seeking the floor for a suspension of the rules on Monday greatly facilitate their ends by notifying the Speaker of the object they have in view. There is, every Monday, a much larger number seeking the floor than can be accommodated in a single day, and the Chair must necessarily exercise discretion in assigning the floor, having regard primarily to the relative public importance of the questions presented by different members. The Chair thinks that in his five years' service no member from either side of the House, having a question of public importance to submit, has ever failed to get the floor when the Chair was advised of the object. Had the Chair known what motion the gentleman from Indiana intended to submit on Monday last, it would have been his duty as well as his pleasure to recognize him.

The rules provide that the member first addressing the Chair shall be recognized; but where fifteen or twenty address him at the same moment, some other mode of assigning the floor must, of necessity, be resorted to; and there is none so fair as to award precedence according to the relative importance of the motions; and this decision can be made only by the Speaker knowing what subject a member seeking the floor proposes to submit to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair reiterates every word of that, and does not see that he there says that before a gentleman obtains the floor he must notify the Chair of what he has to offer.

Mr. BECK. The record will show; that is all I want.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs to say, however, lest the House may not understand him, that he reiterates every word of what he there said from beginning to end. That has been the practice, and is entirely consistent with what the Chair said to-day.

CIVIL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Herewith I transmit the report of the civil service commission authorized by the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, and invite your special attention thereto.

If sustained by Congress, I have no doubt the rules can, after the experience gained, be so improved and enforced as to still more materially benefit the public service and relieve the Executive, members of Congress, and the heads of Departments from influences prejudicial to good administration.

The rules, as they have heretofore been enforced, have resulted beneficially, as is shown by the opinions of the members of the Cabinet and their subordinates in the Departments, and in that opinion I concur; but rules applicable to officers who are to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate are in great measure impracticable, except in so far as they may be sustained by the action of that body. This must necessarily remain so unless the direct sanction of the Senate is given to the rules.

I advise for the present only such appropriation as may be adequate to continue the work in its present form, and would leave to the future to determine whether the direct sanction of Congress should be given to rules that may perhaps be devised for regulating the method of selection of appointees, or a portion of them, who need to be confirmed by the Senate.

The same amount appropriated last year would be adequate for the coming year, but I think the public interest would be promoted by authority in the Executive for allowing a small compensation for special service performed beyond usual office hours under the act of 1871, to persons already in the service of the Government.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, April 18, 1874.

The message, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER TO PRINT.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that two tabular statements relative to the legislative appropriation bill be printed for the information of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ASSAY OFFICE AT HELENA, MONTANA.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I move that the rules be suspended to pass a bill to establish an assay office at Helena, in the Territory of Montana.

The bill was read. It authorizes and requires the Secretary of the Treasury to establish an assay office at Helena, Montana, to be conducted under the provisions of the act approved February 12, 1873, entitled "An act revising and amending the laws relative to the mints, assay offices, and coinage of the United States."

The second section authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be constructed a suitable building at Helena, Montana, for said assay office, and provide the same with the necessary fixtures and apparatus at a cost not exceeding $50,000, which sum the bill appropriates.

Mr. DAWES. Has this bill been before any committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no knowledge on that point.

Mr. MAGINNIS. It is recommended by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The SPEAKER. The Chair remembers now that the proposition was brought before the House by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOOPER,] the chairman of that committee.

Mr. DAWES. What necessity is there for this bill being passed under a suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no further knowledge in reference to the matter.

Mr. RANDALL. I would suggest to the Delegate from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] that he merely asks for the consideration of this bill. That motion, if adopted, will put the bill in such a shape that it will come up in the morning, when the gentleman can explain it fully. There will be no objection, I think, to that motion.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. This motion, I think, can go over for one week just as well as not. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. MAGINNIS. This bill has been twice passed unanimously by this House, having been reported by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. A similar bill has also been passed twice by the Senate.

Mr. BURCHARD. Is there any urgency for having the bill acted on to-night?

Mr. MAGINNIS. It is a bill which I explained to the House in a speech made some time ago.

Mr. RANDALL. I think this bill is right; and in the remark I just made I did not mean to object to it, but only to suggest a method by which it could be brought before the House.

The SPEAKER. If the House adjourns now, the motion of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] will be the first business at the close of the morning hour next Monday.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like the House to pass at this time a bill for the benefit of a few soldiers' widows and their children. It is a measure to which I think there will be no objection.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, that the House adjourn, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 59, noes 35.

The House accordingly (at five o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ARCHER: The petition of the officers and crew of the United States steamer Champion, for relief, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. AVERILL: Papers relating to the Fort Abercrombie military reservation, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BANNING: The petition of Mary Wooley, of Cincinnati, Ohio, for a pension, with accompanying papers, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARRERE: The petition of B. G. Milner and others, of Illinois, for the issue of $10,000,000 additional Treasury notes a month for four years, and for the retirement of national-bank notes and reduction of interest on bonded debt, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BARRY: Papers relating to the claim of John H. Rabun, to be compensated for services as special United States deputy marshal of Mississippi, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: The petition of Joseph Titcomb and others, of Kennebunk, Kennebunkport and vicinity, Maine, for an appropriation to remove obstructions from Kennebunk River, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee: The petition of George Kenney, of Washington County, Tennessee, to be compensated for losses sustained during the rebellion, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a paper relating to the establishment of a post-route in Tennessee, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CLEMENTS: The petition of Leroy J. Perry, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Edwin R. Foster, for relief, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COX: The petition of Frank M. Clark and 105 others, for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1179) granting increased pensions to disabled soldiers, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the memorial of Seth Driggs, for relief, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CROSSLAND: The petition of Lucinda Maguire, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CRUTCHFIELD: The petition of Martha C. Capps, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CROUNSE: The remonstrance of citizens of Nebraska, against the extension of the Haines harvester patent, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. DURHAM: The petition of Nancy Curry, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GIDDINGS: A paper for the establishment of certain post-routes in Texas, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HENDEE: The petition of Ebenezer Whitney, of Milton, Vermont, to be reimbursed for stolen postage-stamps, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOLMAN: Papers relating to the claim of Sterling A. Martin, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOUGHTON: The petition of Henry M. Naglee, of San José, California, to be reimbursed for United States internal-revenue stamps destroyed by fire, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HUBBELL: The petition of Nelson Ainslie, late private Fourteenth Michigan Volunteers, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAMAR: The petition of citizens of Mississippi, for the payment of the claim of the Southern Methodist publishing house at Nashville, Tennessee, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LANSING: Resolutions of the Board of Trade of Oswego, New York, in relation to the necessity for immediate and prompt repairs of the pier and light-house at Oswego, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LAWSON: The petition of Paul Frank, late colonel of the Fifty-second New York Volunteers, for increase of pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEWIS: The petition of James G. Williams, of Memphis, Tennessee, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of Thomas Stewart, to be compensated for damages sustained by washing away his plantation by reason of change of channel of the Mississippi River, caused by dredging, &c., by United States authorities, to the Committee on Claims.

Also, the petition of the Masonic lodge of Collierville, Tennessee, to be paid for property taken by United States troops, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of William B. Worsham, of Marianna, Phillips County, Arkansas, to be compensated for property destroyed as a military necessity, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of certain druggists and others, for an amendment of the law for the suppression of obscene literature, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a paper for a post-route from Colliersville to Wythe Depot, Tennessee, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LOFLAND: The petition of Thomas S. Biddle, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOWNDES: The petition of Charles E. H. Holmes, for relief, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The petition of citizens of Mendocino County, California, for a post-route from Little Lake to Mendocino, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MOORE: The petition of Thompson M. Johnson, of Beaver, Pennsylvania, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ORTH: The petition of the Indiana board of education, for the donation to the State of Indiana of the arsenal grounds at Indianapolis for a polytechnic institute, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. READ: The petition of John W. Walls, for relief, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RUSK: The petition of numerous citizens of Wisconsin, for a pension to James C. Nelson, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana: The petition of 60 citizens of Shelby County, Missouri, for the passage of a law authorizing the manufacture of patent-right articles by others than the owners of patent rights upon payment of a reasonable royalty thereon, to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petition of 18 citizens of Christian County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Boone County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 28 citizens of Gales County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 12 citizens of Gallia County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 19 citizens of Tuscaloosa County, Alabama, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 28 citizens of Benton County, Arkansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Knox County, Tennessee, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Hendricks County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Lee County, Iowa, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 18 citizens of Randolph County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 13 citizens of Pawnee County, Nebraska, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Washington County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 33 citizens of Blue Earth County, Minnesota, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 10 citizens of Greene County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 12 citizens of Anglaize County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Steuben County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 16 citizens of Bracken County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 10 citizens of Johnson County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Wyandotte County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 27 citizens of Henry County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 12 citizens of Andrew County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 8 citizens of Carroll County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 10 citizens of Calhoun County, Alabama, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Dale County, Alabama, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 32 citizens of Cooper County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Warrick County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Shawnee County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Keokuk County, Iowa, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 10 citizens of Montgomery County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Washington County, Arkansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 19 citizens of Dakota County, Nebraska, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 36 citizens of Scotland County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Montgomery County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 44 citizens of Greenwood County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 12 citizens of Orleans County, New York, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Hopkins County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Otter Tail County, Minnesota, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 13 citizens of Clay County, Dakota, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 38 citizens of Chisago County, Minnesota, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Oakland County, Michigan, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Gibson County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 18 citizens of Union County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Hickman County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 11 citizens of Orange County, Virginia, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 39 citizens of Boone County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 13 citizens of Meigs County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 10 citizens of Berrien County, Michigan, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 31 citizens of Gentry County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 28 citizens of Fayette County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Bullock County, Alabama, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Hancock County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Owen County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 10 citizens of Clermont County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 32 citizens of Callaway County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 31 citizens of Crawford County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 25 citizens of Crenshaw County, Alabama, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Lake County, Tennessee, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Marshall County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 12 citizens of Robertson County, Texas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 30 citizens of Johnson County, Nebraska, of similar import, to the same committee

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Gage County, Nebraska, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 11 citizens of Lyon County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Gentry County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Grundy County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 11 citizens of Pulaski County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Warren County, Iowa, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 19 citizens of Van Buren County, Iowa, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 13 citizens of Washington County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of McPherson County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 29 citizens of Park County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Ouachita County, Texas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Adair County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Gloucester County, New Jersey, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Jackson County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 16 citizens of Crenshaw County, Alabama, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Riley County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 26 citizens of Pawnee County, Nebraska, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 10 citizens of Warren County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 18 citizens of Hardin County, Iowa, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 16 citizens of Cayuga County, New York, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 27 citizens of Clark County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 30 citizens of Lawrence County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 11 citizens of Jennings County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Mercer County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 10 citizens of Wyandotte County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Vernon County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 40 citizens of Boone County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Nicholas County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Pulaski County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 12 citizens of Montgomery County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Scott County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Montgomery County, Arkansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Wells County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 9 citizens of Sangamon County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Stokes County, North Carolina, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 27 citizens of Cass County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 25 citizens of Waushara County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 27 citizens of Ray County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 34 citizens of Lee County, Iowa, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Crawford County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Champaign County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 16 citizens of Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Van Buren County, Iowa, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Tarrant County, Texas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 11 citizens of Ida County, Iowa, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Wayne County, Michigan, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 44 citizens of Pawnee County, Nebraska, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Marshall County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Bradford County, Pennsylvania, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 31 citizens of Caldwell County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Hillsdale County, Michigan, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Ray County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Tama County, Iowa, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Gentry County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 25 citizens of Carroll County, Georgia, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Trigg County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Dane County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 9 citizens of Mercer County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 19 citizens of Harrison County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 28 citizens of Harrison County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Parke County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 28 citizens of Marion County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Chippewa County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Clay County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Orleans County, New York, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Barnwell County, South Carolina, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Wood County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Wood County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Vermillion County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 26 citizens of Winston County, Mississippi, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 36 citizens of Faribault County, Minnesota, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Saline County, Nebraska, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 19 citizens of Washington County, Tennessee, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 13 citizens of Sanford County, Alabama, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 28 citizens of Barnwell County, South Carolina, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 19 citizens of Montgomery County, Tennessee, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 8 citizens of Guilford County, North Carolina, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 11 citizens of Robertson County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Dodge County, Nebraska, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 30 citizens of Logan County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 46 citizens of Pueblo County, Colorado, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 32 citizens of Howard County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Watonwan County, Minnesota, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Scotland County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Brown County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 32 citizens of Grant County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Jefferson County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 19 citizens of Upson County, Georgia, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 26 citizens of Dane County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Cass County, Iowa, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 13 citizens of Jay County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 46 citizens of Van Buren County, Iowa, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Frederick County, Maryland, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 60 citizens of Brown County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 27 citizens of Edgar County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 30 citizens of Peoria County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 29 citizens of Orleans County, Vermont, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Richland County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Carroll County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 30 citizens of Limestone County, Texas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens, of Allen County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Calumet County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Greene County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 9 citizens of Trempeleau County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Union County, Dakota, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Scotland County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 19 citizens of Decatur County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Jackson County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 12 citizens of Sciota County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 12 citizens of Vigo County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 11 citizens of Fairfield County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Clark County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 25 citizens of Shelby County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Callaway County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 80 citizens of Green County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. SPRAGUE: The petition of Wilson Bell, late of Company B, Thirty-ninth Ohio Volunteers, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STANDIFORD: The petition of Joseph F. Hawley, of Kentucky, for relief for loss of vouchers and other papers destroyed by fire July 3, 1862, at Lebanon, Kentucky, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of Jennie King, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VANCE: The petition of the trustees of the Davenport Female College, of North Carolina, for payment for damages sustained from Federal troops in 1865, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: The petition of William B. Ball and 70 others, of Dickson County, Tennessee, for amendments to the pension law of February 14, 1871, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILBER: The petition of A. C. Fassett, of Otsego County, New York, for relief, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WOODFORD: The petition of Thomas F. Geary and 685 others, for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1179) granting increased pensions to disabled soldiers, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 21, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, I rise for a short explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent to make a short personal explanation. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BOGY. I find in this morning's National Republican, a paper published in the city of Washington, a synopsis of the speech I made yesterday. The synopsis does me great injustice and places me in a position which I do not choose to occupy toward the Senate of the United States. I am reported as having said:

> By the fifteenth amendment the right of each State to regulate the elective franchise had not been taken away—

I said it had been taken away—

> Such things were worse than the despotism of the Roman empire, for the Roman pagans were not such infernal rascals as the men who rule the Senate to-day.

I said no such thing. I said, "as some of the men who ruled in the South to-day." I think it due to the Senate that this explanation should be made.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented the memorial of Isaac A. King and others, citizens of Nebraska, protesting against extending letters-patent for the Haines harvester; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Emma M. Porch, who claims compensation for services as a scout in the State of Missouri during the war, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. GOLDTHWAITE, it was Ordered, That G. F. Werborn have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2131) to authorize a promotion in the Inspector-General's Department of the Army of the United States, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of William McCarrick, praying to be paid arrears of bounty, reported adversely thereon; and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1840) for the relief of Lieutenant Sidney Tinker, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 324) for the relief of M. Von Entress Fuersteneck, late second lieutenant of the Sixty-eighth New York Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 323) for the relief of Charles W. Biese late second lieutenant of the Eighty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1219) for the relief of Charles W. Berry, late private of the Thirty-sixth Wisconsin Volunteers, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1582) for the relief of C. C. Spaids, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1770) for the relief of Jonathan L. Mann, late a chaplain in the volunteer service of the Army, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2868) to render available an unexpended balance of appropriation for collection and payment of bounty, &c., for colored soldiers and sailors, reported it without amendment.

PAY OF DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. PRATT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

> Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire as to the propriety of so amending the act of March 3, 1871, as to allow the district judge his traveling expenses and a per diem compensation, whenever under the direction of the circuit judge he shall hold a circuit or district court outside of his district.

SUFFERERS FROM OVERFLOW OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. WADLEIGH. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3029) to provide for the relief of the persons suffering from the overflow of the Mississippi River, have had the same under consideration and have instructed me to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage, and to ask for its present consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before I object to the present consideration of this bill, to which I do not wish to object, I desire to suggest to my friend from New Hampshire that there is no limitation in the bill of time when the act shall expire, and authority might be exercised under it a year hence for aught I can see, although the word "temporarily" is used. That is entirely indifferent. If the bill, however, is amended so as to say that it shall expire on the 1st of September, 1874, or whatever time is preferred, I will make no objection.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I am willing to accept that.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which empowers the President of the United States to direct the issue, temporarily, of supplies of food and disused Army clothing, sufficient to prevent starvation and suffering and extreme want to any and all classes of destitute or helpless persons living on or near the Lower Mississippi River, who have been rendered so by reason of the present overflow of the Mississippi River.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to add as an additional sentence the following:

> This act shall expire on the 1st day of September, 1874.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2885) to remove the disabilities of David A. Telfair, of North Carolina, and Charles H. McBlair, of Maryland, to report the same back with an amendment striking out the name of David A. Telfair and recommending then the passage of the bill. The reason why Mr. Telfair's name is stricken out is that the committee have been unable to find out that he has ever applied in person for the removal of his disabilities. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MERRIMON. I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether there is any special reason the committee can assign to the Senate for recommending that the name of Mr. Telfair be stricken from the bill?

Mr. STEVENSON. I stated that the reason was that Mr. Telfair had never asked for the removal of his disabilities, and the committee have laid down as a rule that unless the applicant does request in writing the removal of his disabilities they will not recommend it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MERRIMON. This is a House bill, I believe?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. MERRIMON. I think it very likely the application is on file in the House.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will state to the Senator that I made every inquiry, not only from every member of the North Carolina delegation that was here but also from the clerks, and no such application has been found.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. And I made an effort myself to find it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object to the bill if there is no objection to striking out the name for the reason stated; but if there is to be an effort to pass this bill as it is, in spite of that gentleman not having expressed a desire to have it passed, then of course the bill will go over.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary to strike out the name of David A. Telfair, of North Carolina? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed by a two-thirds vote.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to remove the disabilities of Charles H. McBlair, of Maryland."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RAMSEY. I ask the consent of the Sentate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 486) to revive and continue certain grants of land heretofore made to the Territory and State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of the several lines of the Saint Paul and Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that bill read at length in the first place, reserving the right to object.

Mr. SCOTT. As it is evident that that is a bill which will give rise to a great deal of inquiry if not of discussion, in pursuance of the notice that I gave the other day of my intention to call up the Louisville and Portland Canal bill, I trust the Senator from Minnesota will withdraw his motion.

Mr. RAMSEY. I cannot conceive of any time that it need occupy. I imagine there will be no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. The very title of the bill suggests inquiry, especially in the morning hour.

Mr. RAMSEY. As it is suggested that the friends of the Louisville and Portland Canal are very desirous of getting it up, I will waive this motion for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business the Calendar is in order.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 350) providing for the payment of the bonds of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the amendment of the House of Representatives, the pending question being on agreeing to that amendment as heretofore amended by the Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, in view of remarks made when this bill was last under consideration, I deem it my duty to ask the attention of the Senate to the prominent facts bearing upon the questions which are to be solved by the passage of this bill.

The Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] in closing the remarks made by him at that time expressed his unwillingness—I do not use his exact words but the substance of them—that the Government should buy a lawsuit or an assortment of lawsuits by the passage of this bill. The fact that a Senator so well informed upon all subjects makes use of an expression which would lead the Senate to suppose we would acquire any other lawsuits than those in which the Government interests are already involved induces me to ask the indulgence of the Senate while I state the true position the Government holds toward this canal company and the financial relations of the company to the Government.

The Louisville and Portland Canal Company was incorporated by an act of the Legislature of Kentucky, approved January 12, 1825, for an unlimited time. It was authorized to hold real estate for the canal, for roads, buildings, docks, basins, and the proper application or use of the water-power; and to show that some use which has recently been made of the money realized by its tolls was intended to be prohibited by the Legislature of Kentucky, I note the fact that by one provision of that charter the company was not to have or exercise the privilege of loaning money. The stock was fixed at $600,000, in shares of $100, which was afterward by successive acts increased, until in 1831 it was provided that they might issue stock to the amount necessary to complete the work. Four directors and a president were to be elected on the first Monday in January of each year, "who shall be shareholders, citizens of the United States, and who shall hold their offices one year and until others shall be elected in their places."

I refer to these provisions so that we may see how this corporation is to be governed in the future if it is permitted to remain in charge of a work belonging to the United States. I need not go further into the legislation creating and extending its powers.

In 1826, to show that this was not intended to be merely a State work but was to have national significance, Congress authorized a subscription to its stock; and on the 2d of March, 1829, by another act authorized a further subscription; and in pursuance of these acts stock was taken. In 1825, 1,000 shares were subscribed; in 1829, 1,335 shares were subscribed, and in 1831 and 1833, by an adjustment of the interest accounts of the corporation, 567 shares were added to those already belonging to the United States; so that at that time the United States owned 2,902 shares of stock, representing $290,200. From that time on, from 1831 and 1833, petitions came to Congress asking that all the stock might be purchased and the navigation made free. If any Senator is desirous of seeing the pertinacity with which the public pressed this subject upon Congress, a reference to a report made and printed as Miscellaneous Document No. 83, of the Fortieth Congress, second session, beginning on page 5 and running over several pages, will exhibit to him the numerous petitions which came from all quarters of the country asking that this work should be taken charge of by the Government, and that it should be released from tolls.

Numerous projects were introduced into Congress for the purpose of effecting this without receiving final action. In 1842 the Legislature of Kentucky, acceding to what was manifestly the public wish, provided a means whereby the United States might take control of this work, and an act was passed, which may be found printed at length in the report made by the Finance Committee of the Senate. In 1844 another act was passed which is also printed in that report. The substance of these two acts amounts to this, that the directors of the company were permitted to inaugurate a system by which all the stock of individual stockholders should be purchased in trust for the United States; and that when all such stock should be thus purchased the property should be transferred and jurisdiction be ceded to the Government of the United States, and that from that time forth no reports should be required to be made to the Legislature of Kentucky, showing that it was the intention that this canal should be made free to the commerce of the region which the Ohio River drains, and that it was to become a national work under the control of the United States.

The stockholders in the canal company, on the 4th of July, 1842, after the passage of this first act, met and adopted a system by which this stock was to be purchased for the benefit of the United States. There were alternative provisions, by which if the United States had not been a party to this arrangement the canal might otherwise have been made free. Those alternative provisions were that this stock might be purchased for the benefit of the State of Kentucky or for the city of Louisville, and held in trust for them; but at that time neither the State of Kentucky nor the city of Louisville held stock in this company, or if they did no provision was made by the directors by which stock was to be purchased for the benefit of either the State or the city.

The stockholders passed a resolution by which they directed the revenues of the canal to be used in the extinguishment of the stock of individuals; and in pursuance of the terms of the act they advanced stock which was then worth $100 at its par value to $150. The shares of individuals at that time were but about seven thousand; and by the operation of this resolution of the board their shares were in reality increased by about thirty-five hundred more. In other words, their stock, for which they could not have paid more than $100 a share and which was not worth more than $100 par value, was made worth $150; and their resolution provided that the directors should purchase that stock by paying for it $150 per share, adding each year the interest upon the $150. In pursuance of this arrangement all the stock in the corporation was purchased in. I have already stated that there were about seven thousand shares; to be exact there were seven thousand and ninety-eight, worth in 1841 $709,800. In successive years the stock was purchased, and the amounts in which it was purchased will all be found on page 26 of the document to which I have referred, showing that by the year 1854 there remained but two hundred shares to be purchased, and that in 1855 all these shares were purchased but five, for which the Government paid $1,709,262.

Now let it not be forgotten that stock, which in 1842 when this act was passed was worth to the stockholders $709,800, was purchased from them by the tolls paid by the people on their commerce on the Ohio River, and they were paid for it $1,709,262. In other words, these stockholders got from 1842 to 1855 just $1,000,000 in round numbers more than their stock was worth in 1842.

The Senator from Maine asked me what document I read from. It is Miscellaneous Document No. 83, second session Fortieth Congress, a report made by Mr. Gallagher, special agent of the Treasury Department at that time. In 1855, then, all the stock in the corporation belonged to the Government but five shares. The Government owned at that time 9,995 shares out of 10,000; 2,902 shares absolutely, and there were in the hands of the directors 7,093 shares held in trust for the Government.

And now mark the peculiarity of this arrangement. The act of 1842 provided that when these shares should thus be transferred in trust for the Government, the persons to whom they are transferred, the directors, are to vote those shares for the purpose of carrying out the end of that act of the Legislature of Kentucky, that of making the commerce free, thus putting in the hands of the trustees their five shares only at that time and 7,093 shares belonging to the Government of the United States, while the Government held the legal title to only 2,902 shares.

I make this statement because the suggestion has been made that we might delay taking possession of this property and transfer a few shares to individuals and elect them, so that the corporation might be controlled in the interest of the United States instead of in the interest of these five shareholders; but by the terms of the act of the Legislature of Kentucky, even if that were done, the five directors who hold the shares in trust for the Government can outvote the Government upon its 2,900 shares, and keep the management in their owif hands in spite of anything that the Government can do until it takes possession under the terms of the act by paying the balance due on these five shares. Thus, although the Government owns 9,995 shares out of 10,000, the management of the corporation until those five shares are extinguished is absolutely and entirely in the control of the five shareholders.

I trust that I shall be pardoned for showing at some length the true position of these five shares, because it is necessary to a full understanding of the case. I have assumed that Senators have looked at these acts of the Kentucky Legislature, or followed me far enough to understand that under these acts the United States have acquired the right to this whole property except five shares. Having thus done so, I want to show what this board themselves say in 1855, and I read from the document already referred to on page 20:

The president of the company concludes his report with the following important statements:

These reduced rates will yield a sufficient revenue to meet the ordinary expenses of the canal, and to make some repairs that are necessary. The canal is now ready to be transferred to the custody of the General Government so soon as the Department may be prepared to receive it. The board of president and directors beg leave to say that they will cheerfully continue to direct the affairs of the work as heretofore so long as the Department may wish the same intrusted to their care.

There is a distinct recognition that the property belongs to the Government.

The canal is now ready to be transferred to the custody of the General Government so soon as the Department may be prepared to receive it.

I ask attention now to what the Secretary of the Treasury answered to that. On page 14 of the same document he says:

Under the process of purchase the individual stock was all acquired; and in January, 1855, the company tendered the same to the Government through the Secretary of the Treasury, on the conditions of its amended charter, as above recited. The president of the company reports that the Secretary (Mr. Guthrie) in his answer to this proffer, said that there had been no legislation by Congress authorizing its acceptance, but requested the president and directors each to retain one share, (for eligibility,) and to manage it under the charter until authority might by law be conferred upon the Department to receive it. The board of directors then reduced the tolls 50 per cent., believing that they would then give sufficint income for repairs and improvements; and since that time its income has been so expended. In April, 1855, the Secretary of the Treasury, under the direction of the President of the United States, (Mr. Pierce,) instructed the board of directors to make certain improvements, which are now (May 28, 1858) nearly, possibly quite, completed.

Mark these three things: The directors say the canal is ready to be transferred to the Government; the Secretary of the Treasury says, "Hold five shares for eligibility;" the directors say, "We will do so, and cheerfully manage it for the Government;" and then in April following the President of the United States instructed the board of directors to make certain improvements "which are now nearly, possibly quite, completed."

Mr. CONKLING. What report is that?

Mr. SCOTT. This report is made in May, 1858. The Government assumes all the ownership by directing improvements to be made. But to proceed——

Mr. CARPENTER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) Will my friend allow me? I do not wish to interrupt his argument, but I do wish to ask him one or two questions as to constitutional and legal points.

Mr. SCOTT. As I am endeavoring to get the financial relations of this Government to the work before the Senate, I would prefer that any such question should be deferred until I finish that subject.

I proceed now to page 12 of this same report. On that page the directors of the company then acting are named:

John Hulme, Charles H. Lewis, Charles W. Short, James Marshall, and J. H. Rhorer, own each one share of the stock of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company, making five shares, [estimated at the time to be worth $267 per share;] the remaining 9,995 shares are in the name of the United States. The individuals above named, [he continues,] making the board of president and directors, as provided by the charter and by-laws, will cheerfully continue to manage the work as long as it may remain unaccepted by the Government.

And this in 1855 is in a report from the president of the canal company. But again, further on, the following statement is made:

On the 25th November, 1857, in response to a communication of the 4th of same month from the Secretary of the Treasury, (Mr. Cobb,) calling for a report "embracing such facts and information as may be useful and interesting to the public," the president of the canal wrote at considerable length. He sets forth the fact that, acting under the charter of the company, as amended by the Legislature of Kentucky in February, 1842, the board had from year to year appropriated the net income of the canal to the purchase of the individual stock, until, on the 31st January, 1855, the amount then on hand being sufficient to extinguish all that remained, he announced to the Department the readiness of the board to tender the custody of the canal to the United States upon the conditions prescribed by the amended charter. "The Department," he says, "replied that there had been no legislation authorizing the acceptance of the canal, and requested that the president and directors should each retain one share of stock" for eligibility as a managing board, and continue the management until there should be legislation upon the subject by Congress, which they consented to do, and their management of the canal, he says, was "with strict reference to the requirements of its charter."

That was in 1857. In 1858 the Secretary of the Treasury writes as follows to the officers of the canal:

Referring to the report made by you on the 25th November last, upon the condition and prospects of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company, I have to say that you will take no further steps for the construction of a branch canal and make no expenditures of the company's revenues in reference thereto. You will incur no expenses beyond keeping the canal in repair, as already instructed by this Department. You will also refrain from using the credit of the company in any way for a like purpose, but leave the whole matter in abeyance until you are further advised by this Department, as all the facts in the case will be reported to Congress for its action.

From 1855 to 1858 the ownership of the Government had been acknowledged, the Government had directed the work, and in 1857 had consented to the construction of this branch canal; in 1858 Mr. Cobb, assuming still to act for the Government, directs them to proceed no further with it; and then for the first time comes the denial by the directors of the right of the Secretary of the Treasury to exercise a controlling voice in the direction of the course and affairs of the company. They contend that it is still a corporation of the State of Kentucky; and while they do not deny the right of the Government to the stock, they claim that the corporators residing in the State of Kentucky have the exclusive management of the canal. This issue is fairly made on pages 24 and 25 of the document from which I read, but I will not take up time any further in quoting from it on this point.

In 1867, without reciting what had occurred in the intermediate time, appears a remarkable phase in the history of the Louisville and Portland Canal; and that it may appear how remarkable it is I wish to recall to the mind of the Senate the fact that the person who requested that five shares should be retained by the directors to make them eligible was James Guthrie, the Secretary of the Treasury, and that the person who wrote the letter in 1867 from which I will read was also James Guthrie, who in the mean time had become, I suppose, the owner of one of these five shares of stock, for he signs himself the president of the canal company when he writes this letter.

On page 20, to which I have already referred, Mr. Guthrie, as Secretary of the Treasury, made use of this language:

The canal, with the exception of the five shares, is now the property of the United States, and may, as Congress shall direct, be enlarged to suit the trade of the Ohio, as suggested by Mr. Hulme.

"Is now the property of the United States." That was in 1855, when he was Secretary of the Treasury. In 1867 he writes this letter, found on page 47 of the report to which I have referred, in which he makes use of this language:

The fact of this company being to-day, as it has been from the beginning, the creature of Kentucky laws, and subject only to those laws, is either not known or is disregarded by those who affect to consider the United States as the owner of the canal, or as possessing such property therein as to be enabled at once to put the canal under the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury. The United States have, as at present the subject stands, not a third of the stock of the company, and would possess no right to control the company by congressional law touching the canal, unless, indeed, that law should be an act to accept the canal from the president and directors upon the conditions prescribed by the amendment to the company's charter passed by the Kentucky Legislature in the winter of 1842, and subsequently formally accepted by a vote of the company.

Mr. Guthrie having as Secretary of the Treasury in 1855 stated that this canal was the property of the Government, and having as president of this canal company in 1867 made this statement, there will naturally be some curiosity to understand why this change of position had occurred. That it may not escape the mind of the Senate let me repeat his language, and add to it what I omitted in the first quotation:

The canal, with the exception of the five shares, is now the property of the United States, and may, as Congress shall direct, be enlarged to suit the trade of the Ohio, as suggested by Mr. Hulme [in an accompanying letter] from the tolls, or by surrendering the canal to the Commonwealth of Kentucky on such terms as will secure the same object and make it free.

Could two more explicit assertions of the right of property in that canal be made? The one is that the canal with the exception of five shares is now the property of the United States; and the other is the assumption that the Government so far owns the canal that it can surrender it to the State of Kentucky.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Was Mr. Guthrie at that time the owner of one share?

Mr. SCOTT. Whether he was or was not the owner of one share in 1855, at the time this language was used, I am not informed. He may have been an owner of shares at that time; but in 1867, subsequently, he could not have been the president of the company unless he was the owner of at least one share, and there was but one share for him to be the owner of at that time. Whether it was an original share which he continued to hold, or whether he had acquired it in the mean time, I am not informed; but that makes no difference for the purposes of this argument.

The Government of the United States permitted the tolls to the amount of $1,700,000 to be paid over in the acquisition of this stock, the people of the United States having down to this time paid in tolls to that canal company and in appropriations almost $6,000,000. The Government being the owner of all these shares, the question comes up, why have we not been in possession of it since 1855? There ought certainly to be some good reason for it; and now I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate what I think, acting on our knowledge of average human nature, will be a very good explanation of why these five directors wish to hold control of this canal.

I find on page 20 of this document this significant statement, which led me to look into this question, for I confess that when the report from the Finance Committee was made there were things connected with the canal of which I was not aware—there is an item which attracted attention. In 1854, just prior to the time it was supposed this work was going to pass from the control of the corporation into the hands of the Government, this item is mentioned:

Among the expenses noted as "incidental" is mentioned an item of $7,500 extra compensation voted by the stockholders at their annual meeting in January, 1854, to be paid to the officers.

This led naturally to the inquiry what compensation these officers received, and upon going to the Treasury Department I find there, in a letter on file, that the president of the company receives $1,500 a year; the secretary receives $1,500 a year; the treasurer receives $1,000, and these officers are all directors; the vice-president receives $1,000; the counsel receives $500, making $5,500 a year in salaries. They employ a superintendent, at $3,000 a year; an assistant, at $2,500; a collector, at $1,800. All the other employés are put at $31,212, and contingencies at $22,000. I mention all these to show that $66,000, salaries and all, is the amount which they consider necessary to keep up the canal and all this work—a two-mile canal upon which the tolls for 1873 are estimated by General Weitzell at $350,000.

In addition to that, that I may do no injustice to anybody, I wish to state further who the directors are, and what I find in a letter, a copy of which I have before me, on file in the Treasury Department. The directors now are Joshua T. Speed, Jonas H. Rhorer, James W. Henning, Enos Lochhart, and John Caperton, and in this letter on file in the Treasury Department this statement is made that these five gentlemen who are the directors in the canal company are also directors in a savings-bank in Louisville where the tolls received by this canal are deposited, and the letter shows by reference to the report made by Mr. Gallagher in 1867 that the cash balances that have been in the treasury of that company beginning in 1841 were then $54,440, and in 1867 were $239,853, making an average of over $90,000 in the years intervening between 1854 and 1867, and as the tolls are being increased every year the natural supposition is that the balance that they have to use in their savings-bank is over $200,000 of the Government money.

Mr. President, is it not barely possible that salaries amounting to $5,500 a year for managing a canal two miles in length, with deposits amounting to $200,000 a year to be used for profit in a savings-bank, may present some reasons to those five gentlemen why the commerce of the Ohio River should be taxed, and why this canal should not be handed over to the control of the Government of the United States. But is it a good reason why the Government should not assume control of its property, property for which it has paid, property to complete and enlarge which it has paid $1,278,000 since 1858; property for which it is liable for a mortgage put upon it by the joint authority of the State of Kentucky and the United States for about $1,100,000 more? Unless there are some controlling reasons why the Government should not enter upon and control this property, it is amazing that it has been permitted to lie so long.

And, Mr. President, it may also be said in this connection—and I ask the attention of those who live in States adjoining this great thoroughfare of commerce to it, and whose people have been paying toll upon that canal at rates fixed by these five gentlemen—is it not reasonable to suppose that they are also interested in preventing a reduction of the tolls, because as the tolls come down, the deposits in the savings-bank diminish also? Fifty cents a ton on the commerce of the Ohio River will make a better fund to bank on than twenty-five cents a ton; and twenty-five cents a ton will make a better fund to bank on than ten cents a ton, to which the tax might now be reduced and pay expenses.

Mr. President, I have thought it due to the people who inhabit the seven States on the Ohio River and the fourteen States that are interested in this commerce on the Ohio and the Mississippi that this interesting management of the property of the Government which has been for so long in the hands of these five gentlemen and their predecessors should be brought before the Senate, and that we should inquire whether there are good reasons why they should be permitted longer to control this canal and to tax commerce for their own profit.

What reasons are urged? In the first place, we directed the Secretary of the Treasury last year to take possession of the canal. It is now found that the five shares are not ours yet; that we owe a little on them. Well, I wish to call attention to that, for another fact has come to my knowledge in looking this thing up; and it is this: It has been argued that as long as these five shares remain in the hands of these five directors, the corporation exists; and that we must buy them for the purpose of extinguishing that corporation. Now, mark it, their shares were worth $258 in 1855. You have noticed that in all these reports they acknowledge that there is only $100 due to them. Now how did that come about? It came about in this way: In 1864, long after 1855, long after this mortgage was put upon the property, just before Mr. Guthrie wrote that remarkable letter, each one of these five share-holders took out of the money that was passing through his hands $242 on his share and left $100 due him from the United States; and it was a pretty good operation. We all know that our Kentucky friends have a great deal of credit for sharp business capacity; and here was a stock which had been watered to the extent of 50 per cent. in 1842, on which they had been getting interest at the rate of 6 per cent. on the increased value from 1842 to 1855, and then they take out $242, more than double the original par value, leaving a part of the interest only unpaid, and then they compound interest on that up to the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope this subject will be continued, now that we are upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is the bill (S. No. 446) to restore the rights of the State of Louisiana, on which the pending question is the amendment of the Senator from Delaware,[Mr. BAYARD,] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. STOCKTON] is entitled to the floor. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the bill be informally laid aside to continue the consideration of the matter pending at the close of the morning hour.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from New Jersey is not in his seat.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from New Jersey told me he had no objection whatsoever to our going on with this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the unfinished business will be laid aside informally, subject to be called up by any Senator. The Chair hears no objection; and the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 350) providing for the payment of the bonds of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company is still before the Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I have shown—and I have refrained from going into many particulars in reference to it—that the stock of the company has been purchased so that the original stockholders have been paid not only their own investment but 50 per cent. more, with interest on it, too, until they were paid. I have shown that these five stockholders were willing to transfer their property to the Government, and that they only refrained from doing so at the request of the then Secretary of the Treasury. I have shown that from that time down to the present these gentlemen, if the statement on file in the Treasury Department be correct—and I have no reason to doubt it—have been paid by the United States salaries amounting to $5,500 a year for banking upon the money of the Government.

I now ask why should this state of things continue? As I have already said, in 1873 we directed the Secretary of the Treasury to take possession of the work. The first objection that has been made, as I have stated, is that there are five stockholders and that we must extinguish their stock. I was making the statement, when interrupted by the expiration of the morning hour, that so far from being stockholders, they are really creditors to the amount of $100 each. They have accepted $242 from the United States on the share of stock held by each, and it does not lie in their mouths any longer to say that that stock does not belong to the Government of the United States. We have performed the condition, and they have been paid in part for each share and cannot refuse the balance. Does it lie in their mouths to say to us, "you cannot now assume control of this work; we are the stockholders, we breathe the breath of life into this corporation created by the State of Kentucky; and the Government of the United States must stand off and permit us to control the commerce of the Ohio River by virtue of our position as directors?"

But there were other reasons given, and I propose to consider them very briefly to see whether there is enough in them to justify us in not taking possession of this canal. I do not wish to rush into any unadvised proceeding. I do not wish to put the Government in a position in which we shall encounter any greater risks than the benefits which we shall derive from this proceeding. I wish to give the commerce of the Ohio River the benefit of free navigation, but I will not do it if I am satisfied that in doing so we encounter risks which are of greater injury to the Government than this remedy will be of benefit to the people; but I wish to consider these questions fairly, and to show, if I can, that, even if this bill requires amendment to prevent any difficulty that may be suggested, there ought not to be one hour of delay that can be avoided in assuming the control of this canal.

What, then, are the reasons that are given as to why we should not take the control of the canal? The Secretary of the Treasury states that a lawsuit was instituted, and that was the reason why he did not execute the act of 1873. Perhaps it is as well that he did not. The act of 1873 directs the possession to be taken of this work under the terms of an act of the Legislature of Kentucky passed in 1872, to which I will briefly refer. But before coming to that legislation I wish to say a word or two about this lawsuit. It is very fully considered in the report made by the House committee at this session, and there are two answers given to the pendency of that lawsuit in that report. One is that the title which is now set up in the suit was passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States, and the title of the party from whom the canal company derived its title was decided to be a good title in fee-simple. The second answer is that that decision having been made in 1835 and the canal company having been in adverse possession ever since and the statutes of Kentucky prohibiting cumulative disabilities from preventing the running of the statute of limitations for more than thirty years, the title would be good by the statute of limitations under the laws of Kentucky and the decision of its supreme court even if it had been originally defective.

I submit there is still another answer. I do not know whether I am right or not; I have not been able to lay my hands on the statutes of Kentucky to see whether they have enacted the law usual in most of the States, that where a specific mode of redress is pointed out by statute the party injured must take the statutory and not the common-law remedy. Upon looking at the act of incorporation the eighth section of it provides for entering upon lands, taking them for public use by virtue of the power of eminent domain granted for that purpose by the Commonwealth of Kentucky to this corporation, and then provides a mode in which the damages are to be assessed for the taking of such land. I have already said that I am not sufficiently familiar with the laws of Kentucky to say that this is certainly a defense, but it strikes me that this power having been exercised under the act of incorporation as far back as 1825, if there be a remedy for claimants of this land it is not an action of ejectment to recover the land itself upon which the canal is constructed, but it would be a proceeding under that act for the purpose of assessing the damages that they would have been entitled to at that time if they had title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would depend on the regularity of the original proceeding, would it not? If the entry was illegal and not in conformity to the charter, the right of the owner would not be divested, of course.

Mr. SCOTT. Under the powers of the act of incorporation, if the purchase from the party claiming title at that time was not a good one, if he had not title and the corporation entered on this land and appropriated it, let the owner be who he may, his remedy at this time would be not an action of ejectment, but a proceeding under the eighth section, for the purpose of having the damages assessed, as they were at the time of the appropriation. I merely suggest that; but I do not think it is worth while to take up time in discussing whether it is right or wrong, because the statutes of limitation and the decision of the supreme court of Kentucky would be a complete answer, even if the ruling of the court upon the question of whether a fee-simple passed by the will of John Campbell and the subsequent conveyance were reversed.

Mr. CARPENTER. Now will my friend allow me to ask him a question? As I understand the case here, there was a corporation created by the State of Kentucky in which the United States claimed to be a stockholder, together with various private persons. Now my first doubt is whether the United States can be a stockholder in a State corporation. The United States for the purpose of regulating commerce may undoubtedly build canals; it may create a corporation for the purpose of building them; but must it not be its own corporation? For instance the Bank of the United States, in which the United States was a stockholder, was an instrumentality of this Government through and by which this Government exercised one of its functions. Now, can the United States become a stockholder in a mere State corporation? Could the United States hold stock in a State bank created and chartered entirely by a State?

Now I understand that all the stock is to be extinguished and the United States is to become the equitable owner of this canal. If the United States can be the equitable owner of the stock, then of course the corporation is abolished; and I understand the theory of the friends of this bill is that what has taken place and will take place must amount to extinguishing the corporation. Then what becomes of the property of the corporation? The State of Kentucky cedes to us, as I understand, the sovereignty and jurisdiction over the locus; but the property is held, if held at all, in virtue of the stock. Now, when all the stock is transferred to the United States, if the United States can be the owner of that stock, any right which pertains to that stock comes to the United States only in right of that stock and is a right which it cannot enforce.

I put this question for information, because I have not had time to examine the matter, but it strikes me that unless the proposition can be maintained that the United States may be a stockholder in a State corporation (which I should resist unless very strong arguments can be produced on that point) our whole title would fail. We are to get nothing because the State of Kentucky has nothing to convey to us except the mere sovereignty and jurisdiction. She does not own the acres on which this canal is located; she cedes us the sovereignty and general jurisdiction; but after the corporation is extinguished and the franchises of that corporation expire, what is to prevent the original owner of that land from reclaiming it in a proper proceeding?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I am very sorry my friend was not here about fifty years ago for the purpose of preventing the Government getting into this disagreeable difficulty, and I hope he will remain here fifty years hence to prevent it getting in any more.

Mr. CARPENTER. I am very glad I was not here fifty years ago.

Mr. SCOTT. But the position in which we find ourselves now is that the Government of the United States under acts of Congress did become the owner of certain shares of stock; it has subscribed for them and paid for them. By the acts of the Legislature of Kentucky, assent was given to the United States either becoming the owner of or extinguishing, for the purpose of making the commerce of the Ohio River free of toll, all the remaining shares of stock.

Mr. CARPENTER. Did the State profess to give us any power?

Mr. SCOTT. I simply wish to get before the Senator my view of the question which he has presented. I do not assert at all that the original question was not surrounded by difficulties, nor that by virtue of the exercise of this power we are free from difficulties yet. But the State of Kentucky, which did create this corporation and which had jurisdiction over it and over the property it had acquired until it saw proper to cede that jurisdiction, did acquiesce in the Government of the United States becoming the owner of the stock to the extent of extinguishing the whole of it, and did consent that the Government of the United States when the whole of it was extinguished should take the property which represented the stock and should have jurisdiction over it. Now, having done all this, if we do take the property which is the representative of the corporate stock, who is to contest the ownership with us? We do not abandon the canal for the purpose for which it was appropriated under the corporate powers granted by the State of Kentucky. We propose to take possession of the property and to keep possession of it for the purpose of making the commerce of the Ohio River free; and I submit that the State of Kentucky cannot contest it with us. The persons who originally owned the title have conveyed it by deed, and the Supreme Court having decided that that deed vested a fee-simple in the company, they cannot contest it with us.

Mr. CARPENTER. No; but if the company has become extinguished or shall be dissolved, then of course the company does not any longer own the property. It goes somewhere.

Mr. SCOTT. It goes to the United States.

Mr. CARPENTER. Now the question is whether it escheats to the State of Kentucky or whether it reverts to the original owner. My impression is that where property is taken in this way for a specific public use, when the public use ceases the property reverts to the original owner. Now suppose the owner here brings his action of ejectment for this land. We cannot reply that we have taken it for public use by the right of our eminent domain, for we have not got it. Our reply is that we became a stockholder in the corporation which owned it. The answer to that would be, "You cannot become a stockholder in such a corporation; the United States has no constitutional power to embark in any such enterprise." So it only shifts the difficulty for the moment, but ultimately it must come back to the same point and rest there.

Mr. SCOTT. Do I understand the Senator as taking the position that if the original act was unconstitutional authorizing the Government of the United States to take stock, and all that has been done under it since by the United States for the purpose of acquiring the canal itself, an improvement he agrees Congress has the power to make has been of so little validity, either under the authority of the acts of Congress or by virtue of conveyances made by the owners in fee-simple of the property, that the United States now cannot hold that property?

Mr. CARPENTER. I have always been educated to suppose that what was done under an unconstitutional act was void. If the United States has obtained a conveyance from these individuals to the United States, of course that ends the question.

Mr. SCOTT. I am stating that the canal company obtained the conveyance of the owner of the property.

Mr. CARPENTER. Now the question is how do we derive title from the company? By virtue of being a stockholder. If we could not be a stockholder we could not derive title in that way.

Mr. SCOTT. Suppose, then, that proceedings had been instituted the moment all the stock was considered as vested in the United States, for the purpose of escheating the property to the State of Kentucky, could the State of Kentucky, having herself given authority to the United States to take the stock and having herself by her own act ceded jurisdiction over the property represented by the stock—could the State of Kentucky come in and claim it as against the United States? And if there be two sovereignties claiming against each other in that manner, I presume the United States would be about as well able to take care of its rights as the State of Kentucky.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin another question. If he assumes that this power was unconstitutional, I ask him whether the United States would not have a lien on all the money spent?

Mr. CARPENTER. I do not think the United States acquires any lien by paying out money under an unconstitutional law.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania allow me to read on this question whether the United States could own that stock two sentences from the opinion of Justice Miller in the case that was brought in respect to this very property before him. He says:

> A brief reference to the history of this canal and its relation to the Government of the United States is essential to an understanding of the matter presented now for consideration.
>
> By an act of the Kentucky Legislature of January 12, 1825, a corporation was chartered by the name of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company, to construct a canal around the Falls of the Ohio River, with a capital stock of $600,000, divided into shares of $100 each, with the right to levy tolls on vessels passing through the canal. By subsequent statutes the capital was increased to ten thousand shares, and the United States under acts of Congress became the owner of twenty-nine hundred and ten of said shares.

Mr. CARPENTER. Was the question raised as to the constitutional power?

Mr. THURMAN. No, because nobody ever supposed it was unconstitutional.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator is lawyer enough as well as Senator enough to know that no decision is authority upon a point that was not suggested or discussed, and that, as my friend suggests, was not raised.

Mr. THURMAN. But there is a decision expressly here that these men are mere trustees for the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. That is a mere historical recital of facts.

Mr. THURMAN. The case was decided exactly upon the ground that they were mere trustees for the United States, the owner of the stock.

Mr. SCOTT. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the language of the act of Kentucky of 1844 as bearing upon the point which I was making at the time the Senator from Ohio made his suggestion. I will read the whole section of the act of 1844:

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, That in the event of the United States becoming the sole owner of the Louisville and Portland Canal, the jurisdiction of this Commonwealth over said canal shall be yielded up to the Government of the United States; and no annual report, as mentioned in the charter of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company, shall be required to be made by the United States, or the agents and superintendents of said canal, to the General Assembly of this Commonwealth.

Now, if the original owners of the title of the soil upon which this canal was constructed, pronounced to be good, conveyed to the Louisville and Portland Canal Company, certainly neither those owners nor the canal company as such can claim it against the United States.

Mr. CARPENTER. That is the very question, and that depends upon this further question——

Mr. SCOTT Then further, if neither the original owners nor the Louisville and Portland Canal Company as a corporation can claim it as against the United States, then the State of Kentucky having agreed that the United States should become the sole owner of it could certainly never institute proceedings to recover that canal.

Mr. CARPENTER. The question is, what becomes of this property—I mean the soil on which the canal is laid—when the corporation to which it was conveyed by deed becomes dissolved? If it escheats to the State of Kentucky, that is one thing, and these acts may be sufficient. If, however, as I incline to suppose, the title would revert to the original owner when the corporation which held it ceased, then that private owner or his heirs and assigns would not be estopped by anything the State of Kentucky had done or anything that Congress had done.

I want to say on this subject that I am just as much in favor of accomplishing the purpose the Senator is after as he is, to stop the excessive tax on that commerce, but I want to do it so that it will stay down when we do it.

Mr. SCOTT. Then, Mr. President, let us take possession of this canal. We have paid for it. It is ours by acknowledgment of the officers of the company, by acknowledgment of the State of Kentucky, and having taken possession of it, if there be any claimant to go into any court and demand it from us, then will be the time for us to consider the answer we will make to such demand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But your bill provides for accepting certain grants and powers from the State of Kentucky on certain terms imposed by that State.

Mr. SCOTT. I will come to that in a moment. I supposed I would be through with all that before this, but the question propounded by the Senator from Wisconsin has detained me from explaining that.

Mr. STEVENSON. Before the Senator from Wisconsin leaves the Chamber I desire, with the permission of the Senator from Pennsylvania, to relieve his mind upon the constitutional difficulty he seems to labor under upon this subject.

The land covered by the Louisville and Portland Canal was conveyed I believe by John Rowan, in 1825, or thereabouts, to this corporation and constituted part of its capital stock. That property and its franchises were represented by the shares of stock issued by the company under its charter from the State of Kentucky. The United States became a subscriber to a large amount of this stock under the authority of acts of Congress and of the Legislature of Kentucky. The constitutional power of the United States to make the purchase or the validity of the congressional enactments under which that power was exercised seems not to have been challenged or questioned in this body at that day. Upon the contrary, the United States continued to make additional purchases of stock in the company, so that when this canal was finished in 1830 by the company, the United States owned at that time 2,335 shares and individuals 3,665. As early as 1826 the necessity of making this canal a free channel of commerce was urged upon Congress by memorials and petitions from many of the States, urging the purchase of all this stock by the United States with the avowed object of making it free and dedicating it perpetually as a national highway. These memorials and petitions were referred to committees both in the House and in the Senate, where they were considered and reported upon. Mr. Webster, Mr. Clay, Mr. Calhoun, Mr. Benton, and many others of the wisest and most gifted statesmen that ever graced this Chamber held at that time seats on this floor. Yet we find at that early period congressional enactments authorizing and directing subscription on the part of this Government for 1,000 shares of the capital stock of the Louisville and Portland Canal. At a subsequent period Congress, by an act approved March 2, 1829, authorized the purchase, on the part of the United States, of not exceeding 1,350 shares of the forfeited stock of that company. Still later, upon the 11th of January, 1833, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce in the Senate of the United States, to which had been referred other petitions and memorials praying the United States to purchase the entire private stock held by individuals in the Louisville and Portland Canal, in order that the Government of the United States might promptly make that canal free, save but a small tax necessary to operate the work and keep it in repair, reported the actual cost of such purchase, and recommended and reported a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to effect such purchase. I take it for granted if there had been at that time any question of the want of power on the part of the United States to purchase and hold this property under the commercial power conferred on Congress by the Constitution, with the legal ability which then existed in that body, the objection now urged by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] would scarcely have escaped them, especially would it seem so as this report was debated and adopted.

Again, in a subsequent report, hear the committee in regard to this same proposition:

The committee have diligently investigated the nature and merits of the numerous memorials and petitions referred to them, and have determined that the views of the petitioners are reasonable and just. * * * In adopting the views of the memoralists the committee do not consider that they are promoting the interests and wishes of any limited or peculiar section in opposition to the general welfare, but that they are advocating a measure of universal convenience and national utility. They deem the object—

To wit, the exclusive ownership of the United States in this canal for the purposes of commerce—

They deem the object national, not sectional. * * * An object of such national concernment, it seems to the committee, is entitled to the most respectful and liberal consideration of the Government. The great and increasing commerce and trade of a vast portion of the country is subjected to unjust and distressing exactions, and it is the province as it is the duty of the Government to relieve it of the burden. The munificence of the Government has been often extended to the Atlantic States, in expenditures on the sea-board and elsewhere, and now every sentiment of justice and impulse of patriotism plead for the exercise of the same liberality toward those who inhabit the valley of the Mississippi.

So, too, in the House of Representatives on the 15th January, 1838, we find another favorable report on the same subject, and on the 8th March following Mr. Graves, a Representative in Congress from the Louisville district in Kentucky, from the same committee, reported "A bill to authorize the purchase of the stock held by individuals in the Louisville and Portland Canal, and to make the navigation thereof free."

In 1840 the exclusive ownership of this canal was again pressed in the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Roads and Canals, having still before them the memorials and petitions of numerous citizens of several States praying Congress to purchase up the stock held by individuals in the Louisville and Portland Canal and to make the navigation thereof free, referred to them two years before, on motion, February 10, Mr. Graves's report and bill of 8th March, 1838, were ordered to be reprinted. No additional facts or arguments were presented and no legislation was had.

On the 10th of February, 1844, the House of Representatives, by resolution, called upon the Secretary of the Treasury for certain information relative to the Louisville and Portland Canal; the condition of the work, the amount of tolls collected, the effect of such tolls upon the commerce of the river, whether the canal was of sufficient capacity to accommodate that commerce, and as to the desirability of enlargement. The Secretary of the Treasury (Mr. Spencer) immediately communicated these resolutions to the surveyors of customs at Cincinnati, Louisville, and Saint Louis, and the president of the canal company, at Louisville, calling for the information desired; and on the 22d of February he communicated to the Speaker of the House the several replies of those officers, which were on the 26th read and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

By an act of the Legislature of Kentucky approved February 21, 1842, the president and directors of the canal company were authorized, whenever so directed by the stockholders thereof, to sell the shares of stock owned by individuals in said canal, or owned by the State of Kentucky or by the city of Louisville, for the purpose of making the canal free of tolls, and we accordingly find that from that time to the year 1855 the United States continued to purchase up annually the stock in the Louisville and Portland Canal, until in that year it became the sole owner of the entire stock in said company.

With such continued legislation on the part of Congress and the Legislature of Kentucky for a period of fifty years, looking to the national object of making this canal free—with such acquiescence by Congress and Kentucky in the achievement of such a result—is it not rather late, I submit to my friend from Wisconsin, to question the power of Congress to make this purchase and hold this canal with the object of making it free?

Mr. CARPENTER. I do not question, if the Senator will permit me, that it is a national object. I do not question that the United States might exercise that power.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is the exact point which I understand the Senator to deny: the want of constitutional power to make the purchase. Hence I insisted that beginning with the subscriptions to the stock of this company by the United States in 1826 under the laws of Congress and of Kentucky; with its regular and continued purchases of stock from that period, under the same authority, to 1855 when the United States by a purchase of the whole amount of stock became the exclusive owner; looking to the subsequent appropriations of money made by Congress for the enlargement of that canal, is it not too late now to doubt the constitutional power especially after the lucid and clear opinion of one of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States (Mr. Justice Miller) upon it? Mr. Madison once vetoed the Bank of the United States, but upon its recharter by Congress, and the universal acclamation and acquiescence of popular opinion, that patriotic and enlightened statesman yielded his own convictions of constitutional power and signed the bill. Tested by such a standard, if the constitutionality of any question could be regarded as settled, the power of the United States to purchase and make this canal free, this must be one.

Mr. CARPENTER. It is the highest authority undoubtedly, except the Constitution itself.

Mr. STEVENSON. But time and acquiescence settle the true construction of that instrument.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I had proceeded so far as to notice two objections to taking possession of the canal—one was the existence of five shares of stock, and the other the pendency of a suit by the heirs of Campbell—when the question was put by the Senator from Wisconsin which has caused this digression.

Now there are certain questions arising under the legislation of Kentucky which I propose to refer to briefly, simply enough to bring them before the Senate. The act of 1842 imposed a condition on the transfer of the property. It was that tolls were to be levied only sufficient to keep the canal in repair.

It also contained the following provision and reservation:

And further to protect and guard the interests of commerce, the superintendents or agents in charge of said canal shall ever hereafter, on the 1st Monday in January annually, report to the General Assembly of Kentucky the amount of tolls levied and received, and of the charges and expenses incurred on the same—the General Assembly reserving the right of directing the amount annually to be collected, if found too much for the purposes contemplated by this amended act.

The first condition imposed in reference to the tolls being made only equal to the expenses is in accord with the professed object of the act to make the commerce of the river free. The second is equally so. When the act of 1844 was passed, a release in effect from this condition; and the reservation, as I construe the act, is contained in it, for it cedes jurisdiction and it releases the agents of the United States from making these reports, the reports being required only for the purpose of enabling the Legislature of Kentucky to reduce the tolls if too much was put on. And the Legislature having released the United States from making those reports, I submit that they have abandoned the whole purpose of the reservation in the act of 1842; and that even if the cession of jurisdiction did not carry with it all power over the whole work, there is in the language of the act of 1844 a relinquishment of that right to reduce the tolls.

Take both these acts together, and they propose, first, to make the canal free of tolls; second, that the shares purchased are to be held in trust for that purpose, and that when they are all purchased they are to be transferred to the United States on the condition; third, that only sufficient tolls be levied to keep up the canal; fourth, the condition to which I have already referred is inserted; and, fifth, to the same end there is a provision that the original tolls are never to be increased.

I have already referred to the act of 1844 and what was done under these acts, bringing the history of the work down to 1855. From that point another question arises. It is alleged that prior to this Kentucky had taxed this canal, and the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] read from the debate in the House of Representatives, showing that in the year 1846, according to the report of the canal company, Kentucky had taxed its property. Suppose she had. While I only make this comment on it——

Mr. CONKLING. In following years also.

Mr. SCOTT. So it is stated, but not for what years. While I make only this comment on it, that the information the Senator from New York read, contained in a speech made in the House, was given from reports of the canal company, that when inquiry was made from whence these reports came, the gentleman—I deem it no impropriety to say—who gave that information declined to inform the House from whence that information did come, and the inference I make is that he was furnished with these reports from the directors, who wish to continue possession of the canal.

In what year were taxes imposed by Kentucky? I have inquired of the Senators from Kentucky, and they inform me they have no knowledge of any having been imposed. But suppose taxes were imposed in 1846. Could anybody doubt the right of Kentucky to tax it in 1846? It was a State corporation then; it was within the limits of Kentucky. The time had not arrived when it was to be transferred, and hence the corporate property and the real estate were subject to the taxing power of Kentucky; and until 1855, when the United States became the whole owner of the property, the question did not arise; and I submit there is no information before us that the taxing power of Kentucky has been exercised since 1846, at least that is the date given in the extract read by the Senator from New York.

But in 1857 Kentucky passed an act authorizing a mortgage to be executed upon this canal. In 1860 Congress passed an act authorizing that mortgage to be executed. Why did they come to Congress? Why had Congress anything to do with it if the United States had not acquired control over the canal? That mortgage was executed in 1860; the money was obtained, and the process of enlarging the canal commenced.

Now, that I may not misstate the position of this canal company, having already quoted from the reports of the presidents and secretaries down to 1867, I wish to send to the desk and have read a letter put upon the minutes of this company on the 16th of December, 1867, showing what they considered their duty at that time. I ask the Clerk to read the part that I have marked.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 13th instant, the president and directors of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company have to say that they consider themselves trustees of the stockholders of the company, the objects of the trust being to cause said canal to be so enlarged and improved as to make it sufficient for the requirements of the commerce of the Ohio River, and finally to make it a free canal; and that, having no personal objects to subserve, they would willingly surrender to the Government of the United States all the rights, titles, privileges, assets, &c., of the company, provided the Government shall purchase the five shares of stock which they hold, and assume the indebtedness of the company incurred in the prosecution of the canal enlargement, and also assume the duties of the trust, which they hold to be the completion of said work of enlargement as contemplated.

Mr. SCOTT. That was the position of the canal company in 1867 after the mortgage was executed, after the money was borrowed, acknowledging that they still held that trust and that the Government of the United States was entitled to the control of the property.

Now after that time what else has been done? Beginning in 1868 appropriations have been made each year until $1,278,000 has been appropriated and expended in enlarging the canal; and then begins difficulty. In 1872, whether apprehending that the United States was about to exercise the power of taking possession or not I do not know, but by some means an act of the Legislature of Kentucky was passed which undertook to impose conditions upon this canal when transferred to the United States, and from that time we find obstacles multiplying to our taking possession. In 1873 in an appropriation bill we directed the Secretary of the Treasury to take possession under that act of 1872. I think perhaps we made a mistake in acknowledging even by implication that the Legislature of Kentucky had the right to impose the terms of the act of 1872, and if any Senator here thinks that out of abundant caution we should disclaim the authority of Kentucky to impose those conditions, I have no objection to its being done.

At the time that act was passed the Government of the United States had the right under the acts of 1842 and 1844, by virtue of what had been done under them, and by virtue of the subsequent appropriations made out of their own Treasury, to the complete and unlimited control of that work; and Kentucky had no right whatever to impose the conditions contained in the act; but in the anxiety to take possession of the work the Secretary of the Treasury was directed to take possession in conformity with that act of 1872. This bill proposes to take possession under the acts of 1842 and 1844, and I shall not object to a protest against the validity of the act of 1872. I say here I do not recognize the validity of those conditions.

But, sir, the moment the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to take the control, what do we find? It was not until after that possession was directed to be taken that the heirs of John Campbell were fished up from oblivion and the ejectment instituted in the chancery court of Louisville. Who has revived the long-lost kindred of John Campbell? By reference to the letters on file in the Treasury Department it will be found that the city of Louisville undertook to tax this corporation some years ago, and that had been sleeping the sleep of death, too; but there is a letter on file from Mr. Speed, not the president of the company, but from James Speed, dated after the passage of that act, saying that this, too, has again loomed up, and that he is now retained as corporation counsel for the purpose of defending that claim. And when that claim was examined, it was found that in 1838 the Legislature of Kentucky passed an amendment to the charter of Louisville in which they prohibited that municipality from imposing a tax upon the Louisville and Portland Canal, when they found that the councils directed their attorney to suspend the proceeding and declare by ordinance that when the United States shall become the owner of the property the claim for taxes shall be abandoned.

Mr. BAYARD. Will my friend permit me to ask him would it make any difference in result to the United States as to the validity or invalidity of the claim whether we take the canal into our hands, or whether it stays as it is, we being the beneficiaries of the stock?

Mr. SCOTT. None in the least. I have already argued that when the Senator from Delaware was not in his seat. I have never yet learned that a party claiming real estate is in a worse position in possession than out of it. There is a common maxim among the people that "possession is nine points of the law," and perhaps it will be no worse for the Government than for an individual.

But, sir, if Kentucky has parted with jurisdiction over this property, I ask where is the power in a subordinate municipal corporation in Kentucky to tax it? Parting with jurisdiction is parting with right on the part of the State to tax. If the State cannot tax, what is the use of setting up a scarecrow for us to fight about a subordinate municipal corporation in a State taxing this canal?

Mr. BAYARD. And there has been a clear cession of jurisdiction by the State.

Mr. SCOTT. I have already adverted to the financial affairs of this canal, showing the large interest which the five gentlemen in control of it have to keep it in their hands. I have already referred to the immense interests that are affected by the tolls on this canal, to the immense number of people who are affected by it; all upon the Ohio, all upon the Mississippi. Every ton of coke and coal that goes down through that canal is taxed; every ton of iron ore that leaves the wharf at Carondelet for the Upper Ohio must pay this tax; every pound of sugar, every gallon of molasses, that comes from New Orleans through that canal is taxed; the empty boats are taxed. And here is the anomaly: the corporation consists of five people, who are only creditors, who have got all their money for their stock but $100 on one share each, and they insist upon retaining their control in a property in which the Government has invested near $3,000,000, upon which the people have paid tolls to the amount of near $6,000,000, and taxing that commerce in despite of the petitions poured into Congress since 1833, demanding that this commerce shall be made free. I ask, will the Congress of the United States permit these five stockholders to take salaries of $5,500 a year for banking upon the tolls paid by these people, that they may exercise the prerogative of continuing to tax them so long as the scarecrow of an objection can be set up in Congress against taking possession? I trust not. I had hoped, when I rose, to be able in half an hour to present this case to the Senate, and would have succeeded in doing it much sooner but for the interruptions.

But I trust now that the time has come when whatever conditions may be proper to affix to this act, so that we can get into no further trouble, may be affixed by those who think them necessary, and that the one thing needful may be done, that is, displace these five directors, and put the Government of the United States in control of this property.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he has the charter of this corporation in his possession?

Mr. SCOTT. I have the act of the Legislature of Kentucky.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What I mean is the act that created this corporation and conferred its powers upon it.

Mr. SCOTT. I have it here and will hand it to the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Nobody, Mr. President, that I know of, disagrees to the idea that the United States ought to control this work so as to have the tolls reduced to the minimum; and therefore the eloquent peroration of my friend from Pennsylvania, so far as it was designed to affect our desires in rectifying this evil, was unnecessary, and so far as it relates to what are the legal difficulties which surround the affair of course it was inapplicable. No amount of eloquence ought to lead us to take a step which, when once, taken is irrevocable and which will put us, in the end, in a worse position than we are now. Everybody will admit that.

Now, then, if the United States can get into possession of this property without running the risk of restoring the title of this real estate to the descendants or grantees of the original proprietors, and without running the risk of committing itself to the dominion of the State of Kentucky to regulate what the United States shall do with this property on this public navigable river, then of course everybody is desirous of doing it; but we certainly ought to hesitate before we take any step that is to open to us fresh difficulties and fresh complications, and put us in a worse condition than we are now.

It has occurred to me, and I suggest it to the Senator from Pennsylvania, that until we can make suitable terms with the State of Kentucky, if we can get possession of this property in our own right as the stockholder and owner of this property, represented by a corporation as it is, it will be much wiser than it will be to get possession of it under any implied assent to any conditions that the State of Kentucky has imposed, or run the risk which might follow the dissolution of this corporation by our having it dissolved by omitting to have any directors, or letting it run out in any other way. That is what I submit to the candid consideration of the Senators who are interested in this question chiefly as from those places which are directly concerned in this commerce. I know that when I made this suggestion once before it produced a smile upon the faces of some Senators at the extreme innocence or want of understanding which characterized my remarks, I do not know which.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Vermont was not in his seat when I referred to that suggestion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not alluding to my friend from Pennsylvania as smiling at it.

Mr. SCOTT. I never smile at anything as innocent coming from the Senator from Vermont. But in answer to that suggestion I will say that I have looked very carefully at the act of 1842, and it will be found that under its terms these five directors hold 7,000 shares which they are authorized to vote until we get the control of the whole work; and therefore, although the Government of the United States were to transfer its whole 2,900 shares to anybody for the purpose of getting actual possession of the work, those five directors, so long as one share is unextinguished, can outvote the United States with its own stock and keep possession in spite of us.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that were stated in a court of equity I do not know but that I should join my friend from Ohio, who seems to be in a smiling mood about this business, in smiling at that proposition, although as coming from my friend from Pennsylvania I should be extremely careful before I began to smile, because I should be pretty sure there was some reason why he was right.

Mr. SCOTT. It is in the act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know it is in the act; I see it in the act; but let me suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania, and it only needs the suggestion, that inasmuch as the United States has become the legal and the equitable proprietor by buying all these shares of the whole body of this stock, as well that which is held by these five men in their own names as that which they hold as the directors of the corporation, it has in a court of equity and in a court of conscience and in a court of law the right to compel those directors to vote that stock according to the wish of the majority, the rest of the stockholders. If I were the equitable owner of these 7,000 shares and the United States of the 3,000, I should be glad to be informed upon what principle of law or equity it is that I cannot compel my trustee to vote on those shares according to my interests, so long as I ask him to vote in the election of directors or any other vote which does not interfere with the existence of the corporation or violate any law under which the corporation is created? Of course there can be but one answer to that, I submit to my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the Senator wish an answer?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator will read the letter of Mr. Guthrie in 1857, and the answer of the corporation made in 1858, he will find that that very position is taken by these gentlemen; that they are trustees having control, and that the United States cannot direct them how to proceed. I submit to my friend, while I agree with him as to the equities of the case, that we should have a right to go into court to compel these gentlemen to do the very thing he is saying they ought to do; we may just as well meet them in court as defendants as complainants, and compel them to do what he says they ought to do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am glad that the Senator from Pennsylvania and myself agree as to what the rights in legal equity of the United States are, standing in its attitude as the proprietor of this stock, of part of it the legal proprietor, and of part of it the equitable proprietor; and that is, that we have it in our legal power to coerce these directors into representing the wish of the owner of the stock in regulating the tolls at a proper limit on this canal, or in the election of a fresh board of directors. Now my friend says it is better for us to——

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at this moment, until I reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. THURMAN. I wanted to tell the Senator a fact.

Mr. EDMUNDS. After I reply to the Senator from Pennsylvania I will hear what my friend from Ohio has to say. The Senator from Pennsylvania says it is better for us to go into a court of equity as defendant than as complainant.

Mr. SCOTT. Not a court of equity. I say it is better for us to be in court as defendant where we are now with this ejectment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To be in as defendant where we are in this ejectment does not touch this question at all. The ejectment, I take it, is against the corporation, or against somebody who is in possession of the land and standing on the title of the corporation. There is no ejectment suit, I take it, in favor of this corporation against anybody. Then the plaintiff in the ejectment suit is claiming under title adverse to that of the corporation. Now the question we have to consider is the domestic question as to the interior concerns of the corporation; and my honorable friend says it is better for the United States to stand as a defendant than it is to stand as plaintiff; it is better for us to take possession and get possession and compel these directors to sue us than it is for us to sue them. Let us see. That would depend something upon the right of the two causes. If we are right in asking these directors to do a particular thing which they refuse, and which we have a legal right to ask them to do, we then go into a court of equity or a court of law as complainant, standing on the solid foundation of the law in our favor, and then we get an injunction or such other temporary relief as gives us immediately the effect that we desire, and ultimately the complete result that we desire, without being compromised with the State of Kentucky or with any adverse title or by a dissolution of the corporation. I submit that to my friend.

Now suppose we take his point of view and say, "let us go in now anyhow and let them sue us." Suppose without the aid of a court of equity we by force direct the Secretary of War to dispossess the five directors, or whatever the number is, in possession of this property; how long does my honorable friend, if their sentiments are such as he imputes to them, think it would be before they would apply to a court of the State of Kentucky to restrain the Secretary of War or any of his agents from taking possession of that property, when it is the property of a corporation chartered by the State of Kentucky, and when the agents of that corporation, its directors, are the people who are entitled to the possession and the stockholders are not? In a suit instituted in that way we should stand in the wrong, and we could not, in my humble judgment—I say it with all deference to the opinions of the Finance Committee and of the Senators from Ohio—resist an injunction based upon a complaint of that kind, because although morally we might be the owner, yet in a legal and in a legal equitable sense the law has said that our ownership must be exercised through the medium of a board of directors, and until that board of directors is displaced by some other board the stockholder or cestui que trust has no right to oust the corporation and take possession himself at large. The court would have to say that; and thus you see what the consequence would be, in my opinion, if in spite of the wishes of these directors, although they are our trustees, we should undertake to turn the trustees out of possession and take possession ourselves because we say they have not correctly performed the trust or for any other reason, unless you say the trust has expired and terminated and the corporation dissolved, for it is not a trust created, let the Senator remember, by any personal grant from one person to another; it is not a trust declared or created by ourselves; but it is only that quasi public trust which the State of Kentucky has created in this corporation and in respect of which it has pointed out the agents through whom that trust shall be executed.

What, then, are we to do? We have the power, as my friend from Pennsylvania and I agree, to coerce these directors or any others who may succeed them into performing the just objects of the corporation in keeping the canal in repair and in not charging excessive tolls, because we are the persons interested in the tolls, and we as the owners of the stock therefore have a right to call on these directors or any who shall succeed them to say what the tolls shall be within proper and suitable limits, and they have no right to resist it. I do not know that they would have any disposition to resist it; but suppose they did, then we have the remedy. Suppose we find them so intractable that it is better to change, certainly the charter provides that these directors may be changed from time to time. I do not know how that is, but certainly the charter does not provide that these men shall hold forever.

Mr. SCOTT. It requires an annual election.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The charter provides, I see, "that the president and directors first chosen shall hold their offices until the first Monday of January, 1826, or until others shall be chosen in their places. On the first Monday of January of each year the stockholders of said company shall meet and proceed to elect." That is, there is an annual election, and the directors hold over until others are chosen. That is the substance of it. Now we come to an election of directors which this charter provides for. These directors undertake to say that either individually or as the directors of the corporation they are going to vote on this stock against the wishes of the party who owns it; that is, the United States. Is any Senator willing to rise in his place and tell me that a trustee who holds stock for the benefit of another person who is the real owner, and in respect to which stock that real ownership in equity has ripened into a perfect title—I do not mean a perfect legal title, but a perfect equitable title—has a right to vote on that stock at a meeting of the corporation, against the wishes of his beneficiary? By no manner of means; and if there were any fear that these directors would undertake to perpetuate themselves in office by voting upon this stock against the will of the United States, I am sure the justice of a State court or a United States court on either bank of the Ohio would prevent that in advance of the meeting. In fact, as little acquainted as I am with law, I should be willing to undertake the job—though I must beg pardon of the Senate for using such a term as "job" in a hall of Congress, which was never heard of before—of preventing any such abuse as that, for a very small compensation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator—perhaps he is not aware of it—that Congress has twice undertaken to lower the rates of toll on the canal and has been met by these very trustees, who are simply naked trustees, by proceedings in the nature of an injunction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly; and it has been because Congress has been doing, as the Senator says, in a wrong way what I believe it is trying to do now in a way that will prove just as fruitless a thing, which in my judgment it is open for it to do in a way which would be free from any tenable objection. I do not expect, from what has been stated here, that you can take any step of any kind which will not be met by the opposition of these gentlemen; but I think it better to take a step which relieves us from the greatest number of perils and embarrassments rather than opens fresh ones to us.

Mr. MORTON. How long does the Senator propose that this canal shall be left in the control of these men? When is their possession to be terminated, according to his theory?

Mr. SHERMAN. They have held it now fifteen years.

Mr. MORTON. I want to know what the remedy of the Senator from Vermont is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have stated what my first remedy is. Considering the state of legislation in Kentucky—under no one of whose acts can I consent that the United States shall take possession, because it binds us to the performance of duties which are onerous and unjust and which may prove a great embarrassment and expense to us hereafter—my proposition is that the United States shall take possession of this canal through directors to be chosen upon its stock, and it being the equitable owner of all the stock, upon all its stock. And I propose in advance to prevent the directors, when a meeting is to come, from voting against the will of the United States on any of the stock which stands in their name, because we are the equitable owners of it and have a right to dictate who shall be elected. That is my first step.

Then having got that, having got the corporation into hands that are congenial to the wishes of the United States, and to those of the State of Kentucky as I will assume, then the next step is to lower the tolls immediately to the proper pitch, so that practically navigation is not unjustly burdened. That does that for the moment. Then for the future what is the next step? The next step, in my judgment, is to ascertain whether that corporation can be dissolved and put out of existence without any danger of a reversion of the real estate to the original owners or their descendants.

Mr. MORTON. How will you have that ascertained?

Mr. EDMUNDS. By a careful examination through the law officers of the Government to see exactly how the titles stand and what has been their history. That is the way we do in the eastern country before we take a step, find out what the state of the title is. If it be found that in point of law this private ownership in the fee is such that you cannot dissolve the corporation without a reversion, then I should safely say that it is for the interest of the United States to keep up the form of the corporation, let the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of War and five of their clerks be the directors, and keep up the shadow in order to preserve the substance. But if the corporation can be dissolved with the assent of the State of Kentucky, without any danger of a reversion of the title, then I would say to the State of Kentucky, "give us that consent and we will make such arrangement as to riparian rights, if any deserve to be protected, which we do not care to know now, as will do justice to all parties." That is my idea.

But, on the contrary, this bill proposes that we shall plunge as if with the sword into the possession of this property merely from the fact that we are the equitable owners of the stock, and set all the world at defiance. The consequence of that, I think, would be that before we got in we should be met by another injunction, which would be based, as I understand it, upon a perfectly defensible and incontrovertible foundation, that the functions over that canal could only be exercised under the law of the State of Kentucky which created the corporation, according to the methods pointed out in the corporation law, and therefore that the directors of the corporation were entitled to stand in possession, although they were liable in possession to obey the wishes of the stockholders. There would be the difficulty, which would be just like the case of a bank here in which I own all the stock. There are five directors. I want those directors to do something which they do not do. I have a right to compel them to do it in the regular charter way; but instead of doing that, I get a policeman and go down and kick the directors out of doors and take possession myself. Does any Senator suppose I could hold such a possession? By no means, or if I threatened it I should be enjoined, and all I should get then would be a fruitless litigation. That is the way it seems to me here.

I beg Senators to understand that these difficulties which occur to me are not difficulties in respect to the ultimate object they have in view, which I share in as much as they do; and that is to get this property disentangled, and in the best way, so that the Government can exercise over it the same care and protection and charge the same tolls that they would where public necessity required it for any other public improvement. I do not want to take up time about it. The committee perhaps understand it much better than I do. My only object is to contribute the suggestions that occur to me as to the difficulties that we are to plunge ourselves into by this method of legislation.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I dislike very much to prolong this discussion. I hoped we should have come to a vote on this bill before now, but I am bound to suppose, and do really suppose, that Senators who make these objections to the passage of this bill actually see in them something of value, otherwise they would not make them; and the respect I have for them requires me to say something in answer to those objections. Now let us see what they are.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] says that we ought to take possession of this property if we are quite sure that by taking possession we shall not produce an escheat or a reversion of the property to the original owners of the soil, and also if we are quite sure that by taking possession of it we shall not be subjecting ourselves to the whims or caprices of the State of Kentucky. He has not shown yet, nor has any one else shown, how our taking possession of this property would produce an escheat, would produce a reversion, or would subject us to any whim or caprice of the State of Kentucky, unless it be that the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] had some foundation in fact. But I do not propose to discuss that question at much length. I think I can satisfy my friend from Wisconsin himself that there is nothing in his point.

To say nothing about the fact that it had been passed upon by such lawyers as were named by the Senator from Kentucky, that the proposition that the United States should become a stockholder in this corporation was first met by the report of a committee on which Mr. Webster, of Massachusetts, was a member; to say nothing of the decision of Mr. Justice Miller on this same subject and the uniform action of Congress and the payment of sums of money for this purpose and the settlement of this question almost fifty years ago—to say nothing of all this, if we are to argue it as a res nova let me dispose of it in as few words as I can.

The doubt suggested is whether the United States can become a holder of stock in a State corporation? Certainly the United States cannot become the holder of stock in a State corporation if the charter prohibits the taking of stock by the United States; but there is nothing of that kind in this case. Certainly, too, the United States cannot become a shareholder in a State corporation unless it is necessary to do so or proper for it to do so in the execution of some power delegated by the Constitution to the Government of the United States. In this case I have said there is not a word of prohibition in the charter of the company against the United States becoming a stockholder. On the contrary, it was at the instance of Kentucky herself more than of anybody else that the United States did become a large shareholder, and ultimately the great shareholder, in the company.

Next, is there any power possessed by Congress in the execution of which it might be appropriate for the United States to hold stock in this corporation? Does anybody doubt, does even the most stringent interpreter of the Constitution of the United States doubt, that it would have been proper for Congress to make this canal? Nobody doubts that. Under whatever power Congress derives that right, whether under the commercial power or whether under the war power, or under whatsoever power it be, no one doubts that the United States might have made this work of improvement itself. It is admitted that what the United States may do directly, it may do through the agency of a corporation created by itself; and nobody can doubt that, for it is precisely on that principle that any State corporation for internal improvement is endowed with power to exercise the right of eminent domain; that is, on the theory that the State is doing the thing through the agency of a corporation. Then where is the objection? The United States could do it through the agency of a corporation of its own. Why can it not do it by giving aid to a State corporation if the charter of such State corporation does not prohibit such aid, does not prohibit the United States from becoming a stockholder? There is nothing in the Constitution of the United States, either in its letter or its spirit, that prohibits the United States from becoming a shareholder in a State corporation with the assent of that State, any more than there is to its becoming the owner of real estate in a State with the assent of the State; and therefore if it would be competent for the United States by a corporation of its own to make this great improvement, it is equally competent for it by subscribing to the stock of a State corporation with the assent of the State. That is all that it seems to me necessary to say on that head.

In the next place in regard to the idea that this property might escheat, it is only necessary to read the statutes to see that it could not escheat to the State of Kentucky, for the State of Kentucky has consented that the United States may become the owner of all this stock; and therefore, as was well said by the Senator from Pennsylvania, it could never claim an escheat.

Then, thirdly, as to the question whether the property would revert to the original owners of the soil, that idea must have arisen in the minds of Senators who have wholly overlooked the law in respect to corporations that prevails in this country now, and I believe in every single State in the United States. How was it at common law? By the old common law, when a corporation was dissolved the whole of its property escheated to the king, although that left its creditors, if it had any, without a dollar for their payment; for when the corporation was dissolved it had no stockholders, and it left those who had been stockholders without one single dollar of the property which they had owned. That was the rigid rule of the common law; and it went upon this simple, narrow, technical, and I was going to say rascally principle, that when the charter was forfeited and the corporation was dissolved, there was no longer any debtor in existence, and therefore there was nobody to pay the creditor. The debtor has dissolved; there is an end of him; there is nobody to pay, and so there is no stockholder or shareholder in the corporation, for the thing is dead, and therefore the case is precisely, it was said, like the death of a man leaving no heirs or legal representatives and his property must, ex necessitate, escheat to the king.

Nothing was more narrow, and technical and unjust, than any such rule as that; and it was long ago corrected, first by the court of equity in England, which said that where there were creditors they should be paid; they had a right in equity to be paid, and it was only the remainder that should escheat to the king; next by act of Parliament, which provides that there shall be no escheat and that the property shall first be liable to the payment of the debts, and the residue be divided among the shareholders. But now how is it in the United States? I do not believe there is one State in this Union in which it has not been, either by judicial decision or by statute, provided that in case of the dissolution of a corporation, its assets shall go, first, to the payment of its debts, and the remainder, if any, to distribution among its shareholders. I do not believe there is a single State in the Union in which that has not been established as the rule. That being the case, there is no reversion here; there could be no reversion. If this corporation were dissolved the only effect would be that its assets would first be applicable to the payment of its debts, and the residue to the shareholders; and who is the shareholder? The United States of America.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You say it is the directors.

Mr. THURMAN. The idea that it would revert to the original owners of the soil has not one particle of foundation in American jurisprudence or in American law. There never was a clearer proposition in the world. I repeat it is now, American law, from Maine to Mexico, that upon the dissolution of a corporation its property is liable, first, for the payment of its debts, and the residue of that property, if any, to distribution among its shareholders; and in this case, if this corporation were actually dissolved, the only effect would be just precisely what this bill provides, that the creditors should first be paid and the residue of the property remain to the United States. We provide for paying the creditors by the bill. Congress has provided for it long ago. The bill does not add one single dollar of appropriation to what has been heretofore made; and therefore providing for the payment of the debt, if the dissolution of the corporation followed from our taking possession of it and the transfer of the whole stock to us, it would leave us the owners of this property under the law as administered in every State in this Union.

But, sir, more than that, it would give us under the act of the Kentucky Legislature the complete jurisdiction over that property; so that, Mr. President, in my humble judgment, and without disrespect to those who support those ideas, they are mere scarecrows; there is nothing of substance in them at all. The idea that the State of Kentucky could claim an escheat, the idea that the people whose property was paid for forty-nine years ago, whose property was obtained for the making of this canal and paid for, could come here after receiving that payment and after this corporation has held the property for forty-nine years, and the United States has doubled it and enlarged it and expended upon it $3,000,000 and paid its debts—that they could come and claim that it reverted to them because of the dissolution of the corporation, is really nothing but a scarecrow, in my humble opinion.

But there is not even that. Let us see why it is not at all clear that our taking possession dissolves this corporation. How does the taking possession dissolve it, I should like to know? By the charter of this company unquestionably there were to be as many as five shareholders; for it required a board of five directors, and they must be the owners of stock. I presume there was such a provision that they were to be the owners of stock. That required a corporation with at least five shareholders, but it was competent at any time for the Legislature of Kentucky to agree that that corporation might be reduced to one shareholder. It would have been perfectly competent for the Legislature of Kentucky to say that corporations that require five shareholders might thereafter require but one shareholder, and it has said in substance that very thing by its act of 1842, and its act of 1844; for it has authorized the sale and transfer of the entire stock of this corporation to the United States of America. What has it said, then? That when the stock has thus all been transferred to the United States the corporate powers of the company shall cease, that the corporation shall be dissolved? Has it said that? It has not said it in so many words, and if it has said it at all in effect it is because of a provision in the act that henceforth the complete and exclusive jurisdiction of that canal shall be vested in the United States, so that there could not be exercised therein any quality not derived from the United States. But so far as the State of Kentucky is concerned there is not one word in the act that absolutely requires the dissolution of the corporation upon the transfer of the stock to the United States; nothing that would prohibit the United States from immediately transferring five shares to five persons, and then proceeding to elect those five persons directors of the corporation.

But, Mr. President, I do not think the United States ought to be bothered with any corporation about it. I quite dissent from the view of the Senator from Vermont, who thinks that this corporation ought to be perpetuated. There it no necessity for perpetuating the corporation. And now, pray, what is his remedy? Here we are in the month of April, 1874. There may be an election of directors next January. The Senator says that our proper course is, because he admits that these five men will not remain always, to file a bill in chancery to compel these men to vote for the persons as directors whom we see fit to designate; and he thinks it is perfectly clear that a court of equity would entertain such a bill and render such a decree. Now, in the first place, I have to say that that would be such a bill as I never heard of before, and I do not think it is at all clear that a court of equity would entertain any such bill or render any such decree. Certainly we do not propose to submit to a chancellor to decide who shall be the directors and let him choose the persons. If such a bill would be entertained, it must be that the United States has the right to name the persons, and then file a bill praying that these directors may be compelled to vote for those persons.

Did you ever hear of such a bill as that? Pray, under what kind of law does it come? It does not come under the execution of a contract, does it? What kind of a bill is a bill to compel these directors to vote for certain persons? Suppose they do not do it. Suppose the election comes off and they re-elect themselves, or do not hold any election at all and therefore hold over, what are you going to do? Then they are in contempt of court, and we are at the end of a long proceeding, that is a long chancery suit which might not be decided for five years, and, in the next place, at the end of a proceeding for contempt, we are to find out whether we can compel those men to vote as we want them to vote for directors of that company. But that is not all; we must do something more. Suppose that next January they are called upon to vote, for whom can they vote? They cannot vote for anybody but themselves, for they are the only individual stockholders there. Can we tell them to vote for five persons who are not members of the corporation when the charter forbids the election of such persons as directors? So that this bill which the Senator from Vermont would have would be a bill to compel these persons to vote for whom? To vote for themselves, for they can vote for nobody else; there are no other individual corporators, and the whole thing, therefore, is simply nugatory. They are as a close corporation; they are the only persons who can be elected. What is the use of talking about directing them to vote when we have nobody else there to be voted for?

But it might be suggested that we can transfer some of the original stock which we hold, and make five persons eligible. Where are we going to get the men? Who are the men to have this transfer of stock and to be elected, and is this Government compelled to go along in this way and give away five shares of the stock of that canal to five persons, and then go into a court of equity to compel the five persons now in and who hold the stock as trustees to vote for these other five persons?

Mr. SHERMAN. They might start another bank.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know but that they might start another bank, too, and use the receipts of the canal for banking purposes.

It is unnecessary to argue this. I might say that there would be some very grave questions whether or no we could sustain any bill upon the very terms of this trusteeship. This trusteeship of these five men is a trusteeship created not by the United States, not by any instrument executed by the United States, but it is a trusteeship created by the Legislature of Kentucky; and the purpose is not simply to hold the stock for the benefit of the United States, but to hold the stock for the purposes of the act which creates the trusteeship; and I should think there is plenty of ground there for them to litigate with us until the suit would be almost as great an inheritance to the child of the lawyer who should first be employed in it as a celebrated suit in England which was left by the father to the son, and as it had been a good support for the father, he trusted it would be an equally good one for his child.

No, Mr. President; that course is not necessary. The measure before the Senate does not ask you to appropriate one dollar in addition to what you have heretofore appropriated. It does not ask you to do one thing except to take possession of your own property. It does not ask you to violate the vested right of any man whatsoever. It asks you to pay these five men for their stock what their filed agreement binds them to receive, and then it asks that you shall enter upon this property pursuant to the provisions of the acts of Congress and the acts of the Legislature of Kentucky, and that you shall administer it according to the spirit and letter of those acts so far as they are binding upon us, and thus relieve this commerce from what is the most extraordinary burden that has ever been seen in the world. Perhaps I ought to make an exception. There was a time when a set of corsairs at the little town of Tarifa, on the southern side of the Straits of Gibraltar, levied their tax upon every vessel that passed those straits, and from that came the name of "tariff." But here we have five corsairs who levy their tax for their own private advantage upon all the commerce that passes down one of the great streams of the world. I think it is time to abolish the immunities and privileges and profits of these corsairs, and let commerce have fair play.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I have listened to this discussion for several days with an anxious desire to find some tangible point in the opposition to this bill. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] came nearer stating it to-day than I think it has been done before, and what is it? That when this corporation is dissolved and the United States takes possession of this work the original title to the real estate will revert to its former proprietors.

Mr. President, when the Legislature of Kentucky authorized in 1842, and affirmed it afterward on several occasions, the United States to become the proprietor and owner of all the stock, leaving not one share in any individual, the substance and meaning of that legislation was that the United States should thereby become the proprietor and the owner of the property represented by that stock. If that is not the effect of that law of the Legislature of Kentucky, it was in itself a fraud. If the Legislature authorizes me to become the proprietor of the stock of a corporation entirely so that not one share shall be left in anybody else, the effect and substance of that law is to authorize me to become the owner of all the property that stock represents. That is the good sense of it; that is what the Government always understood, and upon the faith of that understanding the Government has since expended between one and two million dollars in the improvement of the canal.

The State of Kentucky wants us to take possession of the canal. She is represented here by two distinguished Senators who are urging the Government to take possession; who are disclaiming any title in Kentucky—any title in anybody in Kentucky, insisting that the rights of Kentucky will not be infringed in any way. Why, then, are these objections made? The original act of 1842 authorized the United States to become the owner of all this stock—the owner of the canal; and the Government has had the canal offered in possession absolutely time and time again; but the Secretary of the Treasury in 1855, for a certain purpose, thought it better to keep the corporation alive a little while, and he requested five persons to hold each one share of stock, for the purpose of keeping the corporation alive. It was at the request of the Government; it was not in hostility to the Government, but for the interest of the Government that this corporation was to be kept alive. Now this corporation sets up an adverse interest; it is arrayed against the Government; instead of serving the purpose of the Government, it comes in hostility to it.

We are told that Kentucky has a lien for taxes. Suppose she has; does the transfer of the possession of the property to the United States oust that lien? Does it prevent her from enforcing it? If she has a lien, what of it? Should we fail to take possession of the property because Kentucky has a lien for taxes? Suppose it is a good lien, all we have to do is to pay it. If the lien is not a good one, certainly we should not hesitate to take possession on that account.

But it is said that Louisville claims the right to bridge the canal. Suppose she does. If she has got that right we do not deprive her of it by taking possession of the canal; we hold it subject to that right. We do not deprive her of any right by taking the canal out of the hands of these five men. She has the same right to bridge the canal in our hands that she has in the hands of these five directors. Why, then, should we hesitate because Louisville claims the right to bridge the canal? Certainly not.

But it is said that Louisville claims the right to empty her sewers into the canal. If she has the right, that is not taken away by the transfer of the possession, but she will hold the right against the United States as she now does against the corporation. If she has the right, we take the canal subject to that right. And so why hesitate to take possession a moment because Louisville claims the right? It is absurd. It can make no possible difference in any point of view whether these rights are valid or invalid. We have the right to the possession against the corporation, subject to any and all liabilities that may exist in point of law.

Ah, but it is said a suit is brought for the title by the heirs of John Campbell. Well, Mr. President, what difference does that make? If they have got a good title, we take possession subject to that title; that is all there is of that. If they can oust the corporation, they could perhaps oust the United States. Do we fight that title at a disadvantage by taking possession of the work? Certainly not. If those heirs have a title which can be enforced in a court of law, that title is just as good against the United States and the work in our hands as it is against the corporation. That cannot make a straw's difference. That is a mere obstacle thrown in here without any purpose or effect whatever. Take all these objections and put them together, and they do not make one. If there are liens on this property for bonds or anything else, we take the property subject to those liens; and that is all there is of it.

Now there is a mortgage on this canal created by consent of the United States by this corporation, created at the instance of the United States. When we take this property, we take it subject to that mortgage. If we do not pay the bonds, the mortgage can be foreclosed as well in our hands as in the hands of the corporation. It cannot make the slightest difference. The bondholders want us to take it; they know the Government will pay these bonds, and the Government would pay them now but it cannot get them; the holders of bonds will not bring them forward for payment.

And here comes now "the little arrangement" in this case. The Kentucky act of 1872 is in clear violation of the contract that Kentucky made with this Government. Kentucky agreed that we should become the owner of this stock, the whole of it, and thereby the owner of all the property.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend will allow me to suggest that these trustees themselves went to the Legislature of Kentucky to get that act passed. The purpose I leave every one to infer.

Mr. MORTON. Kentucky can impose no new condition. It is a contract. Kentucky says in 1842 "You shall have the right to buy all this stock, and when you buy it the property is yours." Can Kentucky come in thirty years afterward and put on a new condition? The common sense of everybody says no. But after this was done, after we had become the owner of all the stock but the five shares, as a matter of convenience the Government of the United States by a law authorized these five directors to go on and make a lien for the purpose of getting money by mortgage in order to extend and enlarge the canal. It was not to place the canal back in the hands of the directors or that the Government could not take possession of it; but now mark the last provision in the Kentucky act of 1872, which is:

> That the Government of the United States shall, before such surrender, discharge all the debts due by said canal company, and purchase the stock of said directors.

"Discharge all the debts." What are the debts? Eleven hundred and seventy-two bonds of $1,000 each, secured by a mortgage; and the last of those bonds does not fall due until 1886, twelve years hence. The Government cannot buy up the bonds now; the holders will not part with them. Therefore the effect of that is that these gentlemen shall hold the work until 1886. The Government is not to receive the surrender of this work, cannot take possession under this last act of the Legislature of Kentucky, until all the debts are paid, and the debts are not due until 1886.

Mr. SCOTT. Will my friend permit me to call his attention to the fact that the language is that the Government shall pay the debts due—"the debts due;" not require the payment now of bonds which do not mature until 1886.

Mr. MORTON. I should not construe the language in that way; but I think it is not very material. I take it that it was intended that the Government should not take the canal until the debts that the corporation owes should have been paid. That is the natural meaning, I think, and therefore I say clearly it is a violation of the contract.

Mr. SCOTT. Whatever may have been the intention, I only call attention to the fact that that provision cannot be made an obstacle in the way of our taking possession. If we provide now for the payment of such bonds as are due and for the payment of the others as they become due, it will be within the meaning of the act.

Mr. MORTON. Perhaps on strict construction the Senator is right, using the word "due" in the sense of "being already payable," instead of in the sense of "owing." I used the word "due" in the sense of "owing."

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me, I should like to state now a fact that was brought to my knowledge as a member of the Committee on Transportation, the Senator from New York also being present. When we were in Louisville, examining into this obstruction of the Ohio River in the discharge of our public duty, without any reference to the bill now before the Senate, we examined Mr. Speed, the attorney of this corporation, and he stated to us—whether on oath or not I have forgotten—that he went to Frankfort himself and procured the passage of this law of 1872 while he was acting as attorney of the company under pay, really as the attorney of the United States, the sole purpose and object of which—because there could have been none other—was to defeat the possession of the United States under the old laws of 1842 and 1844. His testimony at considerable length is contained in the book I have before me, it being a part of the report of the Committee on Transportation, which has not yet been submitted to the Senate; but it is clear that the purpose and the object of the promoters of the passage of the act of the Kentucky Legislature of 1872 was to prevent and obstruct the taking possession of this work by the Government of the United States. That is my deliberate conviction; I have no doubt of it.

Mr. MORTON. Whether I am right in the construction of that clause or whether the Senator from Pennsylvania is makes no sort of difference for the present purpose. It is a new condition imposed, thirty years after the original contract was made with the United States by the State of Kentucky, clearly a violation of that contract, clearly an imposition. The original contract was that the United States might become the owner of all that stock and thereby the owner of all that property, and take possession of it; and for Kentucky to come in thirty years after that time and impose new conditions is utterly absurd.

Mr. President, the commerce of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers from Pittsburgh to New Orleans and from New Orleans to Saint Paul is crying aloud to be relieved from the impositions upon this canal. It is a matter of importance to all the people engaged in that commerce and to the States bordering on those rivers and their tributaries that the Government should take possession of this canal at once. And what are the objections? What are the technicalities which are brought in here? All of them put in and bound up together do not make one appreciable sheet. Conceding everything gentlemen say, still that is no reason why the Government should not take possession of this work.

The heirs of Campbell have a lawsuit. What of it? If Louisville claims certain rights, what of it? Can they not all be settled as well in our hands as while the property is in the hands of these trustees? What difference does that make? Suppose that the heirs of John Campbell have a good title to this property at law, is it expected that we shall give it up, and that they will get possession of the property with all the improvements? Certainly not. If any court should hold that they have a title, what does the United States do? Simply condemns this property under the right of eminent domain. Why, Mr. President, there is a great broad principle that covers all this claim, originally under the corporation created by Kentucky. What is that? That the Government of the United States, under the power "to regulate commerce," has the power to improve the rivers, and that power embraces the authority to take all the property along each side of a river necessary for its improvement. Would it be denied for one moment that if the United States had originally undertaken the improvement of these falls, without the consent of Kentucky, without saying one word to Kentucky, the Government could go upon the land and take it, and all Mr. Campbell and his heirs could do would be to require fair compensation for it? If we take possession of it and the title from the corporation proves to be defective, what of it? All we have to do is to keep possession of it and have it condemned and the property appraised, and pay them for it. So it does not make a straw's difference about that lawsuit and about the title of those people. Under no circumstances can they get possession of the property. Therefore, as the Senator from Ohio remarked, it is a mere scarecrow, and a very thin and shadowy one at that.

Mr. PRATT. I should like to ask my colleague a question. I ask where he finds in the Constitution the power of eminent domain, where he finds the authority for the United States to enter the State of Kentucky and appropriate a strip of ground for the purpose of building this canal, and where he finds now any authority for the United States to hold the ground upon which this canal is built without showing a cession or a purchase with the consent of the State of Kentucky?

Mr. MORTON. I ask my colleague, and I would be glad to be informed, whether the Government of the United States in the improvement of rivers and harbors has first asked for and received a cession of the property necessary to be used in the improvement of any river or harbor? I have never heard of such a case.

Mr. PRATT. I do not know what has been the practice in such cases, but I find this clause in the Constitution under the first article of section 8. The power is given to Congress—

> To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of he United States, and to exercise like authority—

That is, like legislation—

> over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings.

Now, I inquire, besides this clause in the Constitution, where do you find the power for the United States to acquire real estate or any interest therein by purchase without the consent of the State in which that real estate is situated?

Mr. MORTON. I will try to answer my colleague's question. In the first place, I put the existence of this power upon what I believe is the general practice of the Government in regard to all internal improvements. I call the attention of my colleague to the fact that there is a distinction between taking private property for public use as a railroad company takes it or as the Government takes it in this case to improve the Falls of the Ohio, and the acquiring of exclusive jurisdiction in point of law over a piece of ground for the purpose of an arsenal or a dock-yard. There the jurisdiction of the State is suspended civilly and criminally. But the Government may acquire the title to property and leave the jurisdiction of the State perfect in regard to all civil and criminal matters. It was thought proper and necessary that the Government should acquire this jurisdiction in point of law, ousting the jurisdiction of the States over property obtained for arsenals, dock-yards, and many public works and improvements; but that is not the case in regard to the ordinary improvement of the rivers and harbors of the United States.

Mr. THURMAN. We become owners of real estate every time we rent a house for a post-office.

Mr. MORTON. I call the attention of my friend to the provision of the fifth article of amendments to the Constitution of the United States:

> Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

I believe that has been held from the time that amendment was adopted as recognizing the right of eminent domain, and I am very sure that the Government has practiced upon it continually. I think I know of one case, a very recent case, where the Government has entered upon private property in connection with the construction of the canal around the rapids at Des Moines, on the Mississippi River. There are hundreds of cases.

Mr. THURMAN. Let me call the attention of my friend from Indiana to the fact that the Government has condemned property for the new post-office and custom-house in Cincinnati under the right of eminent domain within the last twelve months.

Mr. CONKLING. Under what law was that done?

Mr. THURMAN. They proceeded under what the judge of the district court held was sufficient authority for him to entertain that jurisdiction.

Mr. PRATT. Has any act of Congress ever been passed authorizing such condemnation of private property for public uses by the United States?

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator recalls the debate on the Cincinnati bill he will remember what was said on that subject at that time. But really I do not want to argue that. There are enough instances of this case already; and what in the world this question has to do with it, I must confess I am wholly unable to see. The State of Kentucky has said that we may have the jurisdiction over this canal. I suppose it is not a work of which we could acquire exclusive jurisdiction, because it is not one of those enumerated works mentioned in the clause of the Constitution read by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. PRATT,] and the only effect of that would be that the civil and criminal jurisdiction of Kentucky would continue over these two miles; and my opinion is that that is exactly the best thing that could be. So far as the property rights are concerned and the tolls are concerned, we have all we can want.

Mr. CARPENTER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) This question of the right of eminent domain, in my judgment, is a very important one; and as the Senator from Indiana [Mr. PRATT] has raised the question, I desire to say a few words upon it.

In the first place, as I understand it, the right of eminent domain is one of the attributes of sovereignty. Wherever you find a sovereignty, there you will find this attribute with it, which extends over the same field that is covered by the sovereign. If it be State sovereignty, then the power of eminent domain exists and extends to all objects within the jurisdiction of the State; if it be the sovereignty of the United States, then the power of eminent domain is coextensive with its jurisdiction and extends to all the objects within its jurisdiction. It is a familiar principle that every government may perform in some way the things which its constitution says it shall be empowered to perform. The Constitution of the United States says Congress may establish post-offices. There is no doubt, therefore, of the power of Congress to establish a post-office. It may do any and all things necessary to the completed and accomplished result which the Constitution intends; that is, a post-office building, which must stand upon the ground in the nature of things; and it is indispensable that the Government should have the right to get that ground. Now it wants to establish a post-office in the city of Boston. Massachusetts happens for the time to be not friendly disposed to the United States and will not give its consent, or the Legislature refuses to its citizens the right to sell any property there. Must the United States stand still and ask the consent of Massachusetts to establish a post-office in Boston? No, sir; it may condemn the land, take it under the provision of the Constitution by making compensation for it, and devote it to this public use of a post-office.

The fifth amendment we all understand was intended to be a limitation upon the powers which the Constitution had conferred upon the General Government; and where you find the provision in the Constitution regulating the exercise of a power, you need not certainly be in doubt as to the existence of the power. Here this provision of the Constitution does regulate the exercise of this inherent attribute of sovereignty. The United States Government is unquestionably a sovereign government for certain purposes; and for the purpose of performing its duties in its field of jurisdiction it has this power of eminent domain. The Constitution, in the fifth amendment, regulates its exercise by saying that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation made therefor.

Mr. PRATT. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CARPENTER. Certainly.

Mr. PRATT. When the Constitution provides a particular mode for the acquisition of a piece of ground upon which to erect a post-office, or an arsenal, or a dock-yard, does not that necessarily exclude all other modes of acquiring the title?

And then again, as to the fifth article of the amendment, is not that applicable to the States? Is it not an inhibition against the States taking private property for public uses without just compensation?

Mr. CARPENTER. It is apparent from the comparison of these two sections that they refer to totally different things, have different ends in view. The fifth amendment, that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, is to regulate the right of eminent domain, and is necessary in order to build a railroad, to build a post-office, or to build any other internal improvement. Now that may be exercised under the Constitution and in the manner pointed out by law, in every instance where the United States find it necessary and proper to exercise it in order to exercise a power or perform a duty which the Constitution has devolved on Congress. For instance, if it be to build a railroad or establish a post-office, Congress must have the power to condemn the land; otherwise it would not have the power to build the road without the consent of the land-owners over whose land the road must be built. But here is a totally different subject regulated by the seventeenth clause of the eighth section of the first article. The provision is—

To exercise—

Not the right of eminent domain, not proprietorship; not hold title; but—

To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority—

That is, exculsive power of legislation—

over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings.

Undoubtedly, while the United States may condemn land under its right of eminent domain for a post-office, it does not acquire the exclusive power of legislation over that post-office unless it be granted by the State so as to come under this provision. But that is not at all necessary. Take the case, for instance, of the post-office in Milwaukee to-day. There the jurisdiction has been ceded. If a man should commit murder on the open street in front of the post-office, he would be sent to the penitentiary. If he should commit murder on the sidewalk of the post-office, he would be hung under the laws of Congress because in that instance Congress has exclusive power of legislation over that building, and the crime of murder committed in that building or on the sidewalk of the post-office is under the act of Congress punishable by hanging.

Mr. MORTON. Allow me to make a suggestion there. I suggest to my colleague that in the case pointed out the jurisdiction is to be acquired from the legislation of the State, and the Legislature does not own the land; the title to the land is still to be obtained in some other way, and that is to come by purchase or in the exercise of the right of eminent domain.

Mr. PRATT. I understand that; but can the United States purchase real estate for any other purposes than those which are specified in the Constitution—for the purpose of erecting those needful public buildings which are enumerated, arsenals, post-offices, custom-houses, canals like this at Louisville?

Mr. CARPENTER. A canal like this at Louisville does not come within that section. That is not a needful public building, is it?

Mr. PRATT. Certainly.

Mr. CARPENTER. Does the Senator really think that comes under the phrase of that section, "forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings?" Is a railroad a building in the meaning of this section? The Senator will not press that, certainly.

Mr. PRATT. I think, that this canal built of very solid materials, is as much a public building as a dock-yard is.

Mr. CARPENTER. Is the improvement of the Ohio River a public building?

Mr. PRATT. No.

Mr. CARPENTER. Would the Atlantic Ocean, after all its harbors were cleaned out, be a public building within the meaning of the Constitution?

Mr. PRATT. No.

Mr. CARPENTER. Clearly not. The two things are totally distinct. The exercise of eminent domain may be in regard to the foundation for a dock-yard; it may be for a post-office; it may be for a public building, and you may exercise that right of eminent domain without the consent of the State; but what do you get? You get nothing but the public use, the right to use that land for the public purpose; you do not get the power of exclusive legislation. If you want that in addition to what you get under the exercise of eminent domain, then you must have the consent of the State for it under the section of the Constitution which has been read. If you do not need it upon a railroad or in a post-office, what is the necessity for any such thing? Not the slightest. What reason is there or excuse is there in punishing the crime of murder in one way inside of the building and in another way outside of the building? None. We have the law of Congress as to distributing the mail and performing all the duties of postmaster over-riding all State laws and silencing them, and there is no earthly necessity for the power or right of exclusive legislation over the ordinary public buildings. But take a fort in which you are to keep troops; there it is a different thing. You want to exercise martial law there, and there it is important to have this power of legislation; but for the ordinary public uses of a post-office, of a railroad, of a canal, the power of exclusive legislation to us is utterly worthless. You cannot acquire it, I concede, under this section, without the consent of the State; but your right to use land for the public purpose you can acquire without the consent of the State by the exercise of the power of eminent domain, subject only to the regulations imposed upon it by this amendment of the Constitution that you shall make compensation for the private property you take.

Mr. PRATT. Now will my friend allow me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. CARPENTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRATT. The Constitution is full of provisions by which the States are prohibited from exercising certain power. Take section 10 for example, commencing "No State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation;" and further, "No State shall without the consent of Congress lay any imposts;" and again, "No State shall without consent of Congress lay any duty of tonnage, keep troops," &c. I supposed that this article 5 of the amendments applied to the States, and was intended as an inhibition against the States passing any law for taking private property for public use without just compensation.

Mr. CARPENTER. Allow me to say to my friend that the Supreme Court of the United States has at least three times decided exactly the reverse, that it does not apply nor do any of the limitations contained in the first eleven amendments of the Constitution apply to the States at all; but they are the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the United States; they are limitations upon the power of the General Government and not upon the States. That has been expressly decided over and over again by the Supreme Court.

Mr. MORTON. I referred to this right of eminent domain for the simple purpose of showing that if it should possibly turn out that the Campbells had the title to this property, it would still make no difference; the Government would never surrender the possession of it, but simply condemn it under the supreme and sovereign right of domain. So that all the objections which have been brought forward, one after the other, to the Government taking possession of its own property, which it has paid for, which is now being used as a burden on the commerce which it was intended to relieve, have melted away and nothing is left. I hope, Mr. President, this bill will pass.

Mr. STEVENSON. I beg, Mr. President, to say a single word to the Senator from Indiana farthest from me, [Mr. PRATT.] He voted for an act of Congress to which I desire to call his attention. It is the appropriation bill of 1872, entitled "An act making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes." That act contained this item:

For continuing the work on the canal at the Falls of the Ohio River, $300,000. And the Secretary of War is hereby directed to report to Congress, at its next session, or sooner if practicable, the condition of said canal, and the provisions necessary to relieve the same from incumbrance, with a view to such legislation as will render the same free to commerce at the earliest practicable period, subject only to such tolls as may be necessary for the superintendence and repair thereof, which shall not, after the passage of this act, exceed five cents per ton.

It was under that and under prior acts that Congress became, in the language of Mr. Justice Miller, the sole owner of this canal, subject only to the mortgage lien so often cited and referred to in this debate. If Congress is the sole owner of this canal, in view of the great public interest to commerce which demands it, why should Congress longer postpone the high and paramount duty of taking immediate possession of this work? It should have done so long ago. The Secretary of the Treasury, had he performed his duty under the last act of Congress, would have removed this burden upon commerce by taking possession of and making this canal free. Every hour's postponement is an outrage and a wrong upon the people of the Ohio and the Mississippi Valleys. James Guthrie, once an eminent Secretary of the Treasury, and a Senator and statesman well known to the whole country, was the founder and for many long years the president of this canal company. Had his advice been followed we should have now had this national highway free. I read to the Senate what he said when president of the company as to the necessity of speedy action by the Government in taking possession of this work. This letter is dated "Office of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company, Louisville, October 19, 1867:"

It is to be lamented that Congress has not heretofore taken the canal under the conditions stated in the act of 1842, and every day that Congress has failed to do so cumulates the responsibility resting upon those who, having the power to acquire the work, leave the interests of a vast and fertile region and of an immense and growing population in this important work to be provided for through the efforts of "five gentlemen" operating with the revenues and credit of a private corporation, instead of being cared for, adopted, and accomplished through the boundless revenues of the whole nation.

If Congress had followed his advice and then taken possession under the act of the Kentucky Legislature approved February 22, 1844, which declares—

That in the event of the United States becoming the sole owner of the Louisville and Portland Canal, the jurisdiction of this Commonwealth over said canal shall be yielded up to the Government of the United States; and no annual report, as mentioned in the charter of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company, shall be required to be made by the United States, or the agents and superintendents of said canal, to the General Assembly of this Commonwealth—

we should have had none of the objections and delays which are now urged. The longer Congress delays its duty the stronger the temptation of private interests to interpose new technicalities and offer new objections against their surrender of this public work. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has told the Senate, what I did not know before, that it was at the instance of one of the five gentlemen that now manage and control this canal and collect $350,000 annually of its revenues, that the Legislature of Kentucky incorporated into the act of 1872 the conditions which are now interposed on this floor against the passage of the pending bill. There is nothing in those conditions that should for one moment delay the prompt action of Congress in taking immediate possession of this property.

So long as Congress delays, just so long will the oppressive tax now levied upon the commerce of the Ohio River be continued, and thus the great primary object both of Kentucky and of the United States to make this canal a free highway be postponed and defeated. How can Senators agree to allow a tonnage tax of fifty cents instead of five longer to be levied on the boats of the Ohio passing through this canal, now exclusively owned by the United States, and which Congress has declared shall be free? Are the commercial interests of the people of seven or eight of the largest States to be disregarded by the private interest of five directors of this company?

A single word more and I have done. What single objection has been urged against the passage of this bill during this debate that cannot be as fully tested with the United States in possession of this canal as its five agents or directors? These gentlemen have no interest whatever in this property, as judicially decided by Mr. Justice Miller. They are not ordinary directors as in railroads or banks, but are only trustees without any interest, and but mere agents of the United States. The United States has assumed the payment of the mortgage debt upon this canal, which will not mature for some years to come, with all the interest thereon. What public interest can be subserved by any delay in the discharge of the duty of this Government to declare this canal free? I cannot understand or comprehend the opposition to a measure so earnestly demanded, as it seems to me, by the highest considerations of public policy.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, for upward of forty years the Government of the United States has been the owner of a portion of the capital stock of this canal company. It gradually has absorbed the entire ownership. The company was chartered for the creation of an artificial water-course around the Falls of the Ohio River; so that in point of fact, beyond all dispute, this water-course has become the channel and the river for commerce at that point, and is, in my opinion, justly and irremediably in the possession and under the control of the United States Government. I joined in the report of this committee recommending Congress to take immediate possession and sole control of the work. I do not propose to argue the rightfulness of that report, which has already been most ably and sensibly placed before the Senate by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOTT.] But in the course of this debate propositions have been started by one or two friends of the bill against which I propose to enter a short protest.

I deny that any power of eminent domain over the territory of a State is vested in the Congress of the United States or the Government of the United States. I do admit that the Government of the United States can become by private purchase the owner of lands or buildings for certain given public purposes within the domain of a State; but that they have the right in invitum to take and condemn for public use the soil of a State I do deny. That they may accept it by private bargain and that the State may cede its jurisdiction over it, is undoubtedly true and is provided for by the Constitution; but I simply here desire shortly to enter my protest against the idea that it is within the power of the Government of the United States, without the consent of a State or the consent of its citizens to enter that State and take land for public purposes in invitum. I believe no such power exists; and when it shall become necessary further to contest it, I shall to the best of my poor ability do so; but I do not think that question is affected by the facts of the case now before the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to read the first section of the original bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first section of the bill will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the first section of the bill as originally passed by the Senate, as follows:

That the appropriations made by the act approved March 3, 1873, entitled "An act making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," for the payment of the debts of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company, are hereby continued in full force, and are made permanently applicable to the payments of the debts of the said Louisville and Portland Canal Company; and so much as may be necessary shall be applied to the payment of the interest as it accrues, and the principal of the outstanding bonds of said company as they mature: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Treasury may purchase and pay for any of said bonds, at their market price, not above par, whenever he deems it for the interest of the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. Now, as I understand the effect of the committee's amendment, the section which has been read will become the first section in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The substitute covers the whole of the bill. I do not remember that in that particular there is any difference. The House have put their amendments in the form of a substitute; but, to the extent that has been read, I think the words are identical, though I would not say so without comparing them. I will read the corresponding clause of the House substitute if the Senator desires.

Mr. CONKLING. It is the same thing. If, then, the Senate should concur with the committee and strike out the House amendment making the operation of the first section contingent on what may be done hereafter, there will be permanence given to the act of 1873 for whatever that act may mean. We have heard from the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] an explanation, too clear not to be understood and too satisfactory to be criticised, of the incompetency, the futility of the act of the State of Kentucky by which in 1872 she undertook to impose new and different conditions which we are told would violate and vitiate a long-standing contract. In that way the Senator from Indiana dispenses with the act of Kentucky in 1872, and going back to the acts of 1842 and of 1844 he stands upon them and argues the case accordingly.

That we may see how this legislation will look in the retrospect, I now call the attention of the Senate to the act of Congress which it is the purpose of this legislation to petrify and make permanent. It is an act of 1873, the date of the approval of which I need not turn to, but the Senate will observe that it followed, and followed soon after, the act of Kentucky of 1872. These are the words:

For completing the Louisville and Portland Canal, $100,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to assume, on behalf of the United States, the control and management of the said canal in conformity with the terms of the joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Kentucky, approved March 28, 1872, at such time and in such manner as in his judgment the interests of the United States, and the commerce thereof, may require; and the sum of money necessary to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry this provision into effect is hereby appropriated; Provided, That after the United States shall assume control of said canal the tolls thereon on vessels propelled by steam shall be reduced to twenty-five cents per ton, and on all other vessels in proportion.

Thus the Senate will see that the pending bill is to create a perpetuation and extension of this act, to make it permanent, and it is in its very language ingrafted upon it. I read it not to argue, but to ask the Senate to consider whether after that act and after we shall have made it the foundation of this act, so that we stand upon this declaration that we are to accept the property in question upon the terms imposed by the act of Kentucky of 1872, we shall be in condition, as some Senators find themselves to-day, to say that the act of 1872 is of no consequence and we go back to 1844. Now let me call attention to the act of 1872 upon the terms and conditions of which we are now legislating to take this property.

Whereas all the stock in the Louisville and Portland Canal belongs to the United States Government except five shares owned by the directors of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company, and said directors, under the authority of the legislation of Kentucky and the United States, executed a mortgage to Isaac Caldwell and Dean Richmond to secure bonds named in said mortgage, some of which are out and unpaid, and said canal company may owe other debts; and whereas it is right and proper that the Government of the United States should assume the control and management of said canal: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of Kentucky, That the president and directors of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company are hereby authorized and directed to surrender the said canal, and all the property connected therewith, to the Government of the United States, upon the following terms and conditions—

They being the ones adopted by the act of Congress of 1873, which act we are to now reaffirm and make the basis of the position we assume at this time—

1. That the Government of the United States shall not levy tolls on said canal, except such as shall be necessary to keep the same in repair, pay all necessary superintendence, custody, and expenses, and make all necessary improvements.

Without arguing, again I stop to ask Senators to consider the effect of that upon the power to tax which we are to retain:

2. That the city of Louisville shall have the right to throw bridges over the canal at such points as said city may deem proper: Provided always, That said bridges shall be so located as not to interfere with the use of the canal, and so constructed as not to interfere with its navigation.

3. That the title and possession of the United States of said canal shall not interfere with the right of the State to serve criminal and civil processes, or with the State's general police power over the territory covered by the said canal and its appendages.

4. And further, that the city of Louisville shall at all times have the right of drainage into said canal: Provided, That the connections between the drains and the canal shall be made upon the plan to keep out mud and garbage.

And I call especial attention to this:

5. That the use of the water-power of the canal shall be guaranteed forever to the actual owners of the property contiguous to said canal, its branches, and dams, subject to such restrictions and regulations as may be made by the Secretary of the Department of the United States Government which may have charge of the said canal.

6. That the Government of the United States shall, before such surrender, discharge all the debts due by said canal company, and purchase the stock of said directors.

The Senator from Indiana reads the latter clause as if it were "owing," and he says the effect will be to postpone taking possession until 1886.

Mr. MORTON. What construction does the Senator put on that?

Mr. CONKLING. The same construction that was given by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and not by the Senator from Indiana. I understand the distinction between the word "due" and the word "owing" to be very broad.

Mr. MORTON. Let me call attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury gave it the other construction. From his report of last year I read——

Mr. CONKLING. I did not mean to discuss that point at all; it is immaterial to the few observations I am going to make. If the construction given it by the Senator from Indiana is the true construction, then there would be some added force to the suggestions I rose to make.

Mr. MORTON. I have the extract from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury showing that he gave my construction, and very clearly showing that it is a violation of the contract.

Mr. CONKLING. Then what I am saying obtains, as the Senator will see, added force. My purpose at this moment is merely to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact, if it be a fact, that this legislation in form and substance is to stand upon the act of Congress of 1873, and that that act expressly recognizes and adopts and ratifies this legislation by Kentucky, whether it means only as much as I think it means, or whether it means all the Senator from Indiana attributes to it. That is the point.

I do not know but that as a part of the general declamation about commerce, as a part of the method of treating this subject as if every man who rises to make a suggestion in favor of some safeguard to render what we are doing more certain must be an enemy of the commerce of the Ohio River or of something or somebody, Senators will be enabled to say, "Notwithstanding this, notwithstanding we adopt the act of 1872, notwithstanding we are planting ourselves upon it, it is to be of no consequence and we will go back of it and say that the act of 1872 of Kentucky was void, and although we have ratified it and although we are acting upon it now, on the whole we will skip that and go back to the old acts of 1842 and 1844 and derive our rights from them." It seems to me, however, that our conduct in adopting this measure is entirely inconsistent with the prevailing argument by which the bill is to be sustained; and I put this suggestion upon record, my attention having been called to this act of Congress by the Senator from Vermont to whom it did not occur when upon his feet and he did not allude to it.

As I am not going to detain the Senate or to discuss this question, I call attention to only one other matter. The Senator from Pennsylvania, as I understood him, said, "What if Kentucky in 1846 did tax this corporation?" Was not that the year?

Mr. SCOTT. Eighteen hundred and forty-six was the year referred to in the quotation you made.

Mr. CONKLING. I thought my friend was under that impression. "What if Kentucky taxed this corporation in 1846; why should she not? It was a private corporation. The rights of the United States had not inured at that time. Why should not Kentucky tax it in 1846?" I suggested to my friend that Kentucky had taxed it year after year, afterward as much as then, but not observing that he referred to some statement which mentioned the year 1846, and then he said that in the House, where this statement was made, the maker of it, as I understood, declined to tell from whom he received the reports. I did not suppose it was a matter of much consequence from whom I receive a document, or that there could be much value if it turned out that I received it from one rather than another; but now I have the reports of the canal company in my hands, and I will tell the Senator that I received this book from the owner of it; and here it is to speak for itself. If I supposed that I could add anything to its value by stating to the Senator to whose politeness I am indebted for its loan, I would state that; but as I think the book may speak for itself, I will read from it.

Mr. SCOTT. Does it come from the office of the company?

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend is now curious to know whether it has come from the office of the company. If I knew I would tell him privately with all my heart, but really I do not know; and what that has to do with the value of this book, whether this is the copy that belongs to the company or whether it is a copy that belongs to somebody else, whether I am indebted for it to a Senator or to somebody not a Senator, is one of those odd suggestions coming from a lawyer so acute and exact as my friend from Pennsylvania that I cannot understand it. I do not know what he is driving at.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator, who is just as acute and accurate as any lawyer can be, should understand that it would give it great authenticity if he informed us that it was an official document from the office of the company. In view of the many obstructions which have been thrown in the way of taking possession of that canal, including the Kentucky act of 1872, it would be additional evidence to the Senate if these officers were furnishing additional obstructions.

Mr. CONKLING. These must be a very bad set of people if we are to believe half we hear of them. One Senator calls them "corsairs," which I understand, freely translated, to mean pirates, and I suppose they scour this "raging canal" with their crafts. Another Senator talks about them as if they were capable not only of going to a Legislature and getting a law to act as a trick and an unfair advantage, but he even intimates now that when they put forth reports there may be some doubt whether they are not forgeries.

Mr. SCOTT. O, Mr. President, I made no such intimation.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the intimation then? Here are reports which come here bound up, the annual reports in print of this canal company, signed by their officers, and tabulated formally; and my honorable friend is ravished by a curiosity to know whether it comes from the office of the company, because he says if he knows that, then he would know whether it contains the reports or not. They are genuine reports or they are fraudulent.

Mr. SCOTT. As the Senator asks what it is that I intimate, I will simply say to him what I do intimate. When this bill was under discussion in the House of Representatives the person who had charge of the bill made a speech, from which the Senator from New York read the quotation which has given rise to this discussion. Naturally those who were interested in having this bill pass wished to know from whence the information came about the taxation. It was new information in the House. I said the gentleman who made that speech refused to inform the House from whence the information came, and that I may not do him injustice, if the Senator will permit me, I will here read the remark which I now have before me:

> Mr. HOLMAN. What document is the gentleman reading from, and where did it come from?
>
> Mr. WHEELER. It is a volume containing the reports of the company.
>
> Mr. HOLMAN. Who furnished it?
>
> Mr. WHEELER. I beg to say to the gentleman that I have the right to fortify myself in this debate with such facts and arguments as are within my reach. I am responsible to the House for the truth of my allegations.

Then he went on. Now the intimation which I made is this: We have facts enough in this record to show that the five directors—I have made no other intimations against them than those which the facts make—have been active in throwing obstacles in the way of the Government taking possession of this canal; and one of the reasons now urged is that Kentucky claims the right to tax it, and the evidence produced here is the reports of the company stating that that taxation has been made; and when we ask have these gentlemen been active enough to furnish this information, the response was such in the House as not to give the information as to whom it comes from. I do not doubt that the Senator from New York has obtained this in such manner as to satisfy him of its authenticity. I do not doubt that the reports which are in his possession state what he says they do state. How far the taxes have been laid, how long Kentucky continued to lay them after 1846, I do not know. But the only matter of consequence to the whole discussion, so far as this report is concerned, is this: Do the directors wish to throw this here as another obstacle in the way of our taking possession? If they do not, the fact that the taxation has been laid may as readily be derived from the reports as from any other source.

Mr. CONKLING. I understand now, then, that the purpose of my friend is to ascertain whether somebody who had the custody of this book has felt interest enough in the subject to send it here, and whether his object is to interpose another obstacle?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not understand him to say whether he believes this to be genuine or not.

Mr. CONKLING. I will come to that in a moment; but as part of that the honorable Senator brings in here—I make no objection to that—a portion of the debate in the House of Representatives, and reads from remarks made by a very able and respectable member of the House, a colleague of mine. Although it is not very important, the Senator entirely misconceives apparently what there took place. There was rather a testy debate in the House, and although I will not read it, I may state that one gentleman demanded to know of my colleague whether he had laid this information before the committee or not. He replied that he had not, and for the reason that he did not receive it, it did not come to his knowledge or possession, until after the report had been made by the committee. Pursuing him with various questions, finally this turned out, which the Senator has apparently overlooked. The same gentleman who put the other question said:

> I hope the gentleman will explain how these directors came to furnish him with this information. They have not so favored his committee.

To which my colleague responded:

> Mr. WHEELER. I will with pleasure. I wrote to the city of Louisville to obtain it. When I speak upon this floor I mean to speak understandingly and to know what I am talking about.

So now if my honorable friend will read all together what took place there, it turns out that Mr. WHEELER wrote to somebody in Louisville, who was an officer of this company or had access to their records, and obtained the volume of reports from which he read; and if that satisfies the curiosity of the Senator as to whether the people in Louisville were active or inactive, and, could he ascertain that, it would shed any light on the question, doubtless it will reflect so much upon the path of his duty; it does not either obscure or illuminate my path at all. I take it the Senator does not mean seriously to dispute that this bound volume of annual reports contains the reports of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company. Here it is with all the badge and indicia of genuineness, and there is no more doubt about it than there would be about the genuineness of one of the reports from which my honorable friend has read, coming though it may have done from a Department or a committee. I find in the report made on the 30th of December, 1848, this:

> It will be noticed, by an item in the above account, that the State of Kentucky has taxed the entire property and franchises of the canal; consequently no stockholder can be holden to give in the amount of his stock for taxation, and thus be subjected to a double tax.

That is the report of 1848, alluding to that period of time to which the Senator had more especial reference in the remarks he made. Now I turn over to a much later date, to show the Senator how mistaken he is if he supposes that an exertion of the power of taxation was confined to the year 1846 or to a period so early as that, or that it came to be abandoned at any time in consequence of later incidents. Here is the report of the 31st of December, 1866, twelve years after the period to which the Senator referred, and from which I read these words:

During both years—

And both years referred to are, as I understand, 1865 and 1866—

an unusual amount was required for repairs of the craft used by the company. The taxes paid in these two years were also unusually heavy, amounting in the former to $11,698, of which $7,676 went to the United States, and in the latter year to $10,430, of which $6,430 went to the United States.

I think, Mr. President, in the presence of this information, it will hardly do for the committee or the Senate to stand upon the statement made in the report that they have no information that Kentucky has asserted her right to lay taxes upon this property; nor do I think they can stand upon my friend turning about and inquiring of one or both the Senators from Kentucky if they know of any such thing, and receiving from them a statement that they do not. I presume he could find a great many men in Kentucky who are not even Senators who do not know anything about it. But in the face of this information it will hardly do for us to say that we will assume that the position of Kentucky has been that she had no such right.

I said, Mr. President, that I did not rise to argue this case. I did not, my purpose being to call attention to these two points. If I supposed it were necessary for me to answer a good deal of the rather declamatory putting forth that there has been here in reference to the commercial question, and the wrong which has been done; if I thought there was any serious danger that any Senator would be able, by accident or design, to make anybody outside of an insane asylum believe that I am trying or that other Senators are trying to defeat the ends of commerce, to inflict a wound upon the prosperity of the country or any section of it, I would say something about that; but I think everything of that sort is too preposterous and too unworthy of this occasion to make it worth while to say anything about it. My purpose in paying the money which we are about pay, and which is to amount at least to $1,140,000, is to buy for it a canal. I do not want to pay it for a lawsuit; and when Senators say that it can do no harm to enter into possession of the canal, although that is true as far as it goes, it does not go very far. Should we go on and pay more than $1,000,000, and in doing it lose the opportunity to have this made right once for all, that would be a blunder; and it might nevertheless be true as an abstract proposition that for a man to take possession of property that he claims would not do him any harm. The point is that a way can readily be found, if we choose to travel in it, to put up the bars against these contingencies. I think there is no difficulty in suggesting several ways. The House of Representatives suggested one and sent us an amendment which asserts it, and the utmost possible disadvantage of which would be that the Legislature of Kentucky would be compelled to convene for a day to do that which would satisfy the amendment. Other modes can be suggested. The committee might understand much better than I what they are. It is not my purpose to attempt to perfect the bill or to suggest to them. Inasmuch as the House has suggested an amendment with which the committee has taken issue, I am going, and perhaps I had better do it at this moment, to move to reconsider the vote by which, without a division, as I understand, and quite early in the morning, before some of us came into the Senate, the Senate agreed to the committee's first amendment, my purpose being merely to allow Senators to record themselves upon this question without voting against the bill eventually, and to allow it to appear upon the record that the sense of the Senate was taken upon the amendments, and especially upon that providing that the money should not be paid and other steps taken until steps are taken in addition to those which have occurred now by the State of Kentucky. Therefore I move to reconsider that vote. As the yeas and nays will be taken now, I suggest to the Senator having the bill in charge that they had better be taken on that amendment rather than taken on the whole bill, because I assume that we are all in favor of the object at which the bill aims. The only question is how to get at it. Time, perhaps, will show whether the truest friends of free commerce on the Ohio River were those in favor of rushing headlong and pell-mell, by force of mere assertion, to an end, or those who thought it was worth while to take the trouble to do in the best way the thing they were doing. I am quite willing to commit that question to the future. I would rather have the Senate divide upon the particular question on which it is divided than to put us to vote upon the bill as a whole, as we should do unless this motion to reconsider were taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Senator from New York moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendment of the Committee on Finance to the first section of the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Senator from New York ought to have the right to record his vote on what is called the Wheeler amendment without any form.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us take the vote over again by consent, by yeas and nays, without a reconsideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well. I did not intend this morning to say one word about this matter, because in debate heretofore I have shown my own feeling in regard to the oppressive tax levied upon the people of the West by the Louisville and Portland Canal Company; and I only rise now for the purpose of answering some objections made by the Senator from New York as to the act of the Kentucky Legislature of 1872. That act was brought about by the interested intervention of the officers of this canal company; but by a careful analysis of that act it is found that there is no clause in it which really creates any serious difficulty on the part of the United States. I will now invite the attention of Senators to the different clauses of that act and to the statement made by General Weitzel in regard to it.

The act was passed, as it appears from the testimony of Mr. James Speed, the attorney of this company, at his solicitation. He says himself that he went to Frankfort, Kentucky, to get this act passed in addition to the original acts, so as to protect certain rights and interests in the city of Louisville. I think the act was an interference to some extent with the rights already acquired by the Government of the United States, because the United States at the time this act was passed had obtained all the ownership of this canal that it was possible to obtain under the act of 1842; it had extinguished the rights of all the stockholders, including those of the five directors, leaving only an interest of $100 to each of their five shares. At that time the United States was the full and absolute owner, in equity at least, of this whole property, when Mr. Speed went and procured the passage of the act of 1872. If this act formed any real obstruction to our taking possession of this canal it would be only another evidence of the interested zeal with which these men hang on to a property that now yields them personally not less than $12,000 a year on an investment of $500. But let us look at the terms of the act.

It first recites that all the stock in the Louisville and Portland Canal had become the property of the United States under previous legislation, and directs the trustees to surrender possession to the United States on certain conditions. It does not recall the previous cession of jurisdiction; but what are the conditions?

1. That the Government of the United States shall not levy tolls on said canal, except such as shall be necessary to keep the same in repair, pay all necessary superintendence, custody, and expenses, and make all necessary improvements.

That is perfectly consistent with the previous acts. It does not impose any burden on the Government of the United States; on the contrary, it declares exactly the purpose for which this canal is taken possession of. It is a clause in the interest of the United States. It is true it undertakes to limit the power of the United States to levy tolls for certain purposes, but the United States never designed, does not purpose, does not claim, does not desire to levy tolls more than are necessary to pay the expenses, so that this is no expense. The second clause is:

2. That the city of Louisville shall have the right to throw bridges over the canal at such points as said city may deem proper: Provided always, That said bridges shall be so located as not to interfere with the use of the canal, and so constructed as not to interfere with its navigation.

Any gentleman who is familiar with the location of this canal knows that this right to bridge the canal is indispensably necessary. It would be a right freely yielded by the Government of the United States if there was no question about the title to the property. This canal lies along the whole front of the city of Louisville, extending about two miles in length. It is now bridged, and has been bridged for years, in such a way that the bridges form no obstruction whatever to navigation. They do not impede or interfere in the slightest degree with the navigation. This clause simply retains to the city of Louisville the right to construct bridges, subject, however, to such regulations as shall be prescribed by the officers of the United States and so as not to hinder or delay navigation. That, therefore, is not an unreasonable condition. The third is:

3. That the title and possession of the United States of said canal shall not interfere with the right of the State to serve criminal and civil processes, or with the State's general police power over the territory covered by the said canal and its appendages.

This clause is similar to what is provided in cessions of property to the United States in other cases. In nearly every case of the cession of property in a State for public buildings, this police power is reserved, and Kentucky here simply does what is usually done in the grant of lands to the United States for public buildings. The reservation of this police jurisdiction is just as necessary to the Government of the United States as it is to the city of Louisville or the State of Kentucky. The power of Kentucky to punish the crime of murder committed on a boat passing through the Louisville and Portland Canal is just as necessary to be reserved for the benefit of the United States as for the benefit of the State of Kentucky. This exercise of police power, this right to serve civil or criminal process, on property or persons on the canal, is certainly in the interest of the United States. The United States would not desire to prevent the State of Kentucky from punishing a crime committed on the Louisville and Portland Canal. Indeed, from the very nature of the property, it is a property where crime might be committed, where interference with rights might occur, where murder might be committed, where robbery, assault and battery, and a thousand offenses might be committed; and surely the United States can have no interest in preventing the Commonwealth of Kentucky from punishing crimes committed there as in other parts of the State of Kentucky. The fourth condition is:

And further, that the city of Louisville shall at all times have the right of drainage into said canal: Provided, That the connections between the drains and the canal shall be made upon the plan to keep out mud and garbage.

This right to drain into the canal has been exercised by the city of Louisville from the very beginning of the work. It is an indispensable necessity for the com.ort, health, and safety of the people of Louisville. This canal, remember, covers the whole city front. They cannot drain into the Ohio River, the natural course of drainage; they must drain into the canal. They cannot, as a matter of course, either drain across the canal or under the canal; therefore they must drain into the canal. That this has never been an impediment is shown by the statement of General Weitzel, who says that the drainage of Louisville into the canal has never obstructed the canal, has never been an inconvenience; but once or twice a year it is necessary to use a boat there for the purpose of dredging and cleaning out the canal, and the right to drain into the canal, on account of the strong current passing through the canal, has never been an embarrassment, and it is not likely to be in the future any impediment. That is stated by General Weitzel, the engineer officer in charge, and no objection is made to it. Indeed it is an absolute necessity for the health of the people of Louisville that the drainage should be into this canal, because it covers the whole river frontage and cuts off all possibility of draining into the river, the only other natural source of drainage. The next clause is:

5. That the use of the water-power of the canal shall be guaranteed forever to the actual owners of the property contiguous to said canal, its branches and dams, subject to such restrictions and regulations as may be made by the Secretary of the Department of the United States Government which may have charge of the said canal.

This also is clearly a proper provision. There are mills and various works erected by private persons on the side of this canal, and they use the water-power to some extent. Their rights ought to be preserved. The United States would not undertake to impair those rights, and never has done it; and instead of being an inconvenience they are an actual benefit to the property of the United States. It simply preserves the rights of private property now acquired, and subjects it to the regulation of the Government of the United States and declares that their right even to the use of the water-power possessed by them shall be subject to regulation by authority of the United States.

Thus far there is no practical objection to the conditions imposed by the State of Kentucky in 1872. They do not interfere with the free enjoyment by the United States of this canal in as absolute and complete a degree as it has been exercised before and as the United States will exercise it hereafter. Then comes in a clause which I think was put in improperly and with a view to prevent the Government of the United States from enjoying or taking possession of this canal, and that is the clause which gave rise to the necessity of passing this bill. The sixth clause is:

6. That the Government of the United States shall, before such surrender, discharge all the debts due by said canal company, and purchase the stock of said directors.

So far as the directors' stock is concerned, that has already been purchased in 1864, and there is a written stipulation on file in the Treasury Department by these directors, each of them signing it, that they have received the value of their stock with the exception of $100, and that that is retained simply in trust for the United States. The only difficulty, then, is that under the sixth clause of this act, if strictly construed, as the Senator from Indiana construes it and as the Secretary of the Treasury construes it, it would prevent the United States taking possession of this canal until 1886, when the bonds will mature. If the construction put upon it by the Senator from Indiana is correct, by the strict meaning of this sixth clause we could not take possession of the canal for thirteen years, and that was the purpose of it undoubtedly. I have no doubt that the very agent, the very trustee of the United States, who had charge of this property, put in this clause for the purpose of causing delays and preventing us taking possession of our property for thirteen years. In the mean time it would be in the possession of gentlemen who are enjoying an annuity of $12,000 a year for doing nothing; that is, they get $5,000 in the way of two salaries and they get $6,000 at 6 per cent. on the deposits of the canal earnings in a bank owned and controlled by them. It is shown here by an official document presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania that they receive all the tolls, now amounting to $340,000 a year; they pay the expenses according to the rules they make themselves. They do not report to the Government of the United States; and the only information we have as to the condition and assets of the canal is by a special agent sent there to inquire into and ascertain the facts in the best way he can. They enjoy this property in that way, withholding from the people of the United States the possession of it and levying upon commerce a tax of fifty cents a ton. Why, sir, upon an ordinary steamboat passing through the canal back and forward the toll is $1,000. Upon a barge of coal passing down the Ohio River there is a somewhat less graduated tax, but the amount is very large. The result is that the people in Pittsburgh starting their tows of coal will wait until the rise of the river is so high that they can float over the natural obstacles, thus delaying commerce; and sometimes a coal famine is caused by the delay occasioned by the high charges imposed on this canal. A case occurred this winter where a new boat built in the city of Cincinnati for the Mississippi trade, without a single pound of cargo on board, on its way to be delivered to the owners, had to pay over $600 to get the empty boat through to be delivered to its owners on the Mississippi River.

They hold this property of the United States and levy this tax, the money received from which goes into their coffers, to be paid out by them without responsibility to any one, adding to the private property to the amount of ten or twelve thousand dollars a year of these directors, they having only a property interest of $100 each in the property; and we are prevented year after year and year after year from taking possession of our own.

On the request of the Secretary of the Treasury when he communicated to us officially the difficulties he had in taking possession of this canal and complying with the sixth clause of this act, I drew this bill and introduced it here, and it was passed by the Senate. The only trouble in the way was the sixth clause. I do not think myself the Secretary gave a correct construction of it. I think the words "that the Government of the United States shall, before such surrender, discharge all the debts due by said canal company" mean that all the debts now due should be paid by the Government of the United States. There is no trouble about that. The whole amount of debts is ten or twelve thousand dollars, and we had a schedule of them; the Secretary was perfectly ready to pay them; but it was insisted by these very directors, as is shown by the testimony taken by the Transportation Committee last fall, that this language meant that we must pay the bonds, every dollar of them. I put the question to Mr. Speed, "Suppose that a single bondholder should refuse to take par in gold for his bond, could we discharge the obligation of this loan?" and he said he supposed not; we must pay the debts first.

Now, sir, are we to be thwarted in a matter which involves the public interest by any technicalities like this? It seems to me there ought to be no difficulty about the passage of this bill. The Government of the United States ought to take possession of the canal, and the provisions of this bill were only intended to provide a way by which we might take possession of this property, subject to the mortgage. That is the whole of it. There is not any other provision in the bill that is worth a cent. It is simply that the Government of the United States shall take possession of this property and hold it subject to the mortgage lien. That lien we respect, and we have in this bill carefully inserted provisions which declare that the possession of the Government of the United States shall not be considered as inconsistent with the full rights of these mortgagees. We have appropriated the money to pay the bonds permanently. We have provided the means by which the bonds when they mature shall be paid, every dollar of them, in exact accordance with the terms and conditions of the bonds; and as a further safeguard, lest it might be said that we deprived them of a remedy by taking possession by the United States and the United States could not be sued, the Senator from Pennsylvania with great precaution has inserted an additional section which authorizes any of the bondholders to sue the United States and points out the mode and manner of a remedy.

I say, then, that the only object of this bill is to remove a difficulty which in my judgment was improperly put, not according to the intention of the Legislature of Kentucky, but in violation of their purpose to carry out in good faith the stipulation that this canal was to be made free for the commerce of the country as far as it could be; and this bill is intended simply to remove one of the obstructions interposed by these trustees against the United States. Sir, I hope this is the last of it, and that when the Government of the United States take possession of this property, these men having no longer the money of the United States to contest with us for the possession of our property, will abandon this attempt to frighten people by lawsuits. Why, sir, the lawsuit that has been commenced, as I have reason to believe, was by these trustees, or through their agency. That lawsuit was decided thirty or forty years ago by the Supreme Court of the United States against them; and this last attempt, by inserting this sixth clause in the act of 1872, to thwart the United States in taking possession of this canal is not approved by the sentiment of the people of Kentucky or the people of Louisville. I am frank to say that the people of Kentucky have throughout the whole of this controversy been ready and willing to pass all needful legislation to enable the Government of the United States to take possession of this canal and hold it for the public use; and, sir, there can be no doubt that if at any time the act of 1872 should obstruct the United States in the full and free enjoyment of this property, the Legislature of Kentucky will promptly and quickly pass any law necessary to remove that difficulty.

As for the power to tax, that is a mere bugaboo. Kentucky does not claim the power to tax. She has ceded to the United States jurisdiction of the work. She has no more power to tax it than she has to tax the custom-house in Louisville. But suppose she asserted that power, ought we not to take possession of it and try the question? Shall we refuse to take possession of a property that has cost us now nearly $3,000,000, because, forsooth, somebody claims the power to tax it? I am willing to take all the property of the State of Kentucky subject to taxation if they will give it to me. The question is whether we shall take possession. There is no danger of her taxing it.

The Senator from New York moves to reconsider the vote on what is known as the Wheeler amendment. That amendment compels the people of Kentucky, who have done all we have ever asked them to do, to convene their Legislature in extra session to get rid of Speed and his associates, or else if we await the due course of events we have to wait two years longer before that Legislature can comply with the terms and conditions of that proviso; and for those two years longer the people of the western country will be compelled to submit to a tax of $350,000 a year for the benefit of these trustees. That is the whole of this case.

I do trust that without longer delay the Senate will give us a vote on this proposition, that now the Government of the United States will take possession of this canal; and then if Kentucky claims the right to tax it, or if these parties want to get up any more law suits, as a matter of course the Government of the United States will defend its own. If it has no title to this property, as a matter of course the courts will so decide. It seems that having expended $3,000,000 on a public improvement of the most vital importance, we ought to be willing to take possession of it.

A law of this same kind was passed—and if I am not mistaken my friend from New York very largely contributed to it, and I have no doubt I joined him—under which the Government of the United States only a year or two ago took possession of a canal in Wisconsin. There the work was commenced by private parties. It was, I think, the case of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers improvement. There was an improvement that had been carried on by private parties. Perhaps the Government of the United States had contributed to it, I suppose by a grant of land. Finally a law was passed here that the Government of the United States should take possession of it; and from this time forward I expect to vote the necessary appropriations to enable that improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, a very important element of navigation in the Northwest, to be completed as the property of the United States and free from all toll except enough to keep it in repair. That is a similar case to this, and I think my friend from New York took a prominent part in the passage of that law, or at any rate it was passed by general consent. Why should a discrimination be made against this particular improvement? Sir, from its beginning, in the time of Andrew Jackson when the Government of the United States refused to appropriate money to build directly this internal improvement on account of the ideas that then prevailed, from that time to this the people engaged in the commerce of that great river have been ever interrupted, bothered—I may say bedeviled—with this enormous tax, being compelled to pay their money over to what they regarded as a private corporation. Now we hope to have this difficulty removed, and I appeal to the Senate to let us have a vote upon it one way or the other.

Mr. STEVENSON. I rise only to state a fact in connection with the conditions in the act of 1872. I am sure neither the city of Louisville nor the State of Kentucky desires by these conditions to embarrass the United States in prompt possession of this canal. Some of those conditions were proper both for public and private interest. This canal is two miles long. South of it there is already a large population of the city of Louisville; north of it there are some two hundred acres of land between the canal and the river. In the last-mentioned territory, (north of the canal,) and which the canal separates from the city, there are now several large manufacturing establishments, and will ultimately have a large population and become a great entrepot for mills and other manufacturing establishments. There are now, as I am informed, but two bridges across the canal during the whole length of the canal, the one about a half-mile below the head of the canal and the other a short distance above its mouth. It was therefore eminently proper to put a reservation of the right to construct bridges in that act of 1872. These bridges will be and have been so constructed as not in any way to interfere with navigation. If they did they would be promptly and legally removed under Federal authority. There can be no objection, therefore, to the reservation as to the bridges. The property-holders, the heirs and devisees of the late John Rowan, who own most of the two hundred acres of land, of course would be greatly injured by the depreciated value of this property, if in the event of a large population they could not have egress by bridges across the canal to connect with the city of Louisville. As it could not in any way interfere with the interest of the United States or the free use of the canal, I do not perceive any objection that can be urged against such a reserved right. None such was urged when we made the last appropriation under this act.

In regard to the reservation in this act as to drainage, I think nobody can justly complain of that; this right of drainage for sewerage purposes already exists. It is as important to the public as to the private interests, to that of the United States as well as to that of the municipality. Already several city sewers discharge in the canal without any serious, bad, or inconvenient results. If this right of drainage were denied them, large and expensive sewers would have to be erected parallel to the canal, which might interfere with it. As no bad results now flow from this drainage, it would be proper to continue it. But this reservation cannot afford any ground for opposition to the possession by the United States of this work. Let the Government take possession, and all the questions of drainage and bridges will be easily settled. I should be very glad if the United States would yield police power to the city, because in that two hundred acres of ground there must be in time a large population, and consequently a great many petty offenses committed which could be more easily and safely intrusted for correction to local police powers than they could be to the Federal tribunals.

But in every aspect of the case, as stated by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] it does seem wonderful that for the last fifteen or twenty years, when both the State and Mr. Guthrie, who represented the company and did more to build up this canal than any human being, urged the United States to take possession of this work, that it should be still delayed and this burden upon commerce and the public interest still continued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York to reconsider the vote of the Senate by which the amendment of the Finance Committee to the first section of the House amendment was adopted.

Mr. CONKLING. I understood there would be no objection to taking the vote by consent again without the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the question will be submitted to the Senate in this form: Will the Senate agree to the amendment proposing to strike out the proviso at the end of the first section of the amendment of the House of Representatives, a reconsideration of the previous vote being had by general consent?

Mr. CONKLING. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to know now the words upon which the vote is to be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is to strike out the words which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following words:

Provided further, That said Secretary shall pay no money under any of the provisions of this act, nor shall the Secretary of War take possession of said canal as authorized by the next section, until the State of Kentucky shall cede to the United States jurisdiction over the said canal, with all its property, hereditaments, and appurtenances, and relinquish to the United States the right to tax or in any way to assess said canal, its property, hereditaments, and appurtenances, or the property of the United States that may be thereon, during the time that the United States shall remain the owner thereof.

Mr. CONKLING. The amendment is to strike out these words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. I only wish to say, so that we may understand the question exactly, that this is the same amendment upon which we voted before and which was carried by the friends of the bill; and consequently the vote of the friends of the bill is "yea."

Mr. CONKLING. As I understand it, this is an amendment which, with all the other amendments, was agreed to without there being any division.

Mr. THURMAN. There was a majority for it or it would not have been carried.

Mr. CONKLING. Very likely there was an apparent majority; there was no objection to it or rather no division, as I understand.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senate understands that if these words remain in the bill they kill the bill. That is all. Therefore those who are in favor of the object of this bill should vote for the amendment to strike them out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those who are in favor of the amendment should vote yea, and those opposed to it should vote nay.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Ohio makes some of us very uncomfortable by his remarks, all of us who do not understand so much about this matter as he does. If he had only told us how this would kill the bill he would gratify the curiosity which he has thus painfully aroused. I do not understand any such thing, and I wish to enter my protest against any such remark. So far from killing the bill, it will have the effect to obtain from the State of Kentucky a relinquishment of those rights which stand in our way, and it will complete and effectuate the thing that we are doing; and therefore I trust the Senator from Ohio will not insist upon our voting in the hot breath of his remark that those who vote for this amendment vote to kill the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. The State of Kentucky would have surrendered her sovereignty in any words the Senator from New York would have penned; but this application did not come until the Legislature of Kentucky had adjourned. The Legislature of Kentucky had not any idea that any such objection would be interposed. It adjourned recently. Its sessions are biennial; it does not meet again for nearly two years. Therefore if this proviso put in by the House stays in the bill, it keeps a revenue of $350,000 of the United States in the hands of these five trustees. That is the simple question.

Mr. HOWE. As this subject seems to be brand-new in the Senate, [laughter,] I wish to say one word on this particular proposition. I have heard that courts of equity sometimes sequester property for the purpose of enforcing some duty, but they usually I believe sequester the property of the party upon whom they want to enforce the duty. It is proposed here, as I understand the Senator from New York, in order to compel Kentucky to relinquish something, to sequester several millions of our property and to give the benefit of it to five individuals who live in Kentucky. If I could understand precisely how soon that process would compel Kentucky to surrender I should know better how to vote.

Mr. MORTON. Allow me to suggest that the words proposed to be stricken out have the effect to surrender the canal and give it up. First, we must wait two years for the Legislature of Kentucky to meet; and then unless they will pass the kind of act prescribed here, it is a proposition to abandon the canal entirely and leave it in the hands of the directors.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose nobody has a right to have any doubt about this business and still be in favor of the free navigation of the Ohio. That is a privilege which is not accorded to Senators. Nevertheless the right of saying something is still left to us. Now the Senator from Indiana has no right to say that the effect of this proviso is to give up this canal to Kentucky or to these people if Kentucky does not accept the condition we have made.

Mr. MORTON. If it does not mean that, it does not mean anything.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator thinks so, I have no doubt; but it is possible that others may think otherwise, and inasmuch as this is a land of equal rights, everybody has a right to his opinion. I very humbly and respectfully differ from the Senator. I think that if the State of Kentucky does not agree to this condition we shall stand exactly in the attitude we do now as it respects our rights. I do not find anywhere in the bill that we engage to surrender to Kentucky if she will not surrender to us any right she possesses. If the Senator finds any such provision he ought to be good enough to read it, so that other people can have the illumination he has.

Mr. MORTON. I will read it:

Provided further, That said Secretary shall pay no money under any of the provisions of this act, nor shall the Secretary of War take possession of said canal as authorized by the next section, until the State of Kentucky shall cede to the United States jurisdiction over the said canal, with all its property, hereditaments, and appurtenances, and relinquish to the United States the right to tax or in any way to assess said canal, its property, hereditaments, and appurtenances, or the property of the United States that may be thereon, during the time that the United States shall remain the owner thereof.

Now if the Legislature of Kentucky declines to pass the act we are not to take possession, but we expressly provide that we will in that event leave it just where it is. That will bear out the statement.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We do leave it where it is; but that, as it happens, was not the Senator's statement. He said that the effect of agreeing to this amendment, if Kentucky did not conform to our terms, was to give up the canal to the State of Kentucky and these gentlemen. It is very easy when you get into a corner to jump over the fence and be on the other side and still say you are just where you were before; but I do not think that is a very tenable method of argument.

I was endeavoring to reply to the objection of the Senator from Indiana that the effect of this bill was to yield up something to the State of Kentucky to which she was not now entitled, if she did not accede to the proposition made to her in this amendment. About that we differ; and as the Senator now states that the effect is, if not carried out by the agreement of Kentucky, to leave it as it stands now, he is perfectly right. It does leave it where it stands now with the right of the United States as stockholder in that corporation in three weeks to put herself or her agents in possession of the corporation and to regulate the tolls in her own way, and keep it in repair if she chooses.

But I did not rise to delay the vote on this amendment; I only wish now to reply to what the Senator from Ohio said, that the friends of the objects of this bill were to vote against this amendment, and that the enemies of the objects of this bill were to vote for it. I decline to be placed in the category of the enemies of the objects of this bill. I have as much interest, and so have the people whom I especially represent, in the navigation of the river Ohio as the Senator's own constituents have, because I believe in the nationality of commerce in this country, and that every part of the body-politic is affected by anything that is injurious to one part of it in the way of commerce; and I have no doubt that is the sentiment of the Senator from Ohio. Therefore, desiring to make this river free, I wish to take the steps that appear to me—I do not ask other people to believe in my opinion—best designed to accomplish that end; and not to plunge ourselves still further into this Serbonian bog of legal difficulties with the State of Kentucky and with the present directors of the corporation who can be turned out in three months in my opinion, and less; and then to be told hereafter that we have been devoting ourselves to totally inadequate and fallacious legislation. That is my position.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. On this question the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SCHURZ] is paired with the President of the Senate. The Senator from Missouri would vote "yea" and the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "nay."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 40, nays 4; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Buckingham, Cameron, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Gilbert, Hager, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norwood, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Saulsbury, Scott, Sherman, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, West, and Windom—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Conkling, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, and Hamilton of Texas—4.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hitchcock, Jones, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Schurz, Spencer, Sprague, Stewart, Wadleigh, and Wright—28.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the House of Representatives as amended.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 3085) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish copies of certain papers called for by resolution of the House;

A bill (H. R. No. 1764) to appropriate lands for the support of schools in certain fractional townships in the State of Missouri; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3087) for the relief of the widow of the late Judge Samuel Milligan.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 2575) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth J. King; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2667) to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to gather authentic information as to the condition and importance of the fur trade in the Territory of Alaska.

THANKS TO OFFICERS AND CREW OF THE ATLANTIC.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask permission at this time to make a report from a committee. The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 45) tendering the thanks of Congress to Captain Benjamin Gleadell, officers, and crew of the steamship Atlantic, of the White Star line, for saving the brigantine Scotland in mid-ocean, have instructed me to report the same back without amendment, and as it will take but a moment and is a measure from the House of a peculiar nature, I ask for its immediate passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It presents the thanks of Congress to Captain Benjamin Gleadell and the officers and crew of the steamer Atlantic, of the White Star line, for saving the captain and crew of the brigantine Scotland, of Portland, Maine, wrecked in a tempestuous sea in mid-ocean.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 1764) to appropriate lands for the support of schools in certain fractional townships in the State of Missouri—to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. No. 3085) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish copies of certain papers called for by resolution of the House—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 3087) for the relief of the widow of the late Judge Samuel Milligan—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 726) to correct the date of commission of certain officers of the Army; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

STATE OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. MERRIMON. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina demands the regular order, which is Senate bill No. 446, to restore the rights of the State of Louisiana.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. A day or two since I gave notice that to-day I should call up the civil-rights bill, Senate bill No. 1. I now give notice that as soon as the pending measure is disposed of I shall insist upon taking up that bill.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President——

Mr. CONKLING. I suppose the Senator does not care to speak at this hour; and we have some executive business to do.

Mr. STOCKTON. I will yield for that purpose.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 21, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

DISTRICT REFORM SCHOOL.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Expenditures be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into and report to this House, as early as practicable, what sum or sums of money, if any, have been drawn from the Treasury of the United States under the provisions of section 7 of the act of Congress approved May 15, 1872, entitled "An act relating to the Reform School of the District of Columbia;" which section is as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to purchase a new site for said school, to be selected by himself and the board of trustees, on which buildings for the accommodation of three hundred boys shall be erected, under the supervision of the said Secretary, the board of trustees, and the architect of the Capitol; and for these purposes the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That before any part of this appropriation shall be drawn plans and specifications of the building to be erected shall be made by the architect of the Capitol and approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and the amount expended for the purchase of said site and the erection of said building shall not exceed the sum hereby appropriated."

The committee shall report by whom and when said money was drawn, if any has been, and what has been done with it; if said section of said law has been violated they will report how and by whom; and for the purpose of ascertaining all the facts they shall have power to send for persons and papers, and summon and examine witnesses.

Mr. MAYNARD. What committee is it proposed this resolution shall go to?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Public Expenditures.

Mr. MAYNARD. It ought to go to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Very well. I modify the resolution in that way.

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

RAILWAY FROM THE ATLANTIC TO THE MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. HURLBUT, by unanimous consent, presented, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, a report to accompany the bill (H. R. No. 1194) chartering a double-track freight-railway company from tide-water on the Atlantic to the Missouri River, and to limit the rates of freight thereon; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

SUSPENSION OF DISTRICT LEGISLATURE.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 91) directing the temporary suspension of the Legislature of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Joint Select Committee to Inquire into the Affairs of the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

OSAGE INDIAN LANDS, KANSAS.

Mr. LOWE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3088) to extend the time for completing entries on Osage Indian lands in Kansas; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that all actual settlers on the Osage trust and diminished reserve lands in the State of Kansas shall be allowed one year from the passage of this act to make proof and payments; provided all purchasers who avail themselves of the provisions of this act shall pay interest on the purchase price of their lands at the rate of 5 per cent. from the date when payment was required by previous laws to the date of actual payment.

Mr. LOWE. I ask that the bill be now passed by unanimous consent, as it is a unanimous report from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this the same percentage paid by the Government?

Mr. LOWE. It is the same the Government would pay, and is a saving to the Government to this extent.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LOWE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORT RANDALL MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Military Affairs, with the unanimous recommendation of the committee that it be passed, a bill (S. No. 149) for the relief of certain settlers on the Fort Randall military reservation.

The bill was read.

The first section provides that the Secretary of War be, and he is thereby, authorized to transfer to the custody of the Department of the Interior such portions of the military reservation of Fort Randall, in Dakota, as were actually occupied by settlers prior to the promulgation of the order of the President of June 14, 1860, setting apart the reservation for military purposes, and, further, such portions of the said reservation as were released from military occupation and control between the years 1867 and 1870, and were during that time settled upon in good faith and in the belief that the lands were open to settlement.

The second section provides that the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to confirm, in accordance with existing laws, the titles of such settlers upon the military reservation of Fort Randall as may be reported by the Secretary of War for that purpose, and to cause patents to be issued for such lands as the aforesaid settlers may be entitled to under existing laws and the provisions of this act.

The third section provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is thereby, authorized to pay to each of the aforesaid settlers the respective amounts that were appraised as the value of their respective improvements, by a military board of survey convened for that purpose at Fort Randall, under instructions from the War Department, dated March 3, 1871; provided that in case any improvements, or portion thereof, shall have been restored or delivered to any settler, after the appraisement of the same by the said military board of survey, such settler shall not be entitled to payment under this act for the improvements, or portion thereof, so restored or delivered to him.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say this bill has been recommended by the Secretary of War, and I hope there will be no objection to putting it on its passage at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must insist on the point of order applying to this bill, inasmuch as it covers a great deal of ground.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I will state the purpose of the bill in one word. It appears from the report of this board of Army officers that the amount to be paid to these settlers is about $18,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the amount, then, which the bill proposes to appropriate will be specified upon the face of the bill itself.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. It is a Senate bill, and I dislike to make an amendment, for that will send it back to the Senate again. It is recommended by the Secretary of War and is unanimously reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed to report the bill back at any time, so that the committee may move an amendment fixing the sum which it is proposed to appropriate.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I do not know what effect that will have. I suppose a single objection will prevent the passage of the bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection to it, the Committee on Military Affairs is allowed to report the bill at any time.

WIDOW OF JUDGE SAMUEL MILLIGAN.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask unanimous consent to supply an omission in a bill passed yesterday. It is a bill (H. R. No. 3087) for the relief of the widow of the late Judge Samuel Milligan.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read. It provides that the salary of the late Samuel Milligan, judge of the Court of Claims, for the remainder of the present fiscal year shall be paid to his widow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to amend, by providing that a sum of money equal to the salary of a judge of the Court of Claims for the remainder of the present fiscal year shall be paid to the widow of the late Judge Samuel Milligan. It will confuse the salary of the successor of Judge Milligan unless put in that way.

Mr. HOLMAN. How is it proposed to make the bill read?

The SPEAKER. That a sum of money equal to the salary of a judge of the Court of Claims for the remainder of the present fiscal year shall be paid to the widow of the late Judge Samuel Milligan. Unless the language of the bill is so changed there will be nothing to pay his successor with.

There was no objection, and the bill was amended accordingly, and again passed.

ADDITIONAL BOUNTY.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to extend the time for filing claims for additional bounty under the act of July 28, 1866, and putting it on its passage at this time.

The bill, which was read, provides that the time for filing claims for additional bounty under the act of July 28, 1866, which expired by limitation on the 30th day of January, 1874, shall be revived and extended until the 30th day of January, 1875; and that all claims for such bounties filed in the proper Department after the 30th of January, 1874, and before the passage of this act, shall be deemed to have been filed in due time, and shall be considered and decided without further filing.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I would suggest that the bill ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make a remark in explanation of the bill; just a single word. In 1872 we extended the time for filing these claims for one year. This proposes simply to extend the time for one year longer, from the 30th day of January last to the 30th day of January, 1875.

And now one word as to the effect of the bill. It only affects a few widows and orphan children, who have not filed their claims under the act of 1866. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALBRIGHT] will remember that there is no reason why there should be a limitation at all imposed on the filing of these claims for bounty, for the reason that it is a matter of record. If the soldier was entitled to it, or his widow or orphan children, it appears on the records under the control of the Second Auditor; so that on the one hand no possible injustice can be done to the Government, while on the other hand the persons who ought to have the benefit of this bounty will obtain it. I trust no gentleman will object to the passage of the bill, and especially on the ground that it has not been before a committee, because it is simply the re-enactment of the law reported by the Military Committee of last Congress.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I do not object to this bill particularly on account of the principle involved in it, but there are bills of this kind before the Committee on Military Affairs now, and the committee expect to report a bill which will cover this and other cases. We have been considering it for some time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the record will show that it is the gentleman from Pennsylvania who makes the objection. I withdraw the bill.

ADDITIONAL MAIL SERVICE TO CHINA AND JAPAN.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post-office and Post-Roads be authorized to print the testimony taken before the Committee on Appropriations and the said committee on the question of additional mail service to China and Japan.

FORT BRIDGER MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Military Affairs, for present consideration, the bill (H. R. No. 1002) for the relief of certain settlers upon the military reservation at Fort Bridger, Wyoming Territory.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read; after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The bill was read.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I object, and call the regular order.

ORDER FOR PRINTING.

Mr. DONNAN. I desire to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back with an amendment the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That five hundred extra copies of House bill No. 2978, entitled "A bill for the reorganization of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes," be printed for the use of the House.

The amendment was as follows:

Strike out "five hundred" and insert "one thousand" in lieu thereof.

Mr. DONNAN. The gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG,] who introduced this resolution, deemed five hundred copies insufficient, owing to the large demand for the bill. The committee agree with him, and recommend the larger number.

The amendment was agreed to, and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order having been called, the morning hour begins at twenty-eight minutes past twelve o'clock, and reports from committees are in order, beginning with the Committee on Accounts.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. HOSKINS. I am directed to report back the following resolution, authorizing the appointment of a clerk to several committees without making any special recommendation. If the House desires the investigations contemplated by the rules to proceed, this clerk will be necessary. If they do not desire those investigations to go on, the clerk will not be necessary.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, and the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings, have leave jointly to employ a clerk during the present session of Congress, at the usual rate of compensation.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HOSKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

Mr. SENER. I am instructed by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice to report back a resolution referred to the committee, accompanied by a report in writing.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. COOK, of Georgia, adopted by the House on the 17th of March, respectfully submit the following report:

The resolution is in the following words:

"Whereas the Attorney-General having called the attention of Congress to the continued violation of section 3 of the act of 1853 requiring the district attorneys, clerks of the district and circuit courts, and marshals to make returns in writing embracing all the fees and emoluments of their respective offices of every name and character on the part of said officers for the southern district of Georgia: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be instructed to inquire specially into said charge, and into the expenditure of the public funds in said Department, and to send for persons and papers."

At the request of the committee Mr. COOK appeared before them, and being interrogated stated that he had no knowledge or information whatever in regard to the subject-matter of the resolution outside of the report of the Attorney-General for the year 1873, (see page 7,) an extract from which is recited in the preamble to the resolution.

Thereupon a summons was directed to be issued for James McPherson, clerk of the United States courts for the southern district of Georgia, to appear before the committee and produce the books showing the receipts of his office.

On the 7th of April, Hon. ANDREW SLOAN, a Representative from the State of Georgia, on behalf of Mr. McPherson, laid before the committee a telegram from the Attorney-General, addressed to him, stating that since his annual report to Congress the clerk had sent in all his returns, and a telegram from the Secretary of the Treasury, stating that the First Auditor reports the accounts and returns of James McPherson (the clerk aforesaid) all right.

Letters to the committee to the same effect are filed herewith from the Attorney-General and Acting First Comptroller of the Treasury, and made a part of this report, marked A and B.

There being no allegations concerning the disbursements of public funds in the said district, it appeared to the committee that all the purposes contemplated by the resolution of the House have been accomplished, and they accordingly ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the said resolution.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, April 16, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the letter written by direction of your committee, asking to know whether there is any occasion for the investigation ordered by the House into the violation of the act of 1853 by the clerk of the United States courts for the southern district of Georgia, in failing to render his semi-annual reports to this Department.

In reply, I have to inform you that since my last annual report the clerk has rendered said returns, which, after examination, were found correct and referred to the accounting officers of the Treasury for adjustment. This clerk was not delinquent in any other respect, and there are now no charges of delinquency in this Department against him.

Very respectfully,

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

Hon. JAMES B. SENER,
Chairman Committee on Expenditures, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 18, 1874.

SIR: In answer to the request made by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, per letter of E. C. Rowe, esq., clerk to the committee, addressed to you under date of 15th instant, and referred to this office for report, I have to state that I do not know of anything in the accounts and returns of James McPherson, clerk of the United States courts at Savannah, Georgia, that now requires investigation under the resolution of the House of Representatives referred to by Mr. Rowe.

The Attorney-General, in his report of 29th November last to Congress, directed attention to the fact that Mr. McPherson had disregarded the law which requires all clerks of United States courts to make semi-annual returns of the fees and emoluments of their respective offices, and I understand that the resolution mentioned above had reference to that report.

But in December, subsequent to the date of the report, the clerk made up and forwarded to the Department of Justice complete returns to the close of the year 1873, and those returns are now on file in this office.

Mr. Rowe's letter is returned herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. HEMPHILL JONES,
Acting Comptroller.

Hon. WILLIAM A. RICHARDSON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SENER. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, and that the report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SENER moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 2350) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificate of registry and enrollment to the schooner Almina and changing the name to Minnie Davies.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 2885) to remove the disabilities of David A. Telfair, of North Carolina, and Charles H. McBlair, of Maryland; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3029) to provide for the relief of persons suffering from the overflow of the Lower Mississippi River.

THE MISSISSIPPI LEVEES.

Mr. MOREY. I am instructed by the Select Committee on the Levees of the Mississippi River to report back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2988) to provide for the appointment of a commission of engineers to investigate and report a permanent plan for the reclamation of the alluvial basin of the Mississippi River subject to inundation.

I ask that the following order may be made in relation to it by unanimous consent:

That it shall be in order to consider House bill No. 2988 in the House during the morning hour, when reported from the Committee on the Mississippi Levees, without reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I see no reason why this bill should not take the ordinary course, and therefore I object.

Mr. MOREY. I think if the gentleman will withhold his objection until I can make a brief statement he will not insist on it.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I have no objection to an early day being fixed for the consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole; but it should take the ordinary course of bills calling for appropriations.

Mr. MOREY. Then I ask that this bill may be made a special order for consideration in Committee of the Whole on the 6th day of May next, to the exclusion of all other orders except the regular appropriation bills, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. RANDALL. I would not make any exception at all. The point of order is made only because of an appropriation of $10,000. The subject is of huge importance.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Louisiana requires unanimous consent, and objection is made.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood the gentleman from Vermont to withdraw his objection to a special assignment for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman withdraw it.

Mr. RANDALL. He himself suggested that a special day should be assigned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont withheld his objection long enough for the gentleman from Louisiana to make a brief explanation; but he has not withdrawn it.

Mr. MOREY. I will state that so far as the question of economy of time is concerned, it will take probably less time to consider the bill in the morning hour than at any other time.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I make no objection to a day being fixed for the consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I only object to its consideration in the House.

Mr. DAWES. If the bill is to be made a special order in Committee of the Whole the gentleman should except reports from the Committees on Ways and Means and Appropriations. If he will make that exception I will not object.

Mr. RANDALL. The bill contains only a very small appropriation.

Mr. DAWES. I know that, but those two exceptions ought to be made.

Mr. MOREY. The committee is now called and probably the bill can be disposed of during the morning hour. It is only subject to the point of order because there is a small appropriation in it, which, however, can be as well disposed of in the House during the morning hour as at any other time, and it would take less time to consider the bill in the morning hour than it would to consider it in Committee of the Whole. I hope liberty will be given to the committee to have it considered during the morning hour.

Mr. STANARD. Why may not the bill be considered now? Is the gentleman from Louisiana ready to proceed with its consideration?

Mr. MOREY. I am, if the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] will withdraw his objection.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The resolution offered by the gentleman asked that the bill when reported might be considered in the House. I do not understand that any bill has been reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana reported back the bill. The Chair will direct the reading of the bill, and then the objection can be insisted on or withdrawn.

The bill was read. The preamble is as follows:

Whereas the alluvial basin of the Mississippi, liable to inundation by its floods, extends from Cape Girardeau in Missouri to the Gulf of Mexico, and has a length of six hundred miles in latitude by an average width of sixty-three miles in longitude, and contains an area of 38,607 square miles of the most fertile and productive land on earth; and whereas this large extent of territory was, prior to the erection of levees, frequently a single delta sea of great depth, every acre submerged; and whereas under the fragmentary levees built by individuals, neighborhoods, counties, and ultimately States, during a period covering a century and a half of struggle, one-tenth of this area was reclaimed, and another tenth made available for further reclamation; and whereas the interruption of labor and vigilance upon the said levees, and their destruction, in part, as a military necessity during the war of secession, has greatly diminished the amount of the reclamation, submerged and depopulated large areas formerly inhabited and cultivated; and whereas, as shown by statistics, the struggles of an impoverished people, with an expenditure in a single State (Louisiana) of more than $13,000,000 since the said war in attempts to restore the levees have proved abortive, their fields and homes being now ravaged by floods and crevasses; and whereas the caving of the river-banks back to low land has made it necessary to build higher levees year after year; and whereas the States of Arkansas and Missouri have made but little attempt since said war to effect a levee system, and the efforts of Louisiana and Mississippi in that direction have proved almost fruitless, and the great work is now beyond their control; and whereas the Mississippi River is national in its character, is fed by over fifteen hundred streams, and drains the water-sheds of a whole continent, reaching, through its tributaries, twenty States and Territories; and whereas all improvements looking to the reclamation of the delta of such a river must conduce to the general welfare of the whole Union, and should be undertaken and accomplished by the General Government; and whereas all systems for the redemption and protection of the alluvial lands of the Mississippi should be general and uniform in their character, and embrace the whole valley of the river; and whereas no such system has ever been adopted.

The first section of the bill authorizes and directs the President to assign two officers of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and to appoint three civil engineers eminent in their profession and who are acquainted with the alluvial basin of the Mississippi River, to serve as a board of commissioners; the president of said board to be designated by the President of the United States; and makes it the duty of said commission to make a full report to the President of the best system for the permanent reclamation and redemption of said alluvial basin from inundation, which report the President shall transmit to Congress at its next session with such recommendations as he shall think proper.

The second section provides that the members of the commission who may be appointed from civil life shall receive compensation at the rate of $5,000 per annum; that the commission may employ a secretary at a rate of compensation not exceeding $200 per month for the time he is employed, and that the necessary traveling expenses of the members of said commission not officers of the Army, and of the secretary, shall be paid upon the approval of bills for the same by the Secretary of War.

The third section appropriates the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry into effect the foregoing provisions, subject to disbursement by the Secretary of War.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. If the gentleman will strike out the preamble to his bill entirely and allow the bill itself to be discussed, I have no objection to its present consideration.

Mr. MOREY. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. If there be no further objection the bill will be considered in the House. The Chair hears none.

Mr. KASSON. I ask that the bill may now be read by sections for amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and subject to amendment.

Mr. MOREY. As the bill is to be considered in the House, I do not feel authorized to yield anything more in the way of giving up control of the bill than is usually yielded in the consideration of bills before the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. All I ask is that the bill shall be subject to amendment.

Mr. MOREY. I have no objection to that if there be no objection from others.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOREY. I have no apology to offer the House for thrusting on its attention this resolution at this moment. The daily recital by the press of the scenes of deluge, destruction, and desolation that are rapidly transpiring through the whole Lower Mississippi Valley plead more earnestly and eloquently than any words of mine can for the impoverished and stricken people of that region of our common country.

THE DELTA OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

We are accustomed, Mr. Speaker, to contemplate a delta analogous to that which gives rise to the name. The alluvial lands, lying below a river dividing out toward the sea in Egypt, gave the name in the long ago, when the Greeks conquered the Pharaohs and sat down upon the Nile. From Rosetta down to the Mediterranean, some twenty miles, that river divides and empties by two branches, embracing an area that has a resemblance to the Greek letter △, (delta,) an equilateral triangle. How vast the difference! Look upon this map. The definition has gradually grown until we now apply the name "delta" to all the continuous alluvion of a river embraced between its first extravasated floods that may never return down to the border of the sea. Instead, then, of a few hundred square miles of a delta from Rosetta to the Mediterranean, we have this enormous expanse of country of about sixty miles in average breadth and about six hundred miles in length. We have an area of about 38,607 square miles for the delta of the Mississippi River. Contemplate its expanse upon the map of North America, sweeping the fronts of seven great States of the American Union, embracing nearly as large an area as either of the seven, and capable of sustaining a larger population than the uplands of any three of them, grand and fertile as they are.

In the language of a writer whose life has been devoted to its study and reclamation:

Sweeping across eight and a half degrees of latitude, it extends from the semi-tropical lands of the orange and the lemon, the cotton and the cane, to the middle of the cereal and farming region of the temperate zone, and to the border of the ice-floes, that in rigorous winters engorge and choke the navigation of the great river.

It is everywhere threaded and thwarted by interlocking channels of rivers and bayous and navigable channels, placing every cultivable acre within ready reach of steamboat navigation. In this particular it has no rival or parallel known to civilized man.

Its fertility is exhaustless and all-pervading. The timbers and vines that grow upon it have an exuberance that render it in the wild condition nearly impenetrable; and yet a single season's labor of the enterprising forester has replaced the wild productions by crops that were nearly as exuberant. The cypress and the oak rise upon it to an altitude and with a profusion incredible to those who have not explored it, thus furnishing it with a wealth of timber of the highest value that is nearly exhaustless. Its crops, whenever rescued from the waters, do so readily respond to the hand of cultivation that the drift of population toward it had, prior to the late unfortunate war, lined nearly all its streams with inhabitants, where the chances of escape from overflooding were regarded as good during three years out of four. And yet this realm of fertility is subject to yearly inundation from the very waters that have created it—the floods of the Mississippi River.

The whole delta is an enormous basin, with every acre of its bottom lying deep below the level of the river's extreme floods. From Cape Girardeau, in Missouri, to the border of the Gulf of Mexico, it might be regarded, in the greatest flood seasons, as one vast delta sea.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT OF LEVEES WITH FLOODS.

And yet the boldness of the man of the South—listen to the story of his sublime undertaking—resolved to conquer this mediterranean, and restrain its waters within the channel of the great river, and guide them down to the Gulf without invading the great basin.

You will join me in rendering him ample honors for the grandest of human enterprises when I show you that up to the year 1861 he had reduced the average level of the twelve-foot inundation by about four feet all over the basin, by running his feeble earthen barriers along the border of the river, the rim of the delta sea, and had lined all its interior channels with a hardy and most adventurous population. His levees were two thousand miles in length. They had grown—he could scarcely tell you why or how—through one hundred and fifty years of struggle, of alternate success and inundation. No one, for a century, ever dreamed of exterminating the foe. Like the removal of the American savage from the continent, it was a work always progressing but never declared complete, or contemplated as a whole. But at last the moment came, and the resolution was taken to reserve and reclaim the whole delta. The man still lives, and is within the sound of my voice, hale and vigorous, with the hope of seeing its completion, who first wrote the proposal, in 1840, to manacle the river with chains of levees as long as the delta, and to reserve the entire alluvion for the uses of men.

And all this labor, these millions of treasure, and these five generations of men have been consumed in the struggle without the aid of the strong arm of the Government. Front proprietors first built their own levees, and on this condition held the titles to these lands during the first century of this conflict.

When the work grew beyond their capacity, and the unoccupied links of the chain had to be constructed, counties and parishes and districts, then States, one after the other, embarked in this enterprise; and the Government of the United States, having sold its millions upon millions of acres thus rescued by local effort, at last granted the unsalable swamp lands yet to be reclaimed to the States that would undertake to rescue them; a grant much like the privilege to have all the fish they could catch from the navigable waters. Still the grant had its effect, and the States utilized for levee purposes all the lands they could still render salable, after the best lands they had reserved had all been selected and bought from the United States; and but for the sad war that ensued we would have triumphed in a complete rescue of the delta sea from the dominion of the floods. Abandonment and destruction followed the clash of arms; and to this day the flood has been regaining his dominion. The river had gathered force from his long restraint. His voracity had gnawed away the banks till the dikes of resistance had been driven back to the lower grounds and had to be replaced by more powerful and costly barriers, only practicable to a prosperous people.

When the cloud of war had cleared away the people who survived the conflict of arms returned to find hundreds of miles of their barriers swept away or broken and unavailing. From Cape Girardeau to the Arkansas River the right bank was abandoned, except at special localities, and the States of Arkansas and Missouri have made no systematic effort to replace their levees; and for one hundred and twenty miles below the Arkansas River on the right bank the struggle to reclaim can scarcely be called systematic, and the result has been failure and abandonment. Thus one-third of the great basin on the right is now open to the ravages of the flood and the consequence is desolation and deluge. The daily papers and the telegraphic accounts tell us of the distress, calling aloud for relief, of a suffering people.

Below latitude thirty-three on the right, and below thirty-five on the left bank, the States of Louisiana and Mississippi returned to the great conflict with the floods. Mississippi with four hundred miles to guard, and Louisiana with seven hundred and fifty miles of the great river's front, rallied to repair and rebuild their levees. The former has spent some three or four millions and the latter no less than thirteen millions of dollars to replace the levees destroyed by military necessity and by abandonment during the war; and yet, Mr. Speaker, the daily reports of crevasses, inundations, and disasters will tell you how utterly inadequate these life-struggles have been. The cry for help from a suffering people is just now utterly appalling.

We come, Mr. Speaker, to lay down at the feet of Congress our arms of resistance to those floods, to confess our inability, like the gallant but misguided soldiers of the confederacy, to struggle longer against a power so exhaustless and nearly omnipotent. Throw the mantle of the panoply of your greater power around us, for we can build the levee-defenses no longer.

We lay before you in figures, more effective than those of rhetoric, the details of reasons why we regard this work as traversing as the delta does the fronts of seven great States, and incalculably valuable as it is to the future wealth of the nation and the prosperity and civilization of the great West and the continent. The question of reclaiming and protecting this vast empire from the periodical depredations of the Mississippi River has long engaged the consideration of this Government; for now over twenty years past in its national aspect it has commanded the attention of Congress and the country. And permit me to add, that in my judgment no matter connected with all the problem of American progress and development deserves a more thoughtful and deliberate attention from our statesmen than this great problem of how to redeem from the periodical dominion of destructive freshets this fairest and most fertile portion of the great American continent.

A WORK OF NATIONAL CHARACTER,

We find in the general appropriation act of September 30, 1850, that Congress directed the application of $50,000 to "a topographical and hydrographical survey of the delta of the Mississippi, with such investigations as may lead to determine the most practicable plan for securing it from inundation," &c. Fifty thousand dollars additional were applied under the law of August 31, 1852, for a continuance of that survey of "the Mississippi bottom and such investigations as may lead to determine the most practicable plan for securing it from inundation." The surveys thus ordered were carried on during several years by a distinguished officer of our military engineers, and are embodied in a report made in August, 1861, to the Secretary of War.

This valuable report is now a part of the literary treasure of the country, and is a contribution to physical science on the philosophy of rivers similar in its great research and vast information to Lieutenant Maury's reports on the philosophy of the sea.

In every form in which it could commit itself Congress has assumed the responsibility of this great work.

The Senate committees to which measures in connection with this subject have been referred have invariably reported in their favor. Senator Clarke reports July 2, 1866, that his select committee "is satisfied the people of those States"—those concerned directly in the levees—"are unable without aid from the Government to undertake and complete the necessary repairs." Senator Henderson, from the Committee on Finance, reports on March 27, 1867, that his committee is satisfied of "the constitutional power and the expediency and good policy" of granting Federal aid to the construction of the levees. A committee on the levees of the Mississippi was created in each branch of Congress by the respective branches of the Forty-second Congress as well as of the Forty-third Congress; and thus for a period of twenty years have the executive and the legislative departments of the Government, assuming that the Mississippi River (receiving as it does the soil and minerals of over twenty States and Territories) is an "inland sea," practically declared it to be the fixed policy of the nation to assume its guardianship and protect the people of the lower valley from its destructive ravages.

And here, Mr. Speaker, I will say, that but for a desire on our part that the Government should not embark in this great enterprise until the last doubt of its entire practicability shall be dispelled, I would again press the bill I had the honor last year to offer, on the immediate attention of Congress. Hence we have agreed to submit this resolution, in the belief that by the next session we can have all the data and information of every description required for prompt and intelligent action on this great subject.

The object sought to be attained in reclaiming and protecting the Lower Mississippi Valley is closely allied with all the great questions affecting the material progress and physical development of America. The national finances; the augmentation of our export values; our monopoly of the cotton supply, now seriously impaired and endangered; the resumption of specie payments; and the redemption of the national debt, are all indissolubly bound up in this great work of insuring the safe cultivation of this vast and fertile territory.

A few years ago Congress, at great expense, built a railroad to the gold-fields of the Pacific. Though the enterprise was costly, there is nobody who would have the money returned with the condition of no road to California. Ten times the cost would not purchase this condition from the American people.

The enterprise of protecting the alluvion of the Mississippi Valley from the periodical ravages of the great river is equal in all its aspects to the great scheme of transcontinental connections and merits as much, if not more, the fostering care of our great Government.

One of the great subjects which has engaged the attention of Congress this winter has been that of the currency. There has been no one so far unwilling to admit that if we could safely resume specie payments it would be vastly to the interests of the whole people. No one has raised the question of its desirability. The whole argument has been addressed to its impracticability. With a little over $160,000,000 specie in sight in the entire country, with the balance of trade against us, with bonds abroad to the amount of hundreds, yea, thousands of millions of dollars, on which gold or exchange has to annually leave the country to discharge the interest; ourselves purchasers of commodities and fabrics which we should grow and manufacture; the whole suggestion of immediate resumption is utopian, and all the measures looking to it have been destructive to the business interests of the country, and culminated in the crisis of last fall. Before we can return to specie payments it is necessary to do something else than contract the paper circulation of the country. We have to accumulate gold and silver in the country by increasing our exports and diminishing our imports. This is the key to financial health and specie resumption.

From 1816 to 1866 Great Britain added to her then already large accumulation of specie currency an average of $18,000,000 a year. From 1793 to 1866 France increased her supply of the precious metals at a yearly average of very little less than the same amount. The United States, unlike these old countries, beginning with but little, began to increase her scanty store of metallic currency in 1792, and has averaged for the same period about $11,000,000 annually. And it is a noteworthy fact that after the Napoleonic war England returned to specie payments with great caution; and notwithstanding she increased her great hoard, the accumulation continuing at the rate of $8,000,000 annually, she did not resume the specie standard of value till her exports equaled her imports; meanwhile funding her vast debt at home, in which she set us an example we could have followed with profit. The coin used for circulation is estimated at about $400,000,000; that of France at about $650,000,000; our own accumulation in sight does not equal quite $160,000,000.

From 1861 to 1869, inclusive, the California production by gold is estimated at $514,600,000. Adopting the calculation fixed by high commercial authority of $60,000,000 as the product from all other sources, we have the aggregate production of gold and silver for this period of nine years at $574,600,000. The imports of treasure for this time is set down at $148,000,000, making an aggregate of $723,400,000. During this period our exports of treasure amounted to $520,200,000. This difference between our production and imports of treasure and our exports of it amounts to $203,200,000. The official statements of the deposits of this gold and silver account for not quite $160,000,000 remaining in the country. The impression is the discrepancy of treasure, amounting to over $43,000,000, has taken some other shape than coin.

I have given these statistics to show the scarcity of the precious metals with us in comparison with the older countries of the world, and to show the vast importance, in a financial point of view, of increasing our supply of metallic treasure; which is only to be done, I repeat, by lessening our imports and increasing our exports. General Humphreys, in his able report on the Mississippi levees, shows than an efficient system of protection would bring into safe cultivation 2,500,000 acres of sugar land and 7,000,000 acres of cotton land. This sugar belt in 1860 made 449,000 hogsheads, or nearly 225,000 tons of sugar. In 1865 the sugar consumed in this country is thus given: foreign sugar, 345,809 tons; the home crops of cane sugar, 5,000 tons; maple sugar, at 3,000 tons; and sugar from molasses at refineries, 22,300 tons. We may safely assume that the sugar imported amounts to 350,000 tons. This, including duty, would sell at present prices for nearly $60,000,000 gold value; while the molasses imported would amount to about $11,000,000, gold.

The State of Louisiana before the war produced, I repeat, nearly five hundred thousand hogsheads, or 225,000 tons. Estimating the total annual consumption of the United States as stated, it would appear that the sugar region of Louisiana is capable of producing about 40 per cent. of the sugars consumed in the country on the basis of its production in 1860, thus saving annually to the nation at least $24,000,000 of gold a year. Of the 2,500,000 acres of sugar lands not more than 20 per cent. have ever been put in cultivation, leaving an undeveloped territory capable, when brought into cultivation, of producing all the sugar needed for the consumption of the country, saving over $60,000,000 of gold annually.

In regard to cotton the case is still stronger. General Humphreys estimates that 7,000,000 acres of the best cotton soil in the world would be brought into safe cultivation by an efficient system of production. This land without manure is capable of producing from one to two bales of cotton to the acre. To give some idea of the productive capacity of this rich alluvion, I would give a few statistics from the census of 1860. In that year in the Yazoo delta there were in cultivation about 428,000 acres of the 5,000,000 that compose it, which produced 313,000 bales of cotton and 2,600,000 bushels of corn, besides a great variety of other products and stock of all sorts. The four front parishes of Louisiana, Carroll, Concordia, Madison, and Tensas, situated opposite the Yazoo basin, made the same year over 212,000 bales of cotton; and corn for the extravagant consumption of their people.

These two facts from the census will give you, Mr. Speaker, some idea of the boundless productive capacity and possibilities of this splendid region which it is proposed to reclaim and make useful for other purposes than the sport of the reptile and the alligator.

Ever since the war, and the famine prices which the failure of the American supply of cotton produced, British energy and enterprise have been directed to opening new fields of cotton production. As early as 1862 we find the Cotton Supply Association, of Manchester, sending a deputation to the world's fair to meet the commissioners of thirty different localities in the world who had brought with them specimens of raw cotton to the exhibition. In 1861 Lord Dalhousie inaugurated the railway system of India, costing over $450,000,000, the object being to reach new climates and cotton-fields in India. In every way in their power the nations of the Old World are stimulating cotton production with a view of relieving their dependence on the American-grown staple.

Shall we do nothing to preserve what they are striving to wrest from us, namely,

PRACTICAL MONOPOLY OF THE COTTON-PLANT?

We quote from the speech of Senator ALCORN, of Mississippi, delivered in the Forty-second Congress in 1872:

A great combination has been operating for ten years against our supremacy in raw cotton. The governments of Europe are all parties to that combination, and, under the promptings of the Manchester Cotton Supply Association, have made the diffusion of cotton industry a subject of diplomatic action and of domestic policy. France has sought to stimulate the culture of cotton in Algeria by bonuses; Austria has made the attempt in her Adriatic provinces by a system of premiums; Turkey has stimulated the production by offers of liberal land tenures to European planters; Italy has surveyed, mapped, intersected with roads, several millions of acres of her southern territory, with the view of bringing back her culture of the staple, under the encouragement of liberal grants of land; and England, in order to stimulate the production in Central India, has, in addition to the distribution to the Hindoo farmers of seed, tools, and information on the subject, given the cotton-fields of India access to the sea-board by railroads at a cost of $450,000,000.

Thirty-six states were represented at a convention of cotton-growers held in London in 1862, under the auspices of the Manchester Cotton Supply Association. The ground taken in that conspiracy against our industry rested on the proposition that we could never again produce cotton as cheaply as before; and that so long as the United States failed to grow it at a price less than twelve cents per pound, so long could the states represented in the conspiracy go on successfully in their attempt to drive us from the market! The nation may rest assured that unless our cotton fibers can be produced at some such rates as those by which they had reached their control of the market, they can never enjoy that control again. And a production so variable in its yield can never be maintained in healthy vigor anywhere under other conditions than those by which it had been maintained here—such a control of the market as shall cover any shortcoming in the crop by regulating its price.

The war waged upon our cotton culture by the governments and peoples of Europe cannot be met successfully save on the basis of our cotton triumph of the past—the basis of prices. If the uplands of the South are to be the scene of the conflict, their yield of from one-fourth to one-half of a bale to the acre brings us to trial so feeble that we must go down before the combination into which England and her allies have entered for our defeat. But the seven million acres to be brought into the uses of our cotton culture by the construction of the levees of the Mississippi present a battle-field on which that great combination for the ruin of the grandest triumph of American industry may be brought to a close in the victorious assertion once more of our supremacy in the cotton market. "The best cotton land in the world, capable of producing a bale to the acre," as those alluviums are very truly said to be by General Humphreys, so prolific is their production of the fabric—with the same amount of capital and the same amount of labor—that the exclusion of all rival producers from the market, and the destruction of all the capital invested in their production, will follow the establishment of our cotton industry in the unapproachable strength of the seven million acres which will be given for that national purpose by the construction of a complete system of levees on the Mississippi River.

Our cotton uplands are being denuded of their labor. The higher productiveness of our Mississippi lowlands giving higher remuneration, their conversion having therefore at its command abundant supplies of labor, may be expected to go forward with extraordinary rapidity, after the levees shall have thrown them open by reclamation to the uses of agriculture. And seven million bales whitening, before many years, the splendid territory now lying waste on either side of the Mississippi, would, at ten cents per pound, not only enable us to crush all rivalry in cotton production under our heels, but would at the same time add to the credit side of our international balance-sheet hundreds of millions per annum in gold.

Cheapness is a necessity of not only the maintenance of our cotton agriculture, but of also our cotton manufacture; for freight and handling, though sometimes like constant quantities, constitute, in reference to variations of price, varying percentages. As a tariff in favor of home production, they are greater in their operative power when the fabric is ten cents per pound than they are when it is twenty cents. Their effective force as an incidental protection of our cotton manufactures becomes greatest when the price of cotton is the least. Under this point of view there can be no doubt that the high prices of raw cotton bear injuriously on our exports of cotton fabrics. And in corroboration of this deduction, the fact may be cited that, while our exports of manufactured cotton amounted in 1860 to about eleven million dollars, they fell off in 1864 to less than one million and a half. In 1871 they had not rallied to over three millions and a half—one-third of their value in 1860.

Our cotton manufactures have lost under high prices of raw cotton an income from exports to the extent of seven millions a year. The proof which that loss points gives it an aspect still more serious to the interests involved directly in the production of cotton fabrics. It represents them in an attitude, not of expansion into the healthy life which can strike out into competition with the world, but of the sickliness that shrinks from that struggle, under the withering influence of high prices, into the dangerous condition of industrial existence which holds its vitality by the uncertain tenure of "protection." And the cotton manufacturers of the country have, therefore, lost not only seven millions of their income from exports under the operation of high prices of raw cotton, but they have entered under that operation on a footing that places their whole capital, so long as those high prices of the raw material hold, more or less at the mercy of oscillations in our political thought

Wheat, flour, and Indian corn entered into our exports of 1860 to the amount of $22,000,000. The consumption of those northern commodities in the cotton region having been arrested by the war, their export ran up from twenty-two millions in 1860 to seventy millions in 1861, to eighty millions in 1862. The wheat, flour, and Indian corn of the Western States, which were consumed in the cotton region in 1860, may therefore be set down, in general, at between fifty and sixty million dollars. The pork, the beef, the manufactures of wood, iron, &c., that were sold by the States of the West to the cotton producers of 1860, may be estimated at a very great amount when the consumption of western grain by these producers is seen in such strong evidence to have amounted to fifty or sixty million dollars. And thus, in addition to the general interest of giving out enormous amounts to our credit in our international account, does the reclamation of seven million acres of the "richest cotton lands in the world," by the construction of the Mississippi levees, promise to give the Western States that best of all markets, a home market, for their breadstuffs and their manufactures to an amount that may be held to sum up $150,000,000 per annum.

Water-power, though cheaper in first cost, is inferior for the uses of manufacture to steam Cotton, being the lighter of the two materials, must go at the bidding of economy to that producer of steam—coal. And in seeking the coal best suited for its conversion it will determine in favor, all things else being equal, of the coal nearest, easiest of access. Now, the reclamation of our immense areas of cotton land on the banks of the Mississippi is under this point of view, the initial step in an inevitable result—American supremacy in the production of cotton fabrics. With the raw material in unbounded supplies in one part of the river system of the Mississippi basin, and in an adjoining part of that system abundance of coal, abundance of breadstuffs, abundance of labor, all the conditions of economical production concur in declaring the throne of a future empire in the manufacture of cotton fabrics to be seated on the coal-fields of the West. The wonderful developments of civic population and industrial wealth in Great Britain have taken place on her coal-measures under the drawbacks of supplies and markets thousands of miles away, and there can be no doubt developments still more wonderful in the concentration of population and the increase of riches will follow on the coal-measures of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, &c., when, with the consumption of a continent at the doors of their cotton-mills, the raw material can be brought to them at the low cost of transportation over five or six hundred miles of inland navigation, in the abundance of supply whitening seven million acres behind the levees of the Mississippi.

The nation cannot consent to palter with her duties.

I now submit some further reasons, Mr. Speaker, in support of the proposition of the committee, taken from the report of the committee which I had the honor to make to this House on the 17th instant:

NEW SERVITUDE FROM STEAMBOAT WAVES.

The claim of the inhabitants of the delta for national aid rests upon much stronger grounds than mere prospective revenues and productions. These claims come in the form of reclamation. They are based upon the perpetual and ever-increasing attack upon the banks of the river and the levees by the passing commerce of no less than twenty-one States and five Territories, the most productive of the Union, that send their untold commerce down the river, and receive their imports in return. The steamers that transport this commerce send their resistless waves against banks and levees, lashing and abrading them almost without cessation. Our lower river hardly ever rests. One set of waves succeed another, and each finds its rest in the equivalent of its forces transferred to the banks and channel of the river. These lashings and abradings, independent of the other causes, render the task of levee construction more and more oppressive yearly, until they have become intolerable. That this burden should be borne in part by those whose commerce attacks and batters them down is an axiom of equity.

MEASURE OF WAVE FORCES ON BANKS.

Let it first be observed that the forces started by a steamer plowing the waters are chiefly lateral. The bow of the vessel and the paddle-wheels throw up waves that cannot find movement except along the surface; and even when the paddle strikes downward, the displacement is lateral except at very short distances beneath the dip of the wheel. The force is felt downward only at the wheels or propeller, and these immediately react and run along the surface to the distant shores. And since the waters are indefinitely mobile among their particles, repose for displacement or violence can only be found against the walls of the channel. The total force exerted against the bank must be the same, whether diffuse or concentrated, though the abrasions will be materially different. Forces are never lost, though their facility of transmission is greatest in water and least in solids, such the as river bank. And since these banks are composed of material brought and laid down where they lie by these very waters, moving at a velocity of three feet per second, whenever the new forces brought to bear by greater velocity of wave or current attack these particles, they displace them and carry them down to lower lands.

Let us take an example. The steamer James Howard, of side-wheel construction and with 1,500 tons freight, passed up the river at near mean high-water gauge, at Carrollton, 12.5 feet, 3 feet below maximum. Her rate was about ten miles per hour against a current of four miles per hour, making a movement of her waves ten and four miles, equal to fourteen miles. The waves of practical value were oblique, 23° to her course on each side, and could be distinctly counted to about the fifteenth wave, and I added five for the confused, irregular waves that followed. Ten of these waves were nearly of the same height, and were measured by their rise on a rod and a drift-log that did not break them.

These waves averaged about 16 inches of height at 300 feet behind the vessel, and the remaining ten waves averaged less than half that height, say six inches. They were all delivered against the banks with the velocity of the steamer, plus the rate of the current, say fourteen miles per hour or 20 feet per second.

Without attempting to weigh this force by computing its dynamics from these data, we assume the tonnage of the steamer multiplied by her velocity gives the just practical result.

It is probable that the Howard's own tonnage is more than half her load, and that 2,300 tons would be the weight of boat and cargo. We have, then, 4,600,000 pounds delivered against the banks of the river at the rate of ten miles per hour, equal to 14.6 feet per second.

Now this force is repeated every length the vessel travels; and taking her length at 300 feet or 100 yards, the force is repeated 17.60 times in every mile. Thus the violence done to the banks and levees by one trip of the James Howard is measured by 4,600,000 pounds × 14.6 seconds × 17.60 for each mile of her travel. The aggregate force, then, that is abnormal, applied by this steamer, amounts in foot-pounds to 118,201,600 pounds=60,000 tons.

These quantities are so enormous as to be unappreciable to the mind unless illustrated by some familiar example.

A levee of 9 feet in height, by the recent formula of Humphreys and Abbot, with slopes of 2 and 3 to 1, contains 1,200 cubic yards in every hundred feet, and 3,000 pounds to the cubic yard. The 300 feet of levee, equal to the length of the James Howard, would weigh 10,800,000 pounds; the force thrown against the levee or bank each trip by the passing boat would be 68,160,000÷2=34,080,000 pounds; more than three times the weight of the whole levee!

Owing to the tenacity of the soil and materials of the banks of the river, these banks do stand these forces, repeated fifty times a day under many modified forms; and still they stand almost miraculously this fearful servitude.

But this is wholly abnormal, and chargeable to the commerce of the Mississippi Valley.

COMMERCE OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

It follows, from the conclusions of the last pages, that the entire tonnage of the river must be aggregated, in order to make up the account of the levees against the western country's commerce.

We are indebted to Judge W. M. Burwell, secretary of the New Orleans Chamber of Commerce, for the items relating to this commerce woven into this report.

TABLE I.

Arrived and cleared at New Orleans, 1871.

River crafts.	Trips.	Approximate tonnage.
Steamboats	6,344	160,000
Barges		10,000
Coastwise and foreign sail-ships	1,041	150,000
Steamships	1,094	60,000
Mississippi barge line, eight tugs and forty barges		32,000
Other barges on Mississippi and Ohio, exclusive of coal		32,000
Tonnage of vessels		444,000

TABLE II.

Products received.

	Tons.
Cotton, say 1,500,000 bales	375,000
Corn, say 4,000,000 bushels	121,000
Flour, 1,571,281 barrels	186,000
Tobacco, 25,000 hogsheads	28,000
Sugar, (home crop,) 140,000 hogsheads	154,000
Western provisions other than corn	50,000
Coal, (5,000,000 tons per flat-boats—make no waves, float on the current)	------
Other commodities—furniture, lumber, staves, laths, hardware, iron, &c	86,000
	1,000,000
Imports, $20,000,000, estimated at one-fourth other receipts	250,000
Total freights	1,250,000
Total vessels	444,000
Total movement	1,694,000

Thus the tonnage transported on the Mississippi in 1871, by vessels producing waves, amounts in the aggregate to 1,694,000. Every ton and every pound of this freight sent its corresponding ton of wave against our banks at an average velocity which, after some reflection, we have placed at six miles per hour = 8.8 feet per second.

To appreciate the effect of this prodigious force, we can but multiply the 1,694,000 tons by 8.8 feet per second, and it impels a force of 15,787,000 tons, running currently the entire line of our banks and levees of 2,000 miles, every consecutive point receiving this force!

It is incredible, thus, that in addition to the burdens the levees originally assumed of current lapse and occasional wind waves, the levees and banks of the Mississippi River should bear this servitude, and that the people who live along these river fronts should be able to bear the burden of rebuilding and repairing them forever.

Certainly a portion of this burden should be now assumed by those whose commerce forever attacks and batters them down.

No power but that of the General Government can reach a case so ramified and touching the interests of people in so many States.

A PERFECT LEVEE SYSTEM WILL IMPROVE THE NAVIGATION OF THE RIVER.

There is another view in which this subject commends itself to national consideration. Receiving the streams of twenty States and daily freighted with their rich argosies, the Mississippi River is essentially a national avenue of commerce, and everything tending to its safe navigation is a matter of extreme interest to the Government. There is no doubt that if we had an efficient system of levees from Cairo to the Gulf these dangers to navigation that now environ various points on it would cease to exist; and there is no practical engineer familiar with that river who would not agree that the best mode to make a safely navigable river would be to confine the water within embankments, and thus let it scour out its channel.

THE RELATIONS OF THE SOUTHERN RAILROAD SYSTEM TO THE RECLAMATION OF THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY FROM INUNDATION.

The necessity of easy and safe transit across the Mississippi below the mouth of the Ohio is as great in the long future as above that point. Such is the dependence of the country in its new phase of material progress that it cannot dispense with or forego the utilities of railway connections everywhere. But with the annual inundations of the delta, railroads are impracticable. While there are some seventeen crossings above the delta, there are only three routes completed across the alluvium below in all the one thousand and eighty miles of the river's windings or the six hundred miles of length of the delta. And all these three have been in operation for a series of years, and have demonstrated the peril and disasters of railways beneath the level of the flood-waters. None of these are in original hands, having been whelmed in ruin by the floods. Railways are impossible on this basin unless the levees are kept up. Individuals and the State have done their utmost to keep them secure. No power but that of the General Government is capable of doing this. The Arkansas Central, the Memphis and Little Rock, and the Mississippi, Ouachita and Red River Railroads in Arkansas, and the North Louisiana and Texas Railroad in Louisiana, the latter the direct prolongation eastward of the Texas and Southern Pacific Railroad, are flooded annually by water that escapes from the Mississippi River in Arkansas. Louisiana could not if she would give the latter road protection from overflow even if her own levees were maintained. Thus the entire system of railroad connection between the Southern States east and those west of the Mississippi River is destroyed by the lack of jurisdiction and lack of a levee system of sufficient strength and continuity to restrain the river floods.

These considerations, these commercial statistics, these reasonings of science, of physical geography and of inexorable experience, are submitted with confidence; their logic is unanswerable and irresistible. We submit with these considerations to you, Mr. Speaker, and to you, legislators of a great nation, the plain and practical, the momentous question, Shall man or shall the floods possess the Mississippi delta? Will this great nation in its aggregate capacity, the very symbol of enterprise and almost sublime mastery over the physical obstacles to the dominion of industry on this continent; can you, in view of your past traditions, your green laurels of triumph earned by scaling mountains with the iron horse, and your flash of intelligence over mountains and under the seas, giving omnipresence to news and to thought; can you, I say, suffer the great delta of your central river, the most fertile area on earth, the very Eden of production, to be remitted to the dominion of the floods and set apart for the home of alligators? No; a thousand times no.

The cry for help comes up from a line of more than fifteen hundred miles of river-front levees, and from are required; from the millions who cultivate in their rear or stand ready to enter the fertile fields; from the six great States of Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, Missouri, Tennessee, and Kentucky.

MORE THAN FIVE HUNDRED ADDITIONAL MILES

The cause is eminently national, and to this great nation we appeal with confident expectation that its powerful arm, now released from all duties but those of peace, good will, enlightenment, and civilization, will at once be extended to the rescue of the noblest area of fertility ever redeemed for the habitation of man.

Mr. FORT. I desire to move an amendment.

Mr. MOREY. I will yield to hear it read.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I understood that this bill was open to amendment as a matter of course, and it was upon that understanding that I withdraw my objection to its consideration in the House.

Mr. FORT. I move to amend by striking out the second section of the bill, and by amending the first section so that it will read as follows:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to assign two officers of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, to serve as a board of commissioners. It shall be the duty of said commissioners to make a full report to the President of the best system for the permanent reclamation and redemption of said alluvial basin from inundation, which report the President shall transmit to Congress at its next session with such recommendations as he shall think proper.

That strikes out all relating to the appointment of civilians upon this proposed commission.

Mr. KASSON. I hope the gentleman will leave one civil engineer to be appointed on this commission. I think there should be one.

Mr. FORT. Very well; I will accept that suggestion, and will move to amend the bill so as to authorize the President to appoint one civil engineer instead of three, as now proposed by this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I would suggest that you make a commission to consist of three Army officers and two civilians.

Mr. FORT. That is too many.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think five men can more than do this work in the time allotted by this bill.

Mr. FORT. There is hardly an Army officer, I suppose there is none who has been educated at West Point, who is not a good engineer. Many of them are unemployed and can be engaged in this way as well as otherwise.

Mr. MOREY. I desire to say this in opposition to the amendment: I agree to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] a member of the committee, that the United States Army engineers shall constitute a majority of the commission; that is, that there shall be three United States engineers and two civilians. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] is certainly mistaken when he says that there are engineers now in the Army without employment. On the contrary, the fact is that all of the United States engineers are employed, and the Engineer Department is now employing civilian engineers to do the duty of engineers of the Army, because their force is not sufficient.

Now, an objection to limiting the number of civil engineers to one. I will concede that all engineers, as soon as they graduate from West Point, have a theoretical knowledge of engineering; in other words, they are ready to commence to learn something, and that is all. But it has taken years of study and devotion to business by eminent engineers of this country to become at all acquainted with the engineering difficulties that are presented in the reclamation of the alluvial lands of the Mississippi River. General Humphreys and General Abbot gave the best part of several years of study to this question before they thought that they apprehended it at all.

We have in the country some very eminent engineers who have made the subject of the reclamation of this valley a life-long study. I think it would be in the interest of the Government, in the interest of economy, in the interest of a thorough presentation of this subject to Congress at its next session, that we should avail ourselves of the knowledge and experience of those civil engineers. While it may be proper that the engineers of the Army should be in the majority on this commission, I think we should have at least two out of the five appointed from civil life.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the amendment so as to provide that the commission shall consist of three Army and two civil engineers.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I think the attention of the House should be called to this measure, for while it is but a small appropriation of money now, it is certain to inaugurate a new policy in respect to the levees of the Mississippi River. So far as the General Government is concerned it evidently looks toward an appropriation of money, and perhaps in the end a large appropriation of money, of many millions of dollars, out of the Treasury of the United States for the levees of the Mississippi River. So far as I am acquainted with the history of the Government that is an entirely new policy, one which has no kindred in any previous legislation.

The Mississippi River is a great natural highway of commerce, and the power given the General Government over commerce between the States undoubtedly gives to the General Government the right to control the Mississippi River, so far as it is necessary, to the end that it may be a good highway for that commerce. But this bill does not contemplate any improvement of the river for the benefit of commerce; it only contemplates a Government superintendence and expenditure for these levees for the benefit of the agricultural portion of the Lower Mississippi Valley. The language of the bill is that "it shall be the duty of said commission to make a full report to the President of the best system for the permanent reclamation and redemption of said alluvial basin from inundation," looking thus wholly toward an improvement of the alluvial basin of the river by restraining the flood that periodically overflows the banks. I am wholly unable to see under what provision of the Constitution any power is given to Congress to appropriate money for such a purpose as this; and I confess that I have been somewhat amazed during this session to see how little consideration seems to be given to propositions calling for large amounts of money for these new, untried, and strange methods of expenditures.

Now, sir, the remarks which I make are not rested at all upon any doubt as to whether the alluvial basin of the Mississippi River may not be improved by a better system of levees than the present. I have no doubt it may be. But our Government has been in operation between eighty and ninety years, and the Mississippi River has been pouring its flood to the Gulf during all that time; it has annually been overflowing its banks and enriching all this basin, as the flood of the Nile enriches the alluvial basin of that river; and it has made that basin the richest probably as an agricultural region of any part of the United States. Yet I am not aware that up to this time the proposition has been seriously considered here of the power or the right or the duty of the Government to take charge of this work at the expense of the tax-payers of the whole United States.

I had supposed that there was some limit to the purposes for which money could be appropriated rightfully out of the Treasury of the United States. I am aware that some statesmen have urged that the provision of the Constitution known as the "general-welfare" clause is broad enough to authorize Congress to appropriate any money which in the judgment of Congress had better be appropriated. I know further, Mr. Speaker, that there is now growing a political doctrine which is finding many converts in the democratic party as well as in the republican party, which not only advocates "nationalizing," as the expression is, the United States, but centralizing power in the General Government of the United States, and favors appropriating money out of the Treasury of the United States for all sorts of purposes; in other words, doing everything for everybody at the expense of the tax-payers of the United States.

Only yesterday I had the honor to call the yeas and nays on a proposition looking to water communication by canals, and an expenditure of money that very likely might reach $500,000,000, if all the projects that are even pending before this Congress could be fairly measured in money; and when that call was made, I found, very much to my surprise, the great body of the democratic party in this House voting for the proposition, while the larger portion of the nays came from the republican side, who it seems to me are now more especially and emphatically believers in the old notion that the States of this Government have some obligations resting upon them, and that the General Government is a Government of limited powers.

But, sir, we find this spirit cropping out not only in such a measure as this, but also in the matter of the currency, the idea being that the General Government must furnish money for all the people of the United States; that it must not only print it, but, by agencies like those this bill contemplates, must look forward to its general distribution among all the citizens of the Union. It must build levees on the Mississippi River; and the tax-payers of New England must contribute toward paying the charges for those levees. It must build canals along the Gulf to connect the Mississippi with the Atlantic, in order, as is said here, to furnish cheap transportation; and sections of the country that receive no benefit whatever from such appropriations of money are to pay their share of the expenditure. We have projects here for building railroads which must be local in the benefits they confer; yet it is said they ought to be a public charge in the interest of cheap transportation. Thus we have day after day a multiplication of these projects which must ultimately be a heavy charge to the public Treasury, but which can only in any event benefit individuals or localities.

As I have already said, I am totally unable to see any constitutional warrant for appropriating money for any such purpose as this. And behind that, if there were power in Congress, under the Constitution, to make such an appropriation, I confess it seems to me unequal and unjust that a section of country which, while not public property at all, is to be reclaimed by means of this expenditure, should receive such benefit at the public cost, paying only its own small contribution toward the outlay.

Mr. KASSON rose.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I ask the gentleman to allow me to go on at present without interruption.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we started out at this session with a determination on all hands that we would cut down expenditures, not merely the expenditures for $900 clerks in the Departments, not merely the expenditures in the various Bureaus, not merely by putting a stop to the practices by which money is fraudulently and corruptly taken out of the Treasury of the United States, but that we would lessen the whole expenditures of the Government which the people are called upon to bear in the way of taxation. Yet while we started this session with such a determination, it seems to me we have gone on discovering new methods of expenditures which look hereafter to larger appropriations and to greater drains upon the public purse than any the country has been called upon to bear in its former history. We have projects pressed here day after day upon the attention of Congress which are calling for money to be appropriated by hundreds of millions; and I am not surprised, Mr. Speaker, when we find this general desire to pay everybody's expenses out of the Treasury of the United States, there should accompany it a determination that it is idle to talk about getting back to specie payments; for when that good time comes when every one is to have what he wants and the United States are to foot the bills, we cannot get the money into the Treasury to pay our expenses by any system of taxation, and they must therefore be paid, if at all, by forced loans which are imposed upon the people by the issue of an irredeemable paper currency.

I will yield now to the gentleman from Iowa to make his statement as to where he gets his constitutional power for this legislation.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to say to the gentleman, who has wandered from the particular question to his usual speech, and it is a very good one, on economy, and who has now got down to the question of currency, that I propose to call back his attention to one point which is certainly a proper one for his consideration, and that is, in what way this proposition can be connected with the power given under the Constitution. If he had traveled the length of the Mississippi River or would investigate for himself the relations of this western coun tr——

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I have done so.

Mr. KASSON. But the gentleman must have slept most of the way. I wish to say that we have been appropriating money within the last three days in consequence of the inundation of the Mississippi River by breaks in the levees which it is now proposed to inquire about. That is only by the way, however; for the real question is that a system of levees, to be perfect, must be made in several different States, and must be made either by the several States in co-operation, or by the General Government, or by the States separately.

I do not propose to commit myself or to commit others in supporting this bill to the doctrine that the United States is to carry out this work, No State, according to the Constitution, and I will read the exact words: "No State shall, without the consent of Congress, enter into any agreement or contract with any other State." Now, to make a complete system of levees you have either to have it done by the United States, or by an agreement between the different States which are affected, or by each State building its own levees. This is simply to inquire and report upon the best method of making such a complete system of levees. Upon such report being made the States can base their agreements with each other and obtain the sanction of Congress. For that reason, if for no other, I should urge upon the House the adoption of the provisions of this bill, that the States may have a basis upon which to come to Congress and ask for its sanction for the agreement entered into between them.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I only yielded for what I supposed to be a question, and it has grown into a speech; I have not said all that I have to say on this question. I will give way to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I have an amendment pending providing for a commission of three Army officers and two civil engineers.

The SPEAKER. The bill goes over until the morning hour tomorrow.

COURTS OF UTAH.

Mr. POLAND, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3089) in relation to courts and judical officers in the Territory of Utah; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

DUPLICATE LAND SCRIP.

Mr. TOWNSEND, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3090) to authorize the issue of duplicate agricultural land scrip where the original has been lost or destroyed; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that the provisions of the act of Congress of the 23d of June, 1860, relating to reissue of land warrants in certain cases, shall be extended so as to include the reissue of agricultural land scrip lost, canceled, or destroyed without the fault of the owner thereof, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. ARCHER. The bill (H. R. No. 2885) to remove the disabilities of David Telfair, of North Carolina, and Charles H. McBlair, of Maryland, comes back from the Senate with an amendment striking out the name of Mr. Telfair. As it stands now it simply relieves Mr. McBlair. I ask that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

The title of the bill was also amended by the Senate so as to read, "An act to remove the disabilities of Charles H. McBlair, of Maryland."

The amendment was concurred in.

IMPROVEMENT OF MOUTH OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. McCRARY. The Chair will remember that by order of the House the bill (H. R. No. 2342) in relation to the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River was made a special order for this day at this hour, half-past one o'clock. Since that bill was reported the House has made an order allowing the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. SHELDON] to offer a substitute for it. Only this morning the Secretary of War has sent a communication to the House in relation to this subject, accompanied by a report of the Chief of Engineers. It is the desire of the Committee on Railways and Canals to have the general subject, including both the propositions, further considered by the committee, and I therefore ask the House that the bill and the substitute be recommitted to the Committee on Railways and Canals, with leave to report at any time, but not so as to exclude reports of the Committee on Appropriations. Our desire is simply that it shall retain the status it now has before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that he will most readily accomplish his object by entering a motion to reconsider the motion to recommit.

Mr. McCRARY. I wish to move that the committee have leave to report back the bill at any time.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman enters a motion to reconsider, the bill can be brought up at any time.

Mr. McCRARY. Then I enter that motion.

The bill and substitute were accordingly recommitted to the Committee on Railways and Canals with the motion to reconsider pending.

RELIEF OF SUFFERING IN THE SOUTH.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. The bill that was passed by the House a few days since (H. R. No. 3029) to provide for the relief of the persons suffering from the overflow of the Lower Mississippi River comes back from the Senate with an amendment. The amendment of the Senate simply limits the operation of the act to the 1st of September, 1874. I ask that by unanimous consent the bill may now be taken from the Speaker's table and the amendment of the Senate concurred in.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table; and the amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following: "This act shall expire on the 1st day of September, 1874."

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. GOOCH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the present organization, course of study, and discipline at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, and to report what changes, if any, are necessary to promote greater efficiency in the management of the same; and for this purpose the committee is hereby authorized and instructed to visit the Naval Academy, and confer with the Superintendent and present corps of instructors.

Mr. GOOCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 2675) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth J. King; and

An act (H. R. No. 2667) to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to gather authentic information as to the condition and importance of the fur trade in the Territory of Alaska.

RAILROADS IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 378) for the regulation and incorporation of railroad companies in the Territories of the United States, that it may be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands and printed.

Mr. McCRARY. I ask the gentleman to allow it to be referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Mr. STEELE. The subject is now before the Committee on the Public Lands, and I presume that they will claim the right to consider it, as the bill grants the right of way over the public lands of the United States.

Mr. DUNNELL. All bills of this kind go to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. McCRARY. The mere granting of the right of way through the public lands is the smallest part of the bill. It is a general incorporation act for railroad companies in all the Territories.

Mr. DUNNELL. This matter has already been before the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. GARFIELD. I cannot yield further if the bill is to give rise to debate.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill remains on the Speaker's table.

PRESERVATION OF TIMBER.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on the Public Lands, for present consideration, the bill (H. R. No. 2540) for the appointment of a commission for inquiry into the destruction of forests and into the measures necessary for the preservation of timber.

Mr. KILLINGER. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, to resume the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; and pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending paragraph shall be closed in ten minutes.

The motion to close debate in ten minutes was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was also agreed to.

BAR OF THE SABINE PASS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to deepening the bar of the Sabine Pass, in the State of Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM FOR SERVICES TO THE GOVERNMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the claim of the persons named in House bill No. 1566, for compensation on account of services alleged to have been rendered to the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN PATRICK H. BRESLIN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the dismissal of Captain Patrick H. Breslin, Eighteenth Infantry, and now first lieutenant Fourth Infantry; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MRS. MARY E. TWIFORD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War in relation to the claim of Mrs. Mary E. Twiford, of Ocean View, near Norfolk, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DEFECTIVE ACTS OF CONGRESS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to defects in the acts of June 14, 1866, and July 8, 1870, and to secure the punishment of any one who shall aid and abet, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EDUCATION AT WEST POINT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to a communication from the President of the Argentine Republic, expressing a desire to have educated at the Military Academy at West Point, at its expense, four or six young men graduates of the military school established by the Argentine Republic; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF F. LEE AND C. T. DUNBAR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the memorial of Franklin Lee and Charles T. Dunbar, for payment of $24,009.50 for blasting and removing rocks from Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PROTECTION OF TEXAS FRONTIER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to House bill No. 1590, to provide for the better protection of the frontier settlements in Texas against Indian and Mexican depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIM.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the act of July 22, 1854, the report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the land grant to Doña Aña colony, being private land claim No. 85, for the tract known as "Doña Aña Bend," in New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

ARMY ANNUITY SOCIETY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the formation of an Army mutual survivorship annuity society; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HIRAM PRATHER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to Senate bill No. 1591, for the relief of Hiram Prather, late lieutenant-colonel Sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CLAIMS FOR INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House communications from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the act of May 29, 1872, claims of the following parties for Indian depredations:

Isaiah Buchanan, Richard F. Piatt, Harry T. Sadones, and James Bryden, Evans, Nichols & Co., Duncan Blair, Thomas S. Brooks & Co., and James Baker.

The communications were severally referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

JOB SPENCER AND JAMES R. MEAD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior in relation to the bill (H. R. No. 1331) for the relief of Job Spencer and James R. Mead, for supplies furnished the Kansas tribe of Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

THE DELAWARE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to an appropriation to pay the Delaware tribe of Indians the value of twenty-three sections of land given them by the treaty of July 4, 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

On motion of Mr. BELL, by unanimous consent, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. STEPHENS.

Leave of absence was granted to Mr. LOFLAND for ten days.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CHIPMAN, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Mary S. Holmead, no adverse report having been made thereon.

On motion of Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Glover & Mather, for the purpose of reference in the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House then resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WOODFORD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The pending paragraph was that making appropriations for the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on the pending paragraph is limited to ten minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out in line 476 the word "forty," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty;" and by striking out in line 477 the word "forty," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty;" so that it will read:

Thirty-three clerks of class three; thirty-two clerks of class two.

That provides for a reduction in these two classes of clerks of twenty. The force employed in this office in 1866, as is shown by the statement inserted in the RECORD of this morning at the instance of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] was one hundred and ninety-three, including the Commissioner. Now, sir, the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1873, showed an increase of one hundred; they had a force of two hundred and ninety-three, or an increase between the two years of 33 per cent.

Now admitting the force of all that was stated here yesterday—from part of which I dissent—by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] and all the commendations upon this officer by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] I say that eighty clerks ought to be a sufficient increase over the number of clerks employed in 1866, and ought to answer all purposes.

And now my amendment proposes simply to reduce the number twenty—from one hundred to eighty. And I am advised that this number of clerks can be readily dispensed with at a saving of $30,000 a year to the Government.

The question was taken upon the amendment moved by Mr. RANDALL; and upon a division there were—ayes 29, noes 81; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 28, noes 121.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee of the Whole on yesterday restored a deputy commissioner. There should have been two deputy commissioners provided for in the bill, and but one was in the printed copy, and I asked the Committee of the Whole to add another. I find upon reference to the law that there were two classes of deputy commissioners, one receiving $3,500 a year and the other $3,000. On yesterday the Committee of the Whole added one at $3,500. I ask consent to modify the paragraph so as to provide for one deputy commissioner at $3,500 and one at $3,000 a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Are those the salaries as they stood in 1872?

Mr. GARFIELD. Precisely the same. We made a mistake on yesterday in putting both deputies at $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to strike out $3,500 and insert $2,500 as the salary of the deputy commissioner. I understand that the salary is not now fixed by law, simply by the appropriation bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is mistaken; it is here in the law.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to make a single remark.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this paragraph has been exhausted.

Mr. DUNNELL. Then I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For dies, paper, and stamps, $400,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to have a little explanation about this. I find by reference to the law that we appropriated this amount last year for this purpose. I find in the Fifth Auditor's report that the amount expended was $640,000 and more. I should like to have that discrepancy explained.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman desires an explanation——

Mr. RANDALL. I do, undoubtedly. The expenditure of last year was $200,000 and more in excess of the appropriations.

Mr. GARFIELD. The increase was caused by the change of the law providing that internal-revenue taxes should be nearly all paid by stamps. That required a large appropriation to supply the necessary amount of stamps. The old dies were very much worn, and new dies had to be made for nearly all the stamps.

Mr. RANDALL. Where did the money come from which was spent in excess of the appropriation?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know that I heard the gentleman's statement entirely, there is so much noise about me.

Mr. RANDALL. I stated that there was $400,000 appropriated last year, and according to the Fifth Auditor's report there were $640,000 expended.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suppose it came over from the year before.

Mr. RANDALL. I think this subject deserves a candid explanation.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly. The Commissioner was before the Committee on Appropriations and explained that he had a large amount of stamps on hand, and that he found it unsafe not to have a supply of stamps for four or five months ahead. Therefore he inaugurated that plan so as not to be at a loss for a sufficient amount of stamps. It does not follow that because an amount appears in one year's statement that the expenditure was made in that year.

Mr. RANDALL. This Fifth Auditor's report says that the amount paid in that year was so much.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly; but not necessarily for work done in that year.

Mr. RANDALL. It seems to me that such an enormous discrepancy as that might be more satisfactorily explained.

Mr. GARFIELD. There may have been a deficiency. I do not recollect about that now.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For salaries and expenses of collectors, $1,990,542.

Mr. RANDALL. According to the Auditor's report the amount appropriated last year was $1,990,542; the amount expended was only $1,585,476.28. Now here is a proposed increase over the expenditures of last year of $405,065.72. I would like to know why this enormous increase is proposed.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will remember that last year we made the appropriation in a lump, not in separate items. We appropriated $4,600,000 for salaries of assessors, collectors, &c. This year we have tried to itemize a little, and have divided the amount into two sums—the one $1,590,542, and the other $2,600,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I will show you in a moment that both are in excess of last year.

Mr. GARFIELD. We propose to appropriate about $10,000 less this year than we appropriated last year.

Mr. RANDALL. The increase in the next paragraph is $900,000; the two together make $1,300,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. But the two together are $10,000 less than the whole sum appropriated for both purposes last year.

Mr. RANDALL. Not according to the Fifth Auditor's report.

Mr. GARFIELD. I go by the appropriation law.

Mr. RANDALL. So do I; and I come into direct collision with the gentleman.

Mr. GARFIELD. I cannot help what the Fifth Auditor says. I hold in my hand the appropriation law of last year, and I read from the tenth page:

For salaries and expenses of collectors, officers and agents, surveyors of distilleries, gangers, and store-keepers, together with the expense of carrying into effect the various provisions of the several acts providing internal revenue, excepting items otherwise estimated for, $4,600,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say to the gentleman that it is impossible for the Fifth Auditor to be mistaken. Here is the column which embraces every expenditure—"compensation," "stationery," blank-books," "express and dep. money," "advertising"—giving the total expense first in each State and Territory, and then the aggregate of all the States and Territories; and the total is $1,585,476.28. Then I find this paragraph in the bill appropriating $1,990,500—an excess of $405,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. How much do the two items make in the Fifth Auditor's report?

Mr. RANDALL. Those two paragraphs make $1,300,000 of excess asked for in this bill over what was expended last year.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now the gentleman knows very well that at the time the Fifth Auditor makes his report, it is not to be presumed that he has received all the accounts from all parts of the country. The last quarter's accounts could not have come in at that time. I am comparing appropriation bill with appropriation bill. The question is, how much are we giving this year in comparison with what we gave last year? I say we are giving $10,000 less in the two items. I do not care whether the Fifth Auditor had received one-half or three-fourths of his accounts. The only question is the relative appropriation. Of course no Fifth Auditor can be supposed to have received all his accounts from all the districts of the country, in complete order, by the month of October.

Mr. RANDALL. But, as a general proposition, the expenditure of one year overlaps as much as that of another.

Mr. GARFIELD. That rule does not work. The Auditor made his report for the year as far as it had gone.

Mr. RANDALL. But we are making appropriations for the year; and I have shown that for the last year the expense was only one million and a half of dollars, while we now propose to appropriate for the same purpose $1,900,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. In the report to which the gentleman refers, has he taken anything except the cost of collecting?

Mr. RANDALL. I have not, of course, because the next paragraph embraces everything else.

Mr. GARFIELD. But does not the gentleman remember that the cost of assessing is also to be considered?

Mr. RANDALL. That only argues against the gentleman's own case; for the assessors have been abolished, and therefore the reduction should be greater.

Mr. GARFIELD. But the cost of assessing is kept in a separate account.

Mr. RANDALL. Everything embraced in this item of the bill I embrace in my statement. I cannot be mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] offer an amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir. I move to strike out $1,990,542 and insert $1,600,000.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Without entering into this controversy I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether it is understood that the consolidation of districts which has been provided for by law is going on or whether it is suspended?

Mr. GARFIELD. We understand it has been made so far as is proposed at the present time. It will be remembered that we reduced the cost of this branch of the service by one million and a half of dollars last year in consequence of the arrangement for consolidating the districts.

Mr. RANDALL. And yet you want more money?

Mr. GARFIELD. We do not want more money; we ask for less.

Mr. RANDALL. I say you are asking for more than has been expended the last year for this item.

Mr. GARFIELD. I find it is no use to talk to the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman cannot answer my point.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is it any of my business or the business of this House if all the accounts had not been brought in to the Auditor?

Mr. RANDALL. It is your business, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, when I show a discrepancy of this sort to explain it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have not only explained it, but more than explained it. I say to the gentleman that this Committee of the Whole is to consider the appropriations asked for this year as compared with the appropriations of last year; and when the gentleman brings up the report of an Auditor who made his report long before all the accounts had come in, and not including the cost of assessing, is this committee to be told that the appropriations proposed in the bill are excessive because they exceed the unfinished and incomplete accounts of that officer?

Mr. RANDALL. I gave the figures for the year ending June 30, 1873, which are the only official figures I can reach. The gentleman knows that the present fiscal year has not yet expired. We therefore cannot get at the figures with accuracy as to the current year, or to the same extent we get them for the last fiscal year. I show, then, by the figures for the last fiscal year, before the abolishment of the assessors, which of right ought to have reduced the amount, that during that period there absolutely was expended $400,000 less than you now ask for. Therefore it is I propose to reduce this amount some four hundred thousand dollars, so as to reach the same point for the next fiscal year.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say a word or two, if I may be allowed to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I wish only to put two or three questions for the purpose of getting some information on this subject. In the first place I believe it was understood there was to be a consolidation of these collection districts. I am told some half a dozen or more have been consolidated. Perhaps the number is very much greater, and if the gentleman has any information on that point I should like to have it. I should like to know further whether there is to be any reduction by law in respect to the payment of expenses for collection of the revenue. This seems to be a great deal in the way of allowances for the expenses of collection to be left discretionary with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Now does the gentleman understand, or is it the purpose of the Ways and Means Committee, that there is to be any additional legislation affecting this matter which would be likely to reduce these salaries and expenses?

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will remember that in the bill which was passed last year it was provided that the total compensation of the collectors of internal revenue should thereafter in no case exceed $4,500 per annum. That law is in operation now, and has been the means of reducing this expense to a large amount. I understand there are twenty-five less collection districts since the consolidation took place.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Is it left discretionary with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to whether this amount shall be expended in the way of expenses for the collection of the revenue?

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman, I believe there can be a reduction in this item, but how much I do not know. The cost of collection last year was, as stated by the Commissioner in the table which I had inserted in the RECORD this morning, $1,998,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. For the current year?

Mr. BECK. I mean for the current year.

Mr. RANDALL. A part, then, is only an estimate.

Mr. BECK. Of course it is an approximation, but it is as near as we can come to it. It will be $1,989,000. I have no doubt, although

I do not know the fact; the Auditor's report according to its own language as I understand it—I may be mistaken, not having examined it carefully—shows payments made for assessments only, not for collections, giving payment by that office for the year ending June 30, 1873. The tabular statements read must have applied to warrants drawn on that office up to the day the statement was made.

But the trouble is this: in every collection district in this country there is a very large force of clerks, deputy and assistant collectors, and other machinery which is very expensive. A good many of these subordinates the Commissioner thought could be dispensed with and he so stated, as he told the sub-committee of the Committee on Ways and Means, to many members of Congress and submitted their respective districts to their supervision, asking them if it could not be done. He applied to his supervisors to know how far they could further reduce expenses. In that regard I believe, with one or two exceptions, every gentleman insisted in his own particular district that the officials were reduced down as low as they could be. It appeared to us in the examination we made that in very many districts there were supernumerary clerks kept in office in spite of the Commissioner by members of Congress insisting they should be kept; and while every one was willing to cut his neighbor's district down, no man was willing to cut down the expenses of his own. There is the trouble in the matter. If you can, by cutting down the appropriation, force or make these collectors cut down the number of their supernumeraries in the districts generally, we will be able to cut down the total of expenses. I believe from the examination we made that can be done, and if gentlemen in this House would not be so urgent in their demands on the Commissioner to keep men in position in their respective districts who are their political friends, it could be cut down largely and the business conducted just as well as it is now. Until you do cut it down, or force it to be done by withholding appropriations, it will be impossible for the Commissioner to reduce the expenses of collection much, if any, below the sum proposed.

Mr. BURCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to say to the committee what should be the exact amount appropriated under this head. As the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said, a year ago we appropriated the same amount as proposed in this bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] insists that is too much, because, on examination of the Fifth Auditor's report, he finds there was not paid for the fiscal year 1872–'73, ending June 30, 1873, as much as is proposed in this item for the internal revenue. Now, it will be remembered by the committee that during a portion of that fiscal year we were acting under the old law, and that during the latter part, from the spring of 1873 until June, we were acting under the present law. The law to which I refer legislated out of office all the assessors and assistant assessors and transferred a portion of their duties to the collector and his deputies.

Prior to the passage of that law the collector had a salary of $1,500 and a certain percentage. Since the passage of that law he is paid the same salary of $1,500 and a portion of the percentage allowed to the assessors, with the limitation that in no case shall his salary exceed $4,000. Now this imposes on the collector and his deputies additional duties that were heretofore performed by assistant assessors, and consequently a larger amount is required to be paid to those officers and their deputies than there was paid prior to the passage of that law. But notwithstanding that, we have saved the amount mentioned by the gentleman from Kentucky, nearly $2,000,000.

Formerly the revenue collectors in some counties would collect for a merely nominal sum of two or three hundred dollars. That would be a sufficient compensation for the performance of the duty. Now those same officers, who have to perform also the duties of assessor, looking after the collection of special taxes, &c., have necessarily to be paid a larger sum, and for that reason the amount would be larger—if it is all included here, which I do not know it is—than it would be prior to the passage of that law. But, so far as the appropriation is concerned, there is not necessarily involved the expenditure of the whole amount if it is not needed. I believe the Committee on Appropriations have examined the question—I have not—in detail.

Mr. RANDALL. I have; they have not.

Mr. BURCHARD. I am referred by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the Book of Estimates for the details which are contained there. I know this, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue sent out to every district to the officers and required them to report to him whether there could not be reductions made when this law went into effect. He asked them to make the lowest estimates of the force that could be employed. They went over the offices of supervisors, &c., and those officers reported such reductions as could be made, and they were largely made.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to modify my amendment so as to make the amount $1,700,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "$1,990,542" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,700,000."

Mr. RANDALL. That gives a margin of $100,000 over the year ending June 30, 1873.

The question being taken on Mr. RANDALL's amendment, there were—ayes 27, noes 47; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. RANDALL.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 100.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries, expenses, and fees of supervisors, store-keepers, agents, surveyors, gaugers, and miscellaneous expenses, $2,600,000; and hereafter no gauger shall receive a greater compensation than $5 per day.

Mr. BANNING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out these words: "And hereafter no gauger shall receive a greater compensation than $5 per day."

Mr. BANNING. I know, Mr. Chairman, the member who at this time places himself between the officer and a reduction of the officer's salary places himself in an unenviable position, because there is a loud demand from the people for a reduction of expenses. We have reduced our own salaries, and there are many others which should be reduced. They are not, however, the salaries of the poorly paid clerks, many of whom, I am told, are compelled to discount their pay-rolls at ruinous rates before they are due to raise money for the support of their families; nor are they the salaries of the subordinate revenue officers.

The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, in his able speech a few days since, gave us a list of Government officers upon whose expenditures and salaries we might practice the art of reduction to the amount of many thousands of dollars and leave them well paid; among these he gives us a list of the pension agencies, as follows:

Statement showing yearly increase in the expense of the Pension Bureau at the principal pension agencies.

Agency.	1869–'70.	1870–'71.	1871–'72.	1872–'73.
Indianapolis	$4,000 00	$13,094 80	$15,204 60	$16,978 25
Boston	3,277 78	17,176 60	18,411 40	18,124 80
Detroit	4,000 00	12,331 60	13,550 20	13,824 70
Albany	4,000 00	14,907 50	17,710 60	18,129 45
Canandaigua	4,000 00	15,471 70	17,059 90	17,325 10
Columbus	4,000 00	10,366 00	11,586 90	11,935 00
Cincinnati	4,000 00	13,231 70	14,646 90	14,844 40
Philadelphia	8,000 00	28,436 50	30,791 60	31,915 70
Pittsburgh	4,000 00	10,224 00	11,374 10	11,765 40
Trenton	4,000 00	8,567 80	10,378 10	9,492 90
Cleveland	4,000 00	9,618 70	10,571 20	10,816 60
New York	8,000 00	15,899 60	14,482 61	12,684 27
Chicago	4,000 00	10,296 71	11,123 49	11,194 30
Hartford	4,000 00	7,780 38	8,235 70	8,362 70
Washington, District Columbia	4,000 00	6,834 10	7,900 50	9,576 30
Madison	3,750 00	6,984 40	7,784 13	7,825 00
Fort Wayne	4,000 00	7,273 60	7,847 60	7,866 80
Springfield, Illinois	4,000 00	8,028 40	8,875 30	9,107 23
Salem	4,000 00	9,725 30	10,604 20	9,186 80
Louisville	4,000 00	7,121 30	8,134 60	8,554 70
Portland, Maine	4,000 00	7,912 60	8,444 80	8,662 60

Showing that the expense of twenty-one pension agencies in 1872 was $269,073, an average of nearly $13,000 each.

This is a good field for reduction and retrenchment, and there are many others of the same kind. The revenue gauger is not, however, an overpaid officer. Taking into consideration the importance of his office and the labor he performs, his pay is, perhaps, smaller than any other Government officer. The gauger holds one of the most important positions in the gift of the Government. The accurate collection of revenues from distilled spirits amounting to more than forty millions annually is entirely dependent upon faithful and competent revenue officers. Under the old law the compensation of gaugers was ten dollars a day, or not to exceed $250 in any one month. Now his compensation is regulated by the Commissioner, who, under the law of 1872, has made various rates. First, he reduced the pay to nine dollars a day, then to six, and finally to seven dollars, where it now stands; seven dollars being the highest amount of fees the gauger can receive for a day's work. Unlike a clerk who gets a regular salary, the revenue gauger only gets fees for gauging spirits. If the gauger is sick his salary stops; if he is absent from work he gets no pay; if the distillery stops for repairs or for any purpose, his salary stops. He is required to give bond for the faithful performance of his duty; and for any incompetency or carelessness he is held responsible to the owner of packages seized.

In my own district, at Cincinnati, Ohio, which pays more revenue than any district in the country, having paid over seven millions last year, during the last nine months the amount of salary received by the revenue gaugers was $32,825.57. The number of gaugers employed was twenty-two. The average amount received by each gauger was $1,492.20 for nine months, which is at a rate of $1,539.60 a year. In the State of Ohio there are one hundred and eleven gaugers, who received from August 1, 1872, to July 1, 1873, $132,302.57, being an average of $1,191.91 for each officer, or $108.35 per month, which is $4.16 a day.

In the State of Kentucky there were ninety gaugers employed last year, who were paid $102,860.94, being $1,194 each, equivalent to $103.90 per month, or $3.90 per day.

The following table shows the average pay of gaugers in the States named:

State.	Number gaugers.	Amount paid.	Paid each.	Each, per month.	Each, per day.
Indiana	53	$52,608 51	$992 61	$90 23	$3 47
Illinois	93	96,094 04	1,033 27	93 93	3 61
New York	112	113,189 13	1,010 61	91 87	3 53
Pennsylvania	99	91,495 59	924 20	84 01	3 25
Tennessee	42	38,120 25	907 62	82 51	3 17

I ask is this salary too large? Do members of this House believe that honest, capable, qualified men should be asked to perform the duties of this office for less than $1,239.60 a year? It is $500 less than we are now paying the captain of the Capitol police, less than we pay the clerks of the committees of this House, and less than the pay of the policemen of this building.

In my opinion, in fixing salaries we should make them a fair and reasonable compensation, sufficient to support the officer, not in extravagance, but comfortably; he should not be encouraged by a promise of moieties, nor discouraged by a salary too small for him to live upon. The extravagance of the one is as dangerous as the necessities of the other, and we should be prompted not only in the interest of the officer, but in the welfare of the Government to avoid either extreme. Members may say the number of gaugers should be reduced; this would be impracticable in the Cincinnati district, as there are one hundred and fifty establishments in that district which require gaugers' services.

In answer to a letter upon this subject, the collector of the district says:

UNITED STATES INTERNAL REVENUE,
COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, FIRST DISTRICT OHIO,
March 23, 1874.

SIR: In reply to yours of this date, I would state that the number of distilleries in this district is ten, and the number of rectifiers and wholesale liquor dealers one hundred and forty, that require gaugers' services.

Respectfully,

LEWIS WEITZEL,
Collector.

H. G. KENNETT, Esq.,
President Gaugers' Association, Cincinnati, Ohio.

And the following memorial of the revenue gaugers of Cincinnati shows the amount of their salaries to be as I have before stated:

The United States internal-revenue gaugers of the first district of Ohio, having learned that the Committee on Ways and Means in Congress have under consideration the propriety of another reduction of the compensation of internal-revenue gaugers, and believing that the present compensation is not only not extravagant but extremely low for the services rendered and the responsibilities devolving on us by law and the regulations, beg leave to present the following facts:

During the nine months ending January 31, 1874, in the first district of Ohio, there was gauged, inspected, and stamped with warehouse, tax-paid, rectifiers, and wholesale liquor dealers' stamps 20,525,003 proof-gallons of spirits, by a monthly average of twenty-two gaugers, who received $32,828.57, or an average of $6.55 per day. The following are the figures from official sources for the nine months referred to:

Average number of gaugers	22
Total number of days worked	5,012
Number of proof-gallons gauged and stamped	20,525,003
Proof-gallons of distilled spirits entered and withdrawn	12,077,784
Amount of tax paid	$4,228,224 10
Proof-gallons rectified	7,852,915
Gauged for wholesale liquor-dealers	594,304
Total number of packages gauged and stamped	437,834
Total number of gallons gauged and stamped	20,525,003
Estimated value of same	$16,825,867 00
Amount of compensation as per proof-gallons, per bill	$35,516 10
Amount of pay received by limit of per diem	$32,828 57

In series 6, No. 11, (revised,) page 10, will be found the following: "Any discrepancy in the gauge or proof of spirits shipped from the place of original gauge which cannot be satisfactorily accounted for, is taken as evidence of fraud, and the packages are seized; and when this is occasioned by the incompetency or carelessness of the gauger he will be held responsible to the owner of the property he has thus put in jeopardy."

There are no other officers in the service of the Government who are thus held responsible for oversights or omissions to such an extent, who receive so small a compensation for the time actually employed. No compensation is received for sickness or lost time from any cause whatever. The accurate collection of the revenue from distilled spirits is entirely dependent on faithful and competent gaugers, and if the compensation by law be so reduced as to place them on the same rate of pay as mere laborers, (where no responsibility is attached,) the best men will seek employment where their positions are more permanent, with the hope of accumulating something for the future, and honest, faithful industry encouraged and rewarded.

Adopted, Cincinnati, March 11, 1874.

H. G. KENNETT, President.

W. H. THURSTON, Secretary.

I trust, sir, the House will take these facts all into consideration and let the law fixing the salary of the gaugers alone. The change sought to be made by this bill is, to my mind, a most unjust and unfair one. While I am for reduction and retrenchment and for every reasonable economy, I am opposed to that application of the rule which saves for the Government by reducing the salaries of faithful officers who are now only receiving decent and reasonable compensation.

In fixing the amount of officers' salaries we should not be governed by what is the smallest amount we can get the work performed for so much as by what is a fair and reasonable compensation for performing the work. If offices are to be farmed out to the lowest bidder, then there are many wealthy men who would perform the duties of some of the offices of the Government for the honor that attaches, and many rascals who would take them without compensation for the opportunities they afford to speculate and steal.

In fixing the amount of officers' salaries we should be less extravagant to superior officers and more just to the smaller or inferior ones, never forgetting the important fact that the men who fill the subordinate or smaller offices are men without means, who depend upon their salaries for their own support and the support of their families.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me say in conclusion the Commissioner of Internal Revenue above all other persons has opportunities of knowing and determining what is a fair, reasonable, and just compensation for the revenue gaugers.

Yesterday the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] and others took occasion to express their confidence in the good management, capacity, and integrity of the commissioners. In that good opinion I must heartily join.

Ask these gentlemen if they do not think it would be entirely safe to leave the matter of fixing the amount of the gaugers' fees in the hands of the Commissioner, where it now is, being left to his discretion by the law of 1872?

What will be the practical result if the bill as reported becomes a law? In my opinion it will increase the number of gaugers or officers of the Government, and in place of being a saving of $125,000 annually will increase the expenses of the Revenue Department. The statement that it will be a saving of $125,000 sounds well. Will it, however, be a saving of that amount, or of any amount whatever? The average pay of the gauger is now less than four dollars a day, while the only gaugers whose average daily fees for the month are seven dollars a day are the gaugers at large distilleries and rectifying establishments.

These gaugers work very hard and employ an assistant whom they pay out of their own salary. This assistant does the manual labor; he carries the gauging-rod, numbers and marks the packages, each one of which requires more than fifty figures cut upon it.

Pass this bill and the gauger will not work over-hours in making out his reports, of which he is required to make five copies each day, nor will he be at the expense of employing an assistant. Having gauged a sufficient number of packages to make his monthly average equal to the fees allowed, he will put in the balance of his time making out his reports, and performing the manual labor now performed by his assistant. This will create the necessity of more gaugers at large establishments, and result in a loss of money in place of a saving to the Government. I do not believe the father of this economy will be proud of his child, if he succeeds in having it safely delivered, when he reads the report of the Commissioner for the next fiscal year.

Mr. STANDIFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment, not because I am opposed to retrenchment in the expenses of the Government, but because I do not consider this the proper place to apply the pruning-knife of economy.

The office of gauger is one of the most important in the internal-revenue service, and requires to be filled by men of no ordinary business capacity, because it is from the result of the gauger's work that we calculate the tax upon distilled spirits. I consider it an office requiring more general knowledge than the office of collector.

The gauger is required to give a bond in the sum of $10,000 for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, and he is held responsible for the correct measurement of all spirits leaving his charge, and compelled to pay for any errors or mistakes which he may make in his calculations. His work is very laborious, both manual and clerical, and most gaugers are compelled to hire assistance, for which they must pay out of their own pockets.

Then, again, he must be familiar with all the revenue laws and posted as to all decisions. He must be a man of tact, and ready to meet any emergency that may occur.

He is now permitted to earn seven dollars a day and not to exceed that sum; this, if he made full wages for twenty-six working days, would amount to $182 a month. But he seldom makes full time, and hardly ever more than three-fourths. In addition, he has to purchase his own stationery, furnish office-rooms, fire, and gas at his own expense, and pay for whatever assistance he is required to have. All these expenses materially reduce the salary which he receives from the Government.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot afford to reduce the pay of the gaugers. This Congress is expected to do great things in the way of retrenchment of expenses and reform in all branches of the Government. We are expected to return to the economic principles of the fathers, but I am very much mistaken if members can deceive their constituents when they go home and tell them how they have reduced the pay of a few door-keepers, watchmen, and the laboring men of the public buildings, and cut off the fees of some gaugers, and so reduced the expenses of the Government.

General Sherman, in his testimony before the Military Committee, said that if you are going to reform it is better to commence at the head than at the foot, and I cordially agree with him.

If we wish to reform the internal-revenue service let us begin at the head and institute a rigid system of investigation into its affairs with the object of getting the money paid by the people as taxes into the Treasury of the United States instead of into the pockets of dishonest officials. And let us dispose of those officers not absolutely required, and then as we go down we can retrench in an intelligent manner. But this cutting and slashing at the lower branches of the civil service will never, in my judgment, be of any benefit to the Treasury or the people.

There are great leaks in the Treasury of the United States, rat-holes through which official vermin enter and consume our substance; but a penurious policy of cutting down well-earned salaries neither closes the one nor shuts out the other.

A system such as I have hinted at, commencing at the higher officers, inspecting and examining into their affairs and conduct, would, if I mistake not, develop such an amount of rottenness and corruption as would make us wonder how our Government has existed under it all.

If it can be demonstrated that the office of gauger is not necessary to protect the interests of the Government I shall cheerfully vote to do away with it, but as long as it is considered necessary to have gaugers I am in favor of paying them salaries upon which they can live, and their salaries are small enough already. I hope this amendment will be carried.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to say a word and to give the reasons why the sub-committee of the Committee on Ways and Means made this recommendation to the Committee on Appropriations. Under the law as it now stands gaugers and store-keepers are paid on a scale of fees, the law limiting the maximum amount of pay to a store-keeper to five dollars a day and the maximum pay of a gauger to nine dollars a day. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in the exercise of his discretion, undertook to fix the pay of gaugers at six dollars a day as the maximum. In this he failed. Why did he fail? Because every one of us members of Congress, and especially the republican members, wrote him at the instigation of our gaugers and said to him that it was too low a rate of pay. I believe I am one of the gentlemen who did write him such a letter. The pressure was so great that he finally raised the rate to seven dollars a day as the maximum, and that is the limit now fixed.

Now how are the gaugers affected by this? As the law now stands two-thirds of the gaugers of the country are not affected by it at all because they do not now earn five dollars a day, nor will they earn five dollars a day after this regulation is fixed.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Does not my colleague know that while gaugers occasionally earn seven dollars per day they more frequently earn but three or four dollars per day, or nothing at all, because they have no work to do?

Mr. NEGLEY. Are gaugers paid their expenses?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, they are paid their expenses.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Gaugers are not paid their expenses. They have to pay all their own expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman is mistaken; they are paid all their expenses in Ohio.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. They are not in my district.

Mr. FOSTER. The Commissioner says they are.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Has not the Commissioner of Internal Revenue power to limit the per diem of gaugers? Has he not tried a similar reduction and found it unsafe and impracticable?

Mr. FOSTER. Whenever he undertakes to cut the pay down my colleague and myself and all the other republican members on this floor go to him and make him raise it.

Mr. NEGLEY. I would like to know what right the gentleman has to accuse members upon this floor of doing what is not right.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not say that they have done anything but what was right; I did the same thing myself; but they do it at the instigation of the gaugers.

Mr. FORT. I hope the gentleman before he gets through will tell us who those members are.

Mr. FOSTER. Did not you do it?

Mr. FORT. No, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well; then you are not hit. I hope gentlemen will allow me to proceed. Five dollars a day is, for this class of service, in my judgment, sufficient. The sub-committee of the Committee on Ways and Means, consisting of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and myself, gave this subject careful attention, and that is our opinion. I know that so far as my own district is concerned, the gaugers there earn in this way twice what they could get in any other service, and I will agree to-day to furnish these gentlemen, who are so solicitous about this matter, with good, honest gaugers who will fill all their places at five dollars a day. It is a very easy matter to cut down the pay of some clerk here, or some of the Capitol police, or some one of that kind, but when we strike our people at home it is a very different thing.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SYPHER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with considerable interest to this discussion on the subject of reducing the salaries of the gaugers. As I happen to have the honor of representing a few distilleries, perhaps it will be proper for me to say a word. We have listened to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANDIFORD,] who represents the great Bourbon whisky district; we have listened also to the gentleman from Ohio, who represents the northern Ohio whisky district, and to the eloquent gentleman from Cincinnati, who says there are something over one hundred establishments of this kind in his district, if I understood him correctly.

Mr. BANNING. One hundred and fifty establishments requiring the services of gaugers.

Mr. SYPHER. One hundred and fifty distilleries over which these gaugers are to exercise their authority. Sir, I think they all need gaugers, and I think that their eulogistic addresses upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on yesterday and to-day are also in place, inasmuch as within the last two weeks the Department has sent detectives to my city and shut up all our distilleries in order to get the market which they could not control in any other way. At midnight they pounce upon the New Orleans distilleries without having any evidence against them whatever, and shut them up in order that they might have that market for their own whisky. I think they all need gaugers. I think perhaps they had better get an amendment adopted against Dio Lewis and the women crusaders who have destroyed their whisky market at the West instead of making raids upon us in New Orleans and stopping our legitimate business.

Mr. FOSTER. Legitimate?

Mr. SYPHER. Yes, sir, legitimate; and as the gentleman calls in question the legitimacy of it I want to say a word to him on that subject. Every year the Internal-Revenue Department has sent agents to New Orleans to examine into the conduct of our distillers, and for the last five years those agents have been compelled to report that there was nothing against our distillers and that there had been no infractions of law. And this year, after this crusade was made in the West and their whisky business was destroyed there, they then set up a job on our distillers, sent their men down to New Orleans, and at midnight, with United States soldiers, pounced upon our establishments and closed every one of them without having one scintilla of evidence against them.

One thing further, as the gentleman has called into question the legitimacy of our transactions. Last year General Buell, one of the most efficient officers of the revenue service, was sent to New Orleans to examine our distilleries. When he came back he reported that there was not a single infraction of law in our city. And to the complaint of the gentleman's constituents in Cincinnati, who said that the New Orleans distilleries were controlling the Cincinnati market, that the gaugers and other officers were not performing their duties, he reported that the gaugers and other officers were performing their duties under the law, and that it was owing to climatic influences and the quality of their grain that they were enabled to make their whisky cheaper than could be done in Cincinnati, and therefore they had a legitimate right to control the market.

Mr. RICE. I am very sorry that this discussion has gone to such a length. I fear it may be damaging to the best interests of these gaugers, who I think should be protected. There has been a great deal of speech-making about a very small matter, and for my part I do not see any advantage to result from all that speech-making.

The Committee on Appropriations, in accordance with what they deem to be the desire of this House, seek to reduce the expenditures as far as may be possible. In looking through this bill, that portion of it relating to the Internal-Revenue Bureau, they found that it was impossible to reduce the expenditures; that they had already got it as low as it should be put, and almost in despair they were about to quit, when they discovered at the bottom these unfortunate gaugers. They said to themselves, These men are paid by fees, there is no fixed salary for them, and there can be nothing said about that; and although if they are lucky they may earn seven dollars a day, yet, living in great big cities and maintaining their families there, we can all judge how far seven dollars will go. But the committee thought they would make it a general matter and strike them all down two dollars, and the gaugers having no friends would have to stand it. They therefore fixed the compensation of the gaugers at five dollars a day, not giving them five dollars a day, but providing that they should not receive more than that. Notwithstanding all that they require capable, industrious men, men whom they can rely upon, and a great many of whom live in expensive places.

I did hope that when this matter was reached there would be a simple motion made to strike out a few lines or a few words; that the Committee of the Whole would approve that motion and let these gaugers go at their present compensation. It does not amount to much, and I ask that we shall not spend this whole day talking about whether gaugers shall have a fair price for their services which under the law now cannot exceed seven dollars a day, or whether, because we cannot reduce anywhere else, we will strike them down to five dollars. I have no doubt that a majority of the House will think that my proposition is right. But we have been somewhat hard set on reduction; we have determined that we will reduce, and as we have not been able to reduce anywhere else, why we must reduce these gaugers. I hope we will strike out this portion of the bill limiting their compensation at not more than five dollars a day.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to call the attention of the committee to a phase of this matter not yet noticed, and I do so in behalf of the Government. After the reduction of taxes which we made to relieve the people our sources of internal revenue became very few. We received last year in all from internal taxes about $106,000,000, $24,500,000 from tobacco and $52,000,000 from distilled spirits. The gentleman from Ohio at my right, [Mr. FOSTER,] rather sneered at whisky-making, as though it were not a legitimate business. It is a legitimate business from which we draw a large portion of our revenue to pay the expenses of the Government.

A year or two ago, in order to place the gaugers and store-keepers as far as possible above temptation, they being then paid by the distillers, we provided that the Government should pay them; and in order to meet that expense we imposed an additional tax of five cents per gallon on distilled spirits. This additional tax brought last year to the Government, after allowing for other reductions, more than $2,500,000, and gave from three-quarters to one million dollars in excess of the whole expense for gaugers and store-keepers. The very direction that men should be paid by the Government showed that we thought their position a very responsible one. Their duties are, in fact, so responsible in their character that they are required to give security for their faithful performance in the sum of $10,000, while the skill and competence called for certainly should place them above the level of ordinary employments. Compensation, to be just, should have regard to the character of the labor which is imposed and the confidence and trust belonging to the position.

Let me refer to some of the services they must perform:

It is the duty of gaugers to inspect, mark, brand, and stamp all packages of spirits produced at distilleries, and make report of the same in triplicate, one copy of which report is forwarded to this office, and shows for whom the spirits were gauged; serial number of package; wine gallons capacity of the package; wantage; correction to volume; indication, temperature; wine proof and taxable gallons; serial number and kind of stamps; and the amount of tax due. It is the duty of the gauger to gauge all spirits before being placed in the bonded warehouse, and attach the warehouse stamp, and when the spirit is withdrawn from warehouse it is his duty to again gauge such spirit and attach the tax-paid stamp, and make a similar report to this office and the collector. Gaugers on duty at rectifying establishments are required to gauge and mark every package drawn from the rectifying tubs, and attach thereto the rectifier's stamp, making report of such gauging to the collector.

Every package filled for shipment or sale on the premises of a wholesale liquor dealer must be gauged and stamped, and if containing more than ten gallons must also be marked and branded as required by section 47, act of July 20, 1868, making report of such gauging to the collector.

We depend upon the integrity as well as ability of these men for the largest portion of our revenue. As stated by my friend from Illinois, [Mr. RICE,] they are not to be paid five dollars a day during the year, as at first glance it might appear by the provision of the bill. Far from it. Two-thirds of the gaugers of the United States, it is admitted by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER,] will not receive that much at any time; while the others, whose fidelity aids to obtain this large revenue for the Government, can receive the highest pay only for the days when they are upon duty, and often much less. There should be, therefore, a higher sum named as the maximum to be paid them. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue fixed seven dollars a day as the limit, which, as will be understood by the committee, is not to apply to every day in the year. If the gaugers were paid five dollars for every day in the year they would not receive any too much; for the service they render is of far greater consequence than that performed by thousands of men to whom we pay fully that much.

Mr. FORT. Does not this bill propose to limit them to five dollars?

Mr. MYERS. It does. But I ask that this barrier be taken away, and that these men who do so much toward the collection of $52,000,000 in revenue shall not be limited to less than seven dollars per day, to be fixed by Congress and not left discretionary with any officer either to lower or raise it. I speak in the interest of the Government as well as its employés when I contend that a responsibility and service like that in question should be rewarded by a liberal compensation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BECK obtained the floor.

Mr. MYERS. I hope my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] will allow me to read a single paragraph from the regulations issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue:

Any discrepancy in the gauge or proof of spirits shipped from the place of original gauge, which cannot be satisfactorily accounted for, is taken as evidence of fraud, and the packages are seized; and when this is occasioned by the incompetency or carelessness of the gauger he will be held responsible to the owner of the property he has thus put in jeopardy.

I read this to show what is exacted of the gaugers, and the heavy responsibility imposed on them.

Mr. BECK. As I stated yesterday, the sub-committee of the Committee on Ways and Means, in looking over this matter, found on consultation with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that if Congress was determined to reduce the expenditures of the Internal-Revenue Bureau, this would be perhaps a proper place to do it. The Commissioner himself had fixed six dollars per day as the pay of the gaugers, when there came upon him a clamor such as no official could resist, from a large number of the republican members of this House, demanding that the rate of pay should be increased, as he had the power to increase it, to nine dollars per day. He was compelled to fix it at seven dollars. From this time forward he does not want any discretion left with him in this matter. He wants the rate fixed by law at some rate; for although his own judgment was that six dollars was a proper rate, he was compelled to make it seven dollars, because the pressure upon him from members of this House was more than any man could resist. I do not believe he cares much what we fix it at so we fix it by law.

Why should there be such a pressure made in behalf of this class of officers? They are active partisans, no doubt. But the store-keepers who are employed all the time cannot by possibility get more than five dollars a day; three-fourths of them do not get more than four dollars. If you fix the pay of these gaugers at five dollars a day, according to the estimate, you save about $100,000 a year, while the work will still be well done, according to the opinion of all who have looked into the subject.

No such great skill is required for this duty as some gentlemen here seem to suppose. These men are furnished with a gauging-rod, and the moment it is put into the barrel they can tell the exact quantity by this means, and by means of a book of calculation furnished by the Department. It requires neither science nor skill to do this work. It requires only the honesty to report the result faithfully. It was for this reason that the sub-committee, of which I was one, said to the Committee on Appropriations that if they saw fit they could make a saving in this way. We did not pretend to dictate to them or seek to control their action. We reported the facts. They have accepted five dollars, and they must assume the responsibility for their own action.

Let me say that in my judgment one blunder which we have made (and it is a serious one) in our legislation heretofore is in paying gaugers who are doing work for the wholesale and retail liquor dealers for whom three-fourths of the work is done. We ought to pay for the gauging of the liquor at the distilleries. The consumer of the distilled liquor or the distiller pays the five-cent tax we imposed to pay the work of gauging, &c. The wholesale liquor dealer and the retail liquor dealer pay nothing on that account. We have reduced the cost of their stamps and their licenses, and we ought not to pay for the gauging done for them. In my judgment the law ought to be so amended as to limit the payments by the Government to the gauging of the whisky as it leaves the still, because by its serial numbers we can trace it to the hands of the wholesale and retail liquor dealer, and these gentlemen ought to pay for whatever gauging is done for them.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does not the gentleman think the law ought to be amended so that the whole tax collected on spirits may be collected at the distillery in the first instance?

Mr. BECK. I was of that opinion when the law was changed, and am still; but it seems that that system cannot be brought into successful operation, and it is a bad time to make a change of any sort now. But let me say one word to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG,] as he referred yesterday to the number of gaugers found in the Blue-Book. A very large number of men have been commissioned gaugers; but not more than seven hundred and fifty have at any time been in the employ of the Government. They are commissioned in order that they may be ready whenever a necessity arises to act for the Government. If they do not act they get no pay. Therefore the number in commission does not indicate the number in actual service or the number drawing pay.

Mr. KELLOGG. I agree with the gentleman entirely. My only reason for making the point was that all who are in commission are included in the Blue-Book, and were embraced in the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] some weeks ago, which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] indorsed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Chairman, it is an ungracious task to antagonize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] when he is on his favorite theme, economy; but in relation to the pending amendment I desire the ear of the committee merely for the purpose of expressing an opinion which I have in relation to it and to state the reason why I am in favor of the amendment. If the bill reported by the committee, which states gaugers are not entitled to receive in the future more than five dollars per day, limited or placed their salary at that amount, as I have no doubt many of the members of the committee may think it does from the terms of the bill, I would not be only abundantly satisfied with the report of the committee but so would the gaugers of the country. But the fact is the terms of the bill will reduce the salary of the gaugers by more than two-fifths of the amount they now receive. In the discretion given to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue they are entitled to receive but seven dollars a day, and they are paid monthly. I understand the regulations governing their salary are such that if for some months they receive fully seven dollars a day for other months they do not receive more than two or three dollars a day.

When I was first applied to to give an opinion in this matter, having but little information of my own, I wrote to the Commissioner in reference to the salary paid to the gaugers of the State of Maryland; and I find, while they are acknowledged to be able, careful, and diligent in their employment in the public service, while they measurably, as far as their service requires, guard the revenue of the country, they are paid the pitiful sum of not quite four dollars a day. I have before me the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue showing the amount paid to the twenty-six gaugers of Maryland to be $31,000, averaging $1,134 for each one of these gaugers. Out of that pitiful sum paid to these men for skilled labor they are required to pay their own expenses, to furnish their own instruments, to give a bond of $20,000, and to be responsible for any mistakes made, which are chargeable to them as fraud. They are not only responsible to the Government, but to the private parties in whose service they may be for the time. The following is the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the accompanying report:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, April 11, 1874.

SIR: In reply to the request made in your letter of the 8th instant, I herewith inclose a report of the number of gaugers in the State of Maryland, and the amount paid by the Government to each, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873. They were paid by the distillers during July, 1872.

Respectfully,

J. W. DOUGLASS, Commissioner.

Hon. W. J. O'BRIEN, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Report of the number of gaugers in the State of Maryland and the amount paid to each during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873.

FIRST DISTRICT.
S. M. Dukehart	$857 38
V. C. S. Eckert	2,111 41
S. H. Hayman	11 56
E. A. Alexander	882 46
J. Connelly	487 28
THIRD DISTRICT.
James T. Caulk	2,012 13
J. W. Digges	1,746 52
F. T. Darling	2,059 02
R. V. Wallis	1,942 54
T. Waters	1,806 26
R. H. Edwards	1,937 15
J. Thomas Hall	1,670 86
F. E. Meredith	1,920 29
J. D. Thomson	1,976 15
C. W. Stackett	1,696 61
E. A. Alexander	882 46
T. H. Gladman	1,251 67
S. E. Prime	289 74
FOURTH DISTRICT.
J. H. Young	1,072 24
L. H. Dill	1,176 89
J. C. Morrison	778 59
G. E. Wamples	277 05
E. M. Mobley	94 54
FIFTH DISTRICT.
B. O'Harra	309 31
J. S. Heckrote	1,597 64
R. A. Hurly	205 38
Total payments	31,053 13
Average, each	1,134 35
NUMBER OF GAUGERS EMPLOYED.
District No. 1	5
District No. 3	13
District No. 4	5
District No. 5	3
Total	26

Again, Mr. Chairman, those officers, although paid by the Government, receive their compensation out of the five-cent tax on distilled spirits imposed for that purpose. This tax yields a revenue of nearly $3,000,000 annually to the Treasury, and after paying the gaugers and all expenses connected therewith that are by law imposed on the Government, it is profitable to the Treasury to the amount of $2,000,000.

I am always in favor of the payment of fair salaries, and I do not consider that the proposed amendment will be a single dollar of additional cost to the Government; therefore I favor it.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I apprehend to some extent there is a false impression in regard to the duties of these men. I have here a compilation of the amount of revenue paid in three districts in this country. It has already appeared from the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that some fifty-two millions of the revenues of the country are gathered from distilled spirits. I desire, as showing the proportionate amount from different sections, to send up to the reporters a statement of the amount collected for the first five or six months of the present fiscal year from three of the leading districts in the country.

CHICAGO, FIRST DISTRICT, ILLINOIS.
July	$409,262 00
August	388,251 29
September	492,077 00
October	392,630 43
November	339,980 05
December	320,575 60
Total first five months of fiscal year	1,932,200 77
Total six months	2,252,776 37
CINCINNATI, FIRST DISTRICT, OHIO.
July	489,609 73
August	536,020 75
September	454,618 82
October	347,677 30
November	443,055 45
December	561,520 27
Total	2,832,502 32
PEORIA, FIFTH DISTRICT, ILLINOIS.
July	331,053 64
August	561,698 80
September	458,896 10
October	486,369 60
November	357,017 06
Total	2,175,035 20

The first I have mentioned is the Chicago district, where more than $2,252,000 had been collected up to the 1st of December last during this fiscal year. In Cincinnati over $2,800,000 were collected from distilled spirits, and in Peoria over $2,175,000. I call the attention of the chairman of this committee to the importance of the work these men have to do. At that rate in a year you get nearly or quite $15,000,000 from these three districts alone of the great revenue which the Government receives from whisky.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask you, and I ask the chairman of the committee, whether to discriminate in this way against men who have such important duties as that to perform is fair? You pay men about this Capitol, as has been already stated, and in various avocations not half as important, not requiring half the skill, not requiring a tithe of the integrity required here, more pay than these men get even if they were to get the utmost under the limit now fixed by law. I am in favor of a reduction of salaries, but I ask whether it is reasonable or honest civil-service reform to strike down the salaries of these men upon whom you have to depend more than upon any others for the faithful collection of your revenues? And you cannot, it seems to me, for this sum have the capacity and integrity combined which are required to insure the proper collection of your revenues. It only affects really two or three districts, the one in which I live, one in Cincinnati, one in Peoria, and one perhaps in two or three others. And although I believe in reducing the expenditures of the Government, I say you cannot get competent men, honest men, men fitted for those duties, on a pay of but five dollars a day. They do not get their pay continuously. When a distillery stops for any reason their wages stop. When there is an accident to the machinery their wages stop. I think seven dollars a day is not too much for the duties they have to perform.

I therefore move to amend the clause which it is proposed to strike out by inserting seven dollars instead of five. If this is done, members of Congress, republicans or democrats, will not be asking, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] has suggested, for an increase in the salaries of these gaugers. Leave it there and many of them will never reach it. But in those cases in great cities, where many of them work, to my knowledge, eighteen hours a day, they will earn and ought to earn that amount.

I desire to say one thing more. The assertion, so far as the gaugers in my region are concerned, that they have their expenses paid them, is not correct. That is a thing unknown, I believe. I do not believe they get anything except what they get under the law—their fees and salary. I know they pay for their own assistance, their own carriage-hire, &c.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on the pending paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope not.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. At the request of the friends of the proposition I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the committee rise for the purpose of obtaining an order from the House to close debate on the pending paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. Not on the pending paragraph, on the pending amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. If we can, by unanimous consent, at the end of five minutes come to a vote on this amendment, I will not insist on my motion.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have three minutes left of my time. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. NEGLEY.]

Mr. NEGLEY. I agree with all that has been said in favor of paying these gaugers remunerative wages. They have a very responsible position, and one that occupies their entire time, imposing upon them a continuous labor, and a responsibility that may cost them at any time their situations even for a moment's neglect. I deem it inexpedient to strike down the salaries of the men who are engaged in providing for the revenues of the Government. I am glad to hear the gentleman from Ohio state that the present salary has been retained on the application of the republican members of this House, because as a republican I am in favor of giving men remunerative wages, and I desire no more favorable commentary on the action of the republican members of this House before the country than that they advocated remunerative wages to the employés of the Government.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

Mr. KELLOGG. I simply wish to say this, that I believe in paying the men who occupy these positions, as well as others, sufficient to prevent them from being liable to be bribed by distillers or any other parties. When you come to this article of whisky, I admit that it is beyond the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Reform Committee, and I do not propose to say much about it. But I wish to say to the Committee on Ways and Means that the trouble about this immense expense of $2,600,000 is this: that you require the gaugers to measure the whisky time after time; when it is manufactured, when it is sold in bulk, when it is resold, &c.; whereas the whole of this tax should be paid at the distillery in the first instance. The Committee on Ways and Means should bring in a bill directing the collection of the tax there.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I would not occupy a minute of the time of the committee now if it were not to notice a statement or two made on the other side. The Committee on Ways and Means appointed a sub-committee, a very able committee, composed of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] and the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] men who understood this subject, because in their districts they have whisky all around them. They are surrounded by this interesting class of gaugers. They have been born and brought up in the midst of that element. These men have their sympathy and co-operation. And, at any rate, they know as much on this subject as any gentleman in this House does. The leading committee in this House, the Committee on Ways and Means, have appointed this intelligent sub-committee, and they have reported to the House on a full examination and a conference with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. NEGLEY. The Commissioner does not indorse the action of the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. GUNCKEL. I have a letter from the Commissioner in which he says he does not.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I believe I have the floor. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee on Ways and Means have appointed a sub-committee, and they say they have conferred with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and report this proposition.

I am surprised to see any gentleman on the other side making an issue that this is a republican question, or that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has been coerced into this measure. I deny it for one. I say the republican members of this House have not coerced the Commissioner into a larger sum than he thinks ought to be paid. For one I never spoke to him on the subject. And all the gentlemen around me said when the statement was made that they never had been to the Commissioner on that subject. Now I say that a sub-committee of the leading committee of the House have reported five dollars a day. I think that is ample compensation. It is more than we pay many other men occupying similar positions. Five dollars a day amounts to $1,500 or $2,000 a year.

Mr. CROOKE. They do not get five dollars a day.

Mr. O'BRIEN. They do not get three dollars a day.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Let gentlemen be quiet. I am not yet quite done. I am surprised to see these gaugers have so many friends. It is true, however, that they have been here, or appointed a committee to come here, so that I am not surprised at their having friends. I withdraw the statement. But it is singular that these poor men, who get so small a salary, should have means enough to come here and lobby on this bill.

I trust the committee will sustain the report of the Committee on Ways and Means and the report of the Committee on Appropriations. Economy is now in order. Let us begin here, where we can begin so well on the recommendation of these two leading committees.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is closed by order of the committee.

Mr. FORT. I ask unanimous consent that time be allowed to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] to have the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue read.

Objection was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING,] which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out these words:
And hereafter no gauger shall receive a greater compensation than five dollars per day.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 69, noes 47; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BANNING and Mr. FOSTER were appointed.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Will not the effect of this amendment be to leave the law precisely as it is now?

Mr. BERRY. I desire to ask the Chair what change will be made in the existing law, if any, by the adoption of this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to inform the gentleman that it is not the duty of the Chair to construe statutes.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 79.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out "five dollars" and inserting "seven dollars."

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the committee a moment in reference to this amendment. It contains the same proposition substantially which has already been voted upon, except that it provides a law which will prevent the Commissioner, at the solicitation of members of Congress, from increasing the compensation paid to gaugers. I desire to state once more, so that the House can understand it or that I may make myself understood, that this provision proposed by the committee changing the compensation of gaugers to five dollars per day affects only two or three districts in the country. I mentioned this before in my former remarks, but I desire to impress it again upon members here, that they may understand precisely what is being done by concurring in the recommendation of the committee. Very few gaugers in the country receive or ever will receive seven dollars a day. It is only in those large places where they run large distilleries, and run them on a large scale, that a gauger can get that amount of pay. I have already adverted to the importance of having, as I know we do have in the district from which I come, honest and intelligent men to take care of these great interests of the country.

It is said that this expense should all be paid by the distillers. Very well, sir; for one, representing that interest to a considerable extent, I am willing that an additional tax shall be put upon whisky for that purpose. But I do insist that fair dealing and proper management demand that you shall give to these men, to whom is committed the important trust of gauging those liquors upon which such vast revenues are collected, a just and reasonable compensation, so that you may command the services of men of capacity and integrity. Sir, we have in my district men of high character in these offices. It has been stated here that I have been in favor of reducing the pay of one-armed soldiers. Sir, we have soldiers engaged in this work in my district and men who have distinguished themselves in other vocations, men of character and ability, and you cannot get them in my city for such a rate of compensation as this. You cannot expect to get the services you now require of them and receive from them.

Mr. AVERILL. I desire to ask the gentleman one question. I understand him to say that this provision in the bill will affect only two or three large districts in the country. I think he is in error in that.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I think I am not in error.

Mr. AVERILL. It provides that a man who is a gauger shall not receive above five dollars a day. Now to-day, by extra effort and work, he may earn ten dollars, and the way he earns it is by working all day and then at night making his computations, and for this he gets but five dollars. To-morrow he may earn only three dollars, and he cannot equalize the pay on those two days, and that may occur in every district in the country.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. That is true. I did not mean to be understood as saying that it only affected two or three districts.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BECK. I do not desire to make a speech, and I will yield in a moment to my friend from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER.] I wish only to say that perhaps I did wrong in alluding to what the Commissioner told us about the pressure put upon him. But it does not apply to this Congress, because, if I am correct—and if not the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] will correct me—it was done before the members of the present Congress came here, so that what the Commissioner said in relation to the pressure upon him does not apply to the members of the present Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. It applies to members of this Congress who were members of the last.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I think it is very evident that the sense of the committee has been taken on the question of fixing the compensation at seven dollars a day. I desired very much that that limit should have been fixed; but I am satisfied that it is not the temper of the committee to do it, and although I believe that that amendment ought to be made, yet in consideration of the feeling manifested by this committee I move to amend the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARD] by striking out "seven dollars" and inserting "six dollars;" so that it will read:

And hereafter no gauger shall receive a greater compensation than six dollars per day.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now let us have a vote; we have spent an hour and a half upon this paragraph.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. There seems to be a very general desire to have another vote upon seven dollars, and I will therefore withdraw for the present my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I renew the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to—ayes 19, noes not counted.

The question recurred upon the amendment offered by Mr. WARD, of Illinois; and on a division there were 86 in the affirmative.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the amendment be considered as adopted.

Mr. BECK. Does the gentleman propose that with a view of having the yeas and nays in the House?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. We will have the yeas and nays in the House.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the paragraph in line 489 by striking out the words "six hundred thousand," so that it will read:

For salaries, expenses, and fees of supervisors, store-keepers, agents, surveyors, gaugers, and miscellaneous expenses, $2,000,000.

Now, sir, the Fifth Auditor in his annual report makes the following exhibit for the year ending June 20, 1873:

Supervisors' salaries, (page 42)	$33,351 65
Expenses	57,490 11
		$90,841 76
Agents and detectives' salaries, (page 43)	48,884 00
Expenses	30,091 94
		78,975 94
Surveyors' salaries, (page 43)	23,589 26
Expenses	17,318 00
		40,907 26
Other expenses of surveyors, (page 28)		4,376 36
Store-keepers, (page 28)		564,856 18
Gaugers, (page 43)		727,319 00
Miscellaneous, (page 43)		187,360 66
Actual expenses		1,694,637 70
Proposed appropriation for like purposes only for the coming fiscal year, ending June 30, 1875		2,600,000 00
Increase the coming fiscal year over the expenses of the fiscal year 1873		905,362 30

I call attention to these figures so that the committee may act understandingly. Among the increases is that for contingent expenses. In 1873 the contingent expenses amounted to $187,000, while in 1866 they amounted to but $40,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I oppose the amendment pro forma in order to say that when the legislative, &c., appropriation bill was before the last Congress the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] stated that the saving to the Government by the abolition of the assessors' offices would be $1,000,000. Now, instead of the saving being $1,000,000, I cannot make out a saving of more than $110,000. The appropriation made for this purpose for the fiscal year 1872 and 1873 was $4,700,000; I mean for the purpose embraced in this paragraph, and the one we have just passed over, both of them being embodied in one in the former appropriation bill. This bill appropriates for the same purpose $4,590,000, making a difference of but $110,000.

There is something exceedingly deceptive in the tables which have been submitted here. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] shows by a statement which he submitted that the expense for the last fiscal year for collecting the revenue, was $3,825,488.66; that the estimated expense for collecting for the present fiscal year is $1,998,066, making a difference of $827,427.66. Now, the gentleman will perceive that he is mistaken when I call his attention to the act of 1872 and 1873, which appropriated only the sum of $4,700,000 while this bill proposes to appropriate for the same purpose $4,590,000. With such an extraordinary discrepancy as this, it seems to me that some explanation should be made. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] said last year that the expenses would be reduced $1,000,000. Even if we adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] there will not be so much of a reduction as was stated by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations when the last bill was passed.

Mr. BECK. I will make the explanation, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. I expected this question would be asked, and therefore I had the accounts examined, and the following will show what appropriations were made for internal revenue for the year ending June 30, 1873, the appropriations for the same purpose made for the year ending June 30, 1874, the estimates for the year ending June 30, 1875, and the appropriations proposed for that year in the bill now being considered. I regret that through the kindness of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means I was placed on a sub-committee which requires me to say so much on this subject:

Appropriations made for internal-revenue purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873. (Statutes, volume 17, pages 68 and 532.)

Office of Commissioner, (salaries)	$363,740
Dies, paper, and stamps	400,000
Assessing and collecting, (page 68)	4,700,000
Gaugers and store-keepers, (page 532)	1,500,000
Detecting fraud in revenue	80,000
	7,043,740
Deficiency appropriation asked for and now pending for increased expenditure, occasioned by act of June 6, 1872, changing rates of tax on spirits and tobacco, and of December 24, 1872, providing for payment of special taxes by stamps, requiring new stamps	250,000
Total, including deficiency	7,293,740

Appropriations made for internal-revenue purposes for fiscal year ending June 30, 1874. (Statutes, volume 17, page 494.)

Office of Commissioner, (salaries)	$354,140
For dies, paper, and for stamps	400,000
For assessing and collecting, including salaries of gaugers and store-keepers	4,600,000
Detecting frauds on the revenue	100,000
	5,454,140

No deficiency appropriation expected or asked to be made.

DIFFERENCE.

Internal-revenue appropriations, 1873	7,043,740
Deficiency stamps, appropriation asked	250,000
	7,293,740
Internal-revenue appropriations, 1874	5,454,140
Difference	1,839,600

Estimates made for internal-revenue purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875. (See Book of Estimates 1874–'75, pages 18, 19, 29, and 30.)

Office of Commissioner, (salaries)	$354,140
Dies, paper, and for stamps	500,000
Assessing and collecting, including $1,500,000 for gauging and store-keeping	4,590,542
Detecting frauds on revenue	100,000
	5,544,682

Proposed appropriations. (See bill reported about February 16, 1874.)

Office of Commissioner, (salaries)	$308,380
Dies, paper, and for stamps	400,000
Collectors	1,990,542
Supervisors, agents, gaugers, store-keepers, miscellaneous	2,600,000
Detecting frauds on revenue	100,000
	5,398,922

That shows a difference of $1,839,600. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] confuses the matter by putting the pay of collectors and assessors alone against the pay of assessors, collectors, gaugers, and store-keepers, which are now aggregated in one item.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is very true that in the former appropriations the pay of the gaugers and store-keepers was not embraced, because then their fees were paid by distillers. But the gentleman must see that the appropriation of $4,700,000 in the act of 1872 and 1873 covers the same items, except for gaugers and store-keepers, as is covered by the pending bill; and the pending bill appropriates as much money within $110,000 as was appropriated in the former bill. It is evident that the confusion by this bill renders it very difficult to get at the facts, but I am very confident that the gentleman from Kentucky on a careful examination will discover that the truth is the reduction instead of being one million as promised is barely $110,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that we will now have a vote.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; I want to corroborate my figures. The act of March 3, 1873, shows that for the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for collectors and assessors, for the enforcement of revenue laws, for dies, paper, and stamps, the aggregate appropriation is $5,454,140. The amount proposed to be appropriated by this bill for the same purpose is $5,398,922, an actual reduction of only $55,218 as against the million promised by the chairman last year. These are the facts, and all the commissioners in the land cannot subvert them.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now let us have a vote; everybody is corroborated, I believe.

Mr. BECK. Yes, all are corroborated. The difference between the appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1873, and for the current fiscal year is $1,830,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I am speaking of the act passed March 3, 1873.

Mr. BECK. For the current fiscal year.

Mr. RANDALL. That is right; and I am showing that the actual reduction was only $55,000.

Mr. BECK. That also is true; but the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]——

Mr. HOLMAN. I had taken the year before.

Mr. RANDALL. I take the last year.

Mr. BECK. The gentleman from Indiana took the year ending June 30, 1873.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true.

Mr. BECK. Therefore I show correctly that there was a saving of $1,800,000 over that year; and the estimates for the next year are $1,830,000 less than the appropriation for the year ending June 30, 1873. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is right when he confines his remarks to the current year and compares the estimates for the next year with the appropriations for the current year.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now that these gentlemen are all set right, let us vote.

Mr. BECK. One word more, to show where the gentleman from Pennsylvania was mistaken. At the time he made his remarks I did not know how to correct him. But I find that in taking the figures from the report of the Fifth Auditor he took only the cost of assessment.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir.

Mr. BECK. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I have the report in my hand now.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, go on.

Mr. BECK. For the year ending June 30, 1873, the cost of assessment was $1,275,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I gave the total expense of collecting during the last year as $1,585,476.

Mr. BECK. Precisely; and the cost of assessing was separate, as the report shows, making in addition the sum of $1,275,000 in round numbers, the aggregate for assessing and collecting being $3,825,000. (See page 254 for cost of assessing, and page 265 for cost of collecting.) I will show the gentleman the Auditor's report. First comes the cost of assessment; then the cost of collecting; and together they make $3,800,000, as against $1,998,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, sir, I have the recapitulation; and I embraced everything.

Mr. BECK. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The book will show that he is mistaken. He gave the cost of assessing only. Add cost of collection, as given on page 265, and it increases the amount to nearly $4,000,000. There is no mistake about it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman having already made four or five speeches, I hope he will not prolong the debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman ought to be truthful in this matter. I have made but one little speech on this subject. The gentleman falls into error in the same way he did last Saturday when he requested me to be "severely truthful" with reference to his having moved amendments in the last Congress increasing salaries. He thought, as was implied by his remark, that I was making an incorrect statement; yet if he will look over the records he will find that the second amendment to increase salaries in the last Congress, the beginning of the movement out of which grew the monstrous structure we have at this session attempted to tear down, was moved by himself.

Mr. GARFIELD. I know the gentleman must be mistaken on the general proposition, because I have republished in pamphlet form my remarks on that subject; so I am quite familiar with the matter. It may be that I said some one particular salary deserved to be raised. I do not deny that I may have said that.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman said it all the way through.

Mr. GARFIELD. At a suitable time, when it will not delay the business of the House, I shall be glad to discuss the question with the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMAN. On questions of this kind I am not in the habit of speaking except by the record, which the other day I had not at hand. Yet the gentleman undertook to talk to me about "severe truthfulness" on a public question which was fresh in the memory of all.

Mr. GARFIELD. My friend cannot complain because I spoke of him as "severely truthful."

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman desired that I should be "severely truthful."

I find in the Congressional Globe of last session, page 392, where the gentleman from Ohio moved an amendment for the purpose of "equalizing" (just as I suggested) one salary with another. In the first place the salary of the Capitol police had been put up; and then it was found that the pay of the police at the President's House was a little lower. Then of course the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio was to "equalize" by an increase. When the paragraph was read appropriating "for two policemen at the President's House, $2,640," the gentleman from Ohio said:

I move to amend by striking out $2,640, and inserting in lieu thereof, $3,168. This equalizes the pay with the policemen employed about the Capitol.

This entirely supports the statement I made, and which my friend from Ohio thought proper to criticise so severely.

[Here the hammer fell.]

I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I renew the amendment for the purpose of suggesting to my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] who closed by referring to the fact that we had doubled the pay of the Capitol police——

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not say anything about doubling any salary.

Mr. KELLEY. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that we appropriated $31,000 for the police at this end of the Capitol, and the Senate inserted an appropriation of $31,000 for the police at the other end; so that the difference between the pay to which he referred and the present pay is as between $62,000 and the present sum, instead of between $31,000 and the present; and we then left to the Metropolitan police a large portion of the Capitol grounds which are now cared for by the Capitol police. The total result is a considerable reduction in the expenditure. I withdraw my amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. RANDALL, it was not agreed to.

Mr. DANFORD. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out "supervisors." Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed to complain of the work of the Committee on Appropriations. I believe that they have done a good work in the preparation of this bill, which proposes to appropriate in the aggregate $4,000,000 less than was appropriated last year. But there are some classes of officers under this Government who it seems to me might be dispensed with. These supervisors of internal revenue, some nine or ten of them I believe, whose duty it is to look after violations of the revenue laws throughout the country, have duties to perform precisely similar to those of the collector of internal revenue. If there be a violation of law in an internal-revenue district, it is made by the statutes the special duty of the collector and his deputies to look after and report that violation. Collectors of internal revenue are responsible directly to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and as to what necessity there is for these middlemen—these gentlemen who are purely ornamental—why they should be kept upon the roll of the officeholder of this Government, I am unable to see.

I appeal to gentlemen upon this floor and ask them what duties these supervisors have performed and what is their use in the administration of the internal-revenue laws of the Government? I believe I have never heard, so far as I am concerned, of a single duty one of these supervisors of internal revenue ever performed in the State which I have the honor in part to represent; and we can get rid of this class of officers without in any way, in my judgment, taking from the usefulness or efficiency of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

They are nice places and they are filled by gentlemen no doubt who would gladly hold on to them, but at this time when we need all the revenues we can collect it does seem to me we should cut off these supernumerary officers. I hope the amendment will prevail and this class of officers be dropped from our rolls.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws, or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violations, $100,000.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. I move to strike out the whole of that paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. I have an amendment to perfect the section.

The CHAIRMAN. That takes precedence of a motion to strike out.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out $100,000 and insert $50,000. I find the expenditure for this purpose in 1873 was $39,371.34. The appropriation here shows an increase of $60,000—an increase in amount almost double the appropriation for the purpose last year.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that perhaps there is not an appropriation made which is a better investment for the Government than this. If my colleague will look at the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue he will find an abstract of the number of suits which were commenced and the number of cases which were settled and the amount of money which was returned into the Treasury in consequence of these suits. The amount saved to the Government in consequence of this appropriation I have no doubt is something like two million dollars.

I believe there is such a thing as being a little too anxious to cut down expenses in certain directions where perhaps the cutting down interferes with the collection of the revenues of the Government and is really no saving of money. There are a great many persons who are trying to evade the laws and who are attempting to defraud the Government out of the honest revenues which belong to the Government, and unless you have some officers you can employ to ferret out and discover where these evasions and violations are, the Government will lose many millions of dollars.

I call attention to the following statement of the last report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue:

Abstracts of reports of district attorneys for the fiscal year 1873.

SUITS COMMENCED.
Number of criminal actions	2,315
Number of civil actions in personam	631
Number of actions in rem	271
Whole number commenced	3,217
SUITS DECIDED IN FAVOR OF THE UNITED STATES.
Number of criminal actions	950
Number of civil actions in personam	378
Number of actions in rem	316
Total number of suits decided in favor of the United States	1,644
SUITS DECIDED AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.
Number of criminal actions	411
Number of civil actions in personam	34
Number of actions in rem	50
Total number of suits decided against the United States	495
SUITS SETTLED OR DISMISSED.
Number of criminal actions	1,315
Number of civil actions in personam	125
Number of actions in rem	116
Total number of suits settled or dismissed	1,556
SUITS PENDING JULY 1, 1873.
Number of criminal actions	3,930
Number of civil actions in personam	1,221
Number of actions in rem	474
Total number of suits pending July 1, 1873	5,625
Amount of judgments recovered by the United States in suits in criminal actions	$154,296 20
Amount of judgments recovered by the United States in suits in civil actions in personam	1,476,346 23
Amount collected on judgments and paid into court in suits in criminal actions	38,493 97
Amount collected on judgments and paid into court in suits in civil actions in personam	291,514.81
Amount collected on judgments and paid into court in actions in rem or proceeds of forfeiture	73,953 45

I trust this appropriation will not be disturbed, but that it will be passed by the committee in the full belief that it will result in a great saving to the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. The whole system is pernicious. We have our revenue officers, and, with all respect to the gentleman who has just spoken, I think they ought to perform this duty without having the Department go outside and employ others. The object of my amendment, however, is to make a reduction in the amount of the appropriation to what is really necessary. I have shown $40,000 ought to be sufficient, and have moved to strike out one hundred thousand and insert fifty thousand, leaving a proper margin beyond what was needed heretofore.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 60.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is now entitled to the floor on his motion to strike out.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. I have moved to strike out the pending paragraph. I propose to reply in a word or two to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. These suits to which he alludes are mostly the old suits commenced under a law which is now repealed, and out of which a considerable sum of money, as he says, has been received. They are results taking place not under this law, but under the law which existed up to the year 1872, under which these parties were paid as informers. In 1872 the law which had hitherto existed was repealed. The repealing section is in these words:

That so much of section 179 of the act of July 13, 1866, as provides for moieties to informers be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby authorized to pay such sums, not exceeding in the aggregate the amount appropriated therefor, as may in his judgment be deemed necessary for detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws, or conniving at the same, in cases where such expenses are not otherwise provided for by law; and for this purpose there is hereby appropriated $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The system of moieties existed and it was to break up that abuse that the law was repealed, which had been passed at a time when the state of the country was unsettled, and when it was supposed that the inhabitants of a great part of the country were not loyal to the Government and indisposed to pay their revenue taxes. These moieties were allowed then to informers and spies.

And now the proposition is by law absolutely to place within the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a system of spies and informers. Now I undertake to say, that never has a republican government existed, and never will a republican government exist, based on any such system. When a government ceases to be supported by voluntary taxes levied on the people, it ceases to be a free government. This system is productive of no good. It spends more money, and it will be the effect of this very appropriation to spend more money, than it gets back.

And what will be the result of this? In every State nearly in the Union these men are the stirrers-up of strife. The gentleman replies that it is necessary to employ counsel. It is not. The district attorney in every district of the United States is a sufficiently qualified officer to discharge his duties and prosecute all offenses for the violation of the internal-revenue laws, while under this system the parties are unmolested and the prosecution cannot be carried on. These attorneys are paid a salary; the marshals are paid a salary by the United States Government; and there is no need for the expenditure of any money for assisting the prosecution in these cases. So far as the object of bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws, or conniving at the same, is concerned, there is no necessity for an appropriation for the purpose. The district attorney is paid by salary and fees taxed against the parties; the marshal by salary and fees taxed against the parties when they collect. The only purpose of this is to employ detectives to ascertain whether there have been violations of the internal-revenue laws; and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred these parties are not only the stirrers-up of litigation, but the blackmailers of the people, collecting sums of money from innocent parties against whom they make charges.

If it were necessary, and I had time, I could refer to a great many such cases. Look into the newspapers, and you will find many of them which remind you of the old times in the war when you read accounts of a Mosby raid, "One man killed, three wounded, and four old stills captured," in the district in Tennessee now represented by Mr. CRUTCHFIELD. And so now paid spies and informers are going through the country, pretending that they have found violations of internal-revenue laws; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is deceived by these men, who for the purpose of making money get up these reports.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope we will now have a vote.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say a word.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I hope unanimous consent will be given to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WHITEHEAD] to continue his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is recognized by the Chair.

Mr. BECK. I hope after we pass this paragraph I will not be called upon to say any more, or at least that I will not be called upon to say much more on this bill. But as the Committee on Ways and Means saw fit to select my friend from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] and myself to look into this matter, we did not see how we could get along without its being put as it seems to be here. And I want to explain to the committee why it seems to be necessary. In the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1873, there was $180,000 given to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the same purposes as are now indicated here. Of that he used $72,818, and paid into the Treasury $107,182. For the current fiscal year Congress gave him $100,000, and of that up to the present time he has used only $6,291.63, and has a balance on hand of $93,708.37. He asks $100,000 for the next year. If he does not use it, of course it goes back into the Treasury.

Mr. RANDALL. No; it does not go back; that is the trouble.

Mr. BECK. It does go back by law.

Mr. RANDALL. It stands there for two years.

Mr. BECK. True, it stands there for two years, but it cannot be used except for this service, unless some one steals it.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. But the effect of it is to authorize the Commissioner to keep up this system of spies and informers.

Mr. BECK. He could not use the whole of the appropriation this year because of the state of things existing, on which I will not dwell now, under the Sanborn contracts, whereby all his officers were subordinated to others without his consent. The House will hear the history of all that in due time.

Mr. RANDALL. When?

Mr. BECK. When the Committee on Ways and Means can have their report printed. It is now completed and in the hands of the printer.

Mr. RANDALL. When will it be printed?

Mr. BECK. It is likely to be before the House next week, or as soon as we get through with this bill.

The Commissioner makes some important use of this appropriation. In the city of Brooklyn there was a large number of illicit distilleries going on, and he had to employ force to put them down. They have been put down, and now the distillers there are registered and working regularly and the Government derives revenue from them. You heard the cry just now in relation to New Orleans. I do not see the gentleman from Louisiana present, or I would have said more upon that subject. They were carrying on illicit distilleries there and making whisky cheaper than it could be made in Illinois or Iowa. Although the corn was bought in Iowa and carried to New Orleans and there manufactured into whisky and sent back to Saint Louis, it was sold there cheaper than men in Iowa and Missouri could make it. The Commissioner had to break up that state of things in New Orleans; and he has done it, as you have heard to-day. There were a large number of illicit distilleries in operation in Georgia, and North Carolina, and Tennessee, and Texas, and it costs the Government thousands of dollars to pay the fees of marshals and other expenses under the Attorney-General's Department. The Commissioner has managed to stop a good deal of this illicit distillation, and he has now got in all those States things in perfect order. The distillers are coming in and registering and paying something to the Government, and we are saved all this expense. But some expenses of this character are necessary, and what the Commissioner gets under this appropriation is used in that way. It is a legitimate use of money; something must be given for this purpose, whether $50,000 or $100,000 I do not know, but he ought to have some power to act in cases like these to which I have referred.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word, and I yield my time to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. WHITEHEAD.]

Mr. WHITEHEAD. I merely desire to finish what I was saying. What the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has said in reference to the marshals of the United States is sufficiently answered by the fact that they are salaried officers, and it is saying but little in favor of the administration of the Government in this Department to claim that additional marshals would have to be employed in order to carry out the law. It is not so in my State, and I do not think it is necessary anywhere. There are in each district a collector, a supervisor, a store-keeper, a surveyor, and a gauger.

Now, if in Brooklyn, or anywhere else on the face of God's earth, with United States courts, with United States marshals and district attorneys, and all these officers of the Internal-Revenue Department to examine into the business of that city, they are not able to ascertain when a violation of the law takes place honestly, fairly, openly, and above-board, and to go before the courts and present offenders and have them convicted, then I say the whole system is defective, and this Government will come to an end if the people who ought to support it have no more reverence for law and honesty than that.

The apology of the gentleman from Kentucky is worth nothing. I say that the Government does not need any such system of espionage. A system of spies and informers is out of place in a republican government. It is a relic of the times of the Spanish inquisition. Our Government needs the protection of no such system, and it leads frequently to the blackmailing of innocent men and to the escape of capitalists who are the real offenders.

Now, sir, I took no part in the former discussion, and made no opposition to any of the officers who have been appropriated for; but I do object to appropriating $100,000 of the people's money for the purpose of employing men whose very business makes them without character and the scorn and detestation of all honest and bold men everywhere. Spies for any purpose, either in time of peace or war, ought not to be countenanced by honest men, and I go for breaking up the whole system.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question was then taken upon the motion to strike out the paragraph; and upon a division—ayes 37, noes not counted—it was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

Treasury, miscellaneous:
For stationery for the Treasury Department and its several Bureaus, $50,000.
For purchase of official postage-stamps, $200,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend the clause relating to postage-stamps by striking out "$200,000," and inserting "$1,000."

Mr. RANDALL. No; it should be $4,000, to correspond with the amendment made in reference to the State Department.

Mr. KELLOGG. Upon investigation it is supposed that $5,000 will be enough.

Mr. DUNNELL. Very well; I will say $5,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. I would suggest that the clause should be amended so as to read:

For furnishing official postage-stamps not exceeding $200,000 face value, $5,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I accept that amendment.

Mr. PACKER. I raise the point of order that the proposed amendment will change existing law, and therefore is not in order.

Mr. DUNNELL. There is no law on the subject. No such point was made when a similar amendment was offered in regard to the State Department.

Mr. PACKER. The point was not made then, because——

Mr. DUNNELL. There is no existing law on the subject.

Mr. PACKER. I have the law here, and will ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the franking privilege be, and the same is hereby, abolished from and after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1873; and that thenceforth all official correspondence of whatever nature, and other mailable matter, sent from or addressed to any officer of the Government or person now authorized to frank such matter, shall be chargeable with the same rate of postage as may be lawfully imposed upon like matter sent by or addressed to other persons.

Mr. DUNNELL. That does not affect the matter at all. The legislative department of the Government is now simply providing the means whereby the different Bureaus and Departments of the Government can be furnished with stamps.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PACKER] on the point of order.

Mr. PACKER. Of course, having provided by law that these official stamps shall be furnished to the Departments and Bureaus of the Government at the same rate that stamps are furnished to individuals, any attempt to require the Postmaster-General to furnish them at a lower rate will be a change of that law. In connection with that it may perhaps be well to refer to the act of March 3, 1873, which provides that the Postmaster-General shall cause to be prepared a special stamp or stamped envelope to be used only for official mail-matter. This section provides that these postal-stamps shall be furnished by the Post-Office Department; consequently the other Departments cannot furnish them for themselves. If they are to be furnished by the Post-Office Department, then under the act which has just been read by the Clerk they are to be furnished at the same rates that stamps are furnished to individuals.

Mr. DUNNELL. That is only an inference.

Mr. PACKER. It is a specific requirement of the act.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PACKER] suggest to the Chair the law under which the Post-Office Department is required to furnish these stamps? In the meanwhile the Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] in opposition to the point of order.

Mr. PACKER. I have the law here. The material part of it is in the proviso to the section which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall cause to be prepared a special stamp or stamped envelope to be used only for official mail-matter for each of the Executive Departments; and said stamps and stamped envelopes shall be supplied by the proper officer of said Department to all persons under its direction requiring the same for official use.

Mr. DUNNELL. I respectfully suggest that that proviso simply means that the Postmaster-General shall furnish to the other officers of the Government the stamps and stamped envelopes which they may need for official business. My amendment proposes to appropriate a sum of money sufficient to enable him to do precisely that thing and nothing more. He has to furnish these stamps, not at their face value, but a quantity of stamps sufficient to meet the needs of a given Department. The Treasury Department needs stamps of the face value of $200,000. I propose that we shall appropriate money enough to enable the Postmaster-General to obtain those stamps and turn them over to the Treasury Department. I see where the point comes in; this is a struggle on the part of the Post-Office Department and its committee here to save that Department.

Mr. RANDALL. Not the committee.

Mr. DUNNELL. The Postmaster-General having made the allegation that so much would be saved by the repeal of the franking privilege, now seeks to get hold of this large income; and we are asked to appropriate in this bill from one to two million dollars, which is to go to the credit of the Post-Office Department, when it will cost that Department not more than eight or ten thousand dollars to prepare all these stamps. Why should we load down this appropriation bill with two or three million dollars beyond what is legitimately necessary? I insist, Mr. Chairman, that a proper construction of this proviso was given when the former amendment was adopted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire to call attention to the fact that the Post-Office Department is obliged to bear the whole expense of carrying the mails; that it is the great carrying Department of the Government; and it does seem to me that it should be paid for what it does. The question is, how much does it cost to the Post-Office Department to carry and deliver the mail matter?

Mr. DUNNELL. In reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HARRIS,] I would say that the Postmaster General has no right to come in here and ask us to appropriate a certain sum of money in order that it may appear in the business of his Department. Otherwise we appropriate for carrying the mails; otherwise we appropriate for every expense of the Post-Office Department. But he desires in addition that he may have credit for this large amount of official business; and we appropriate $2,000,000, more or less, which is put into the hands of the different Departments wherewith to purchase stamps. Now I say that it is a better style of legislation to appropriate simply enough money to pay the actual cost of those stamps, and then if the Post-Office Department has a deficiency, let us provide for that. I do not ask that the Post-Office Department shall be self-sustaining; by no means.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is not confining himself to the point of order.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman from Ohio suggests that I am not confining myself to the point of order. Now, sir, I have not occupied much time upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being raised, the Chair will of course be compelled to request the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] to confine his discussion to the point of order before the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not know that I desire to occupy any more of the time of the committee. I have felt from the time I first read this appropriation bill that the neatest and best style of legislation was for us to appropriate to each Department simply a sufficient sum to pay the actual cost of the stamps it may require.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to make one remark upon the point of order. The motion here is simply to change the amount of the appropriation. It does not change any law. This House has the right to say whether it will appropriate $200,000 or $175,000 or $5,000 for purchasing stamps for this Department. The House has the right to determine the amount it is disposed to expend for this object; and if the Chair understands my proposition——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Clerk to report the pending amendment, so that the entire committee may understand it?

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 514 strike out the word "purchase" and insert "furnishing;" in the same line strike out "200" and insert "5;" so that the clause will read: "for furnishing official postage-stamps, $5,000."

Mr. CONGER. I did not understand that the original amendment proposed anything more than a change in the amount of the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought that such was the gentleman's impression.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say, however, that even with the change of the word "furnishing" instead of "purchase," there is no conflict necessarily with any existing law; and certainly a diminution of the amount of the appropriation cannot be in contravention of any law.

I submit, too, that under the law "furnishing" is the proper word. The Postmaster-General is required to furnish, not to purchase, stamps. Hence I hold that the amendment is in entire conformity to the law.

Mr. GARFIELD. But if we insert the word "furnish" in this clause, it is the Treasury Department that will have to furnish these stamps.

Mr. CONGER. My friends here know so much better than I do what I mean that I suppose they will get me corrected after a while. Now what is this appropriation for? It is for furnishing stamps to the Treasury Department. What does the law now provide? That the Postmaster-General shall furnish the stamps to each Department. Hence the amendment is in strict accordance with the law as it stands. I submit that the chairman of the committee in drawing this bill made a slight error—a thing he very seldom does in a matter of verbiage—in inserting in the bill the word "purchase" instead of "furnishing."

Mr. GARFIELD. Does not my friend see the difference between the Treasury Department purchasing and the Post-Office Department furnishing? The Treasury Department cannot furnish postage-stamps to anybody. This is an appropriation to enable the Treasury Department to purchase postage-stamps from the Post-Office Department. Hence if the gentleman inserts here the word "furnish," he makes the Treasury Department usurp the authority and duty of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. CONGER. Not at all. The law declares who shall furnish these postage-stamps to the Departments. That law declares what shall be done in the way of furnishing the Departments. This amendment merely goes to the extent of providing for furnishing official postage-stamps to the several Departments.

Mr. GARFIELD. This is not a law for the Post-Office Department at all.

Mr. CONGER. I will not discuss it. The few remarks I wanted to make to bring myself into accord with the Chair for our mutual interest has raised a feeling which is spreading all over the House. I do not propose, however, to antagonize the whole House by the little explanation which I intended to make only to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] raises the point of order that no member under the rules shall be permitted to speak more than once on the pending question of order until all the members who desire to speak shall have spoken. That rule the Chair will enforce.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not wish to speak on the point of order, but merely send up an amendment which the gentleman from Minnesota I understand will accept as a substitute for his own.

The CHAIRMAN. If no other gentleman desires to debate the point of order the Chair will render his decision. The Clerk will read the pending amendment.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask the amendment be read as it has been modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "for purchase of official stamps, $200,000;" and in lieu thereof insert "for purchase of official postage-stamps to an amount not exceeding $200,000 face value, 5,000."

The CHAIRMAN. On this the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PACKER] raises the point of order that it changes existing law. To this the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] suggests it does not involve any change of existing law as it provides for an appropriation for stamps. The law as it stands to-day requires the Post-Office Department shall prepare and furnish to the different executive departments the stamps to be used in the transaction of their business. The other law to which reference has been made provides the same postage shall be imposed on matter sent to or from the Departments as on other mail-matter. It is suggested the amendment does not mean for payment to the Post-Office Deparment of the face value of stamps, but is to cover the expense of their preparation. As the law stands stamps must be prepared in the Post-Office Department. As this is under the heading of the Treasury Department, the Chair thinks were it to be put in here, to be logical it would involve the preparation of stamps in and by the Treasury Department. The Chair regards the point of order as well taken, and therefore rules the amendment out.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to ask a question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object to debate on the point of order after the Chair has given his decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be happy to hear the question of the gentleman from Michigan; but if objection be made, it is the duty of the Chair to enforce the rule which forbids debate after the decision of the Chair.

Mr. DUNNELL. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota takes an appeal from the Chair; and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 30; no quorum voting.

Mr. DUNNELL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. DUNNELL and Mr. PACKER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 110, noes 38.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$5,000," for the purchase of official postage-stamps.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. GARFIELD. On that motion I call for a division of the committee.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 73; no quorum voting.

Mr. CRITTENDEN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CRITTENDEN and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 80.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I move the following as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota:

All postage-stamps required by the Treasury Department shall be furnished by the Postmaster-General at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order that changes existing law.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. PACKER. No appropriation is provided for in the amendment at all.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It requires no appropriation to furnish these stamps. I understood the ruling of the Chair was to the effect that the $5,000 to be appropriated would be equivalent to requiring the Treasury Department to prepare these stamps required by law to be prepared in the Post-Office Department under the control of the Postmaster-General. Now the substitute which I offer I think relieves the committee from the whole difficulty suggested by the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota. There is no occasion for an appropriation at all. The postage-stamps cost nothing to the Treasury Department. If they are furnished by the Post-Office Department the Post-Office Department can make its own account and charge it against the Treasury Department; and the appropriation of $5,000 to furnish $200,000 of postage stamps, face value, is equivalent, as the Chair has told us, to requiring that the Treasury Department shall furnish its own stamps. I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 514 and 515, and insert in lieu thereof the following:
The postage-stamps required by the Treasury Department shall be furnished by the Postmaster-General at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that were the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland adopted the Treasury Department would still be required to pay the Post-Office Department for the stamps so furnished.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The full face value, or $5,000?

The CHAIRMAN. The existing law requires that they shall be paid for at their face value.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I have no objection to that; I am antagonizing the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.] I have no objection to the paragraph remaining exactly as it is in the appropriation bill; but if there is to be any amendment, that which I offered is, I think, the only one which can be offered under the law.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that the committee rise.

The question being taken on the motion that the committee rise, there were—ayes 32, noes 93; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. ELDREDGE and Mr. GARFIELD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 18, noes 85; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, the Chair directs the roll to be called.

The roll was called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barnum, Barrere, Barry, Bass, Begole, Berry, Bradley, Brown, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cessna, Freeman Clarke, Clinton L. Cobb, Comingo, Corwin, Cox, Creamer, Crocker, Crossland, Crutchfield, Curtis, Darrall, Davis, DeWitt, Dobbins, Duell, Eden, Elliott, Farwell, Field, Glover, Eugene Hale, Hamilton, Harmer, John T. Harris, Harrison, Havens, Hays, Hendee, Hereford, Herndon, Hersey, Hodges, Hooper, Howe, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Jewett, Kelley, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Lansing, Leach, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowe, Luttrell, Marshall, McJunkin, McNulta, Mitchell, Moore, Morey, Morrison, Neal, Negley, Nesmith, Nunn, O'Brien, O'Neill, Hosea W. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Perry, Phillips, Pierce, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Potter, Pratt, Purman, Ransier, Read, Richmond, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Ross, Milton Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sherwood, Sloan, Sloss, Small, Smart, George L. Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Stanard, Standiford, Stephens, St. John, Stowell, Strawbridge, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Tremain, Tyner, Waddell, Waldron, Wallace, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Whiteley, George Willard, Wilshire, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodworth, and John D. Young.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WOODFORD stated that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, and he now reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The roll-call shows the presence of 141 members, which is not a quorum.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I desire to say that I was present during the call of the roll, but missed the call of my name.

Mr. GARFIELD. As the roll-call shows that a quorum is not present, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BUNDY: The petition of 45 citizens of Ironton, Lawrence County, Ohio, in opposition to a tariff duty on tea and coffee and any increase in internal taxes, and in favor of the repeal of the second section of the act of June 6, 1872, which reduced, by 10 per cent., the duties on certain imports, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LOFLAND: The petition of Joshua Cookinback, late private Company C, Fourth Delaware Volunteers, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOWE: The petition of Pottawatomie Indians, in Kansas, for an appropriation to pay arrearages due said Indians under treaties with the United States, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MAYNARD: Papers relating to the claim of Sylvester D. Willard, of Albany, New York, for rent of building in Murfreesborough, Tennessee, and for damages done the same by United States troops, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ORR: The petition of citizens of Iowa, for a post-route from Sheldon, in O'Brien County, to Rock Rapids, in Lyon County, Iowa, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana: The petition of 50 citizens of Buchanan County, Missouri, for the passage of a law authorizing the manufacture of patent-right articles by others than the owners of patent-rights upon payment of a reasonable royalty thereon, to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petition of 12 citizens of La Salle County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 25 citizens of Renville County, Minnesota, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 11 citizens of Cumberland County, New Jersey, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 18 citizens of Pike County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 18 citizens of Pontotoc County, Mississippi, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 33 citizens of Knox County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 19 citizens of Des Moines County, Iowa, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 26 citizens of Defiance County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Pulaski County, Georgia, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Johnson County, Arkansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Gordon County, Georgia, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Terrell County, Georgia, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 26 citizens of Prince George's County, Maryland, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Franklin County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Ionia County, Michigan, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Gentry County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 18 citizens of Vermillion County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of McLeod County, Minnesota, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Parke County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 57 citizens of Copiah County, Mississippi, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 18 citizens of Henry County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 18 citizens of Wells County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Brown County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Clark County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Madison County, Tennessee, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 27 citizens of Iroquois County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 28 citizens of Van Buren County, Michigan, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Collin County, Texas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Perry County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 25 citizens of Oakland County, Michigan, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Waupaca County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Owen County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Morgan County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 18 citizens of Saint Clair County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan: The petition of J. W. McCrath to be reimbursed for loss of a horse while employed in Government service, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WOODFORD: The petition of William M. Baldwin and 124 others, for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1179) granting increased pensions to disabled soldiers, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ———: The petition of William West, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 22, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CIVIL SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message of the President of the United States; which was read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Herewith I transmit the report of the civil service commission authorized by the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, and invite your special attention thereto.

If sustained by Congress, I have no doubt the rules can, after the experience gained, be so improved and enforced as to still more materially benefit the public service and relieve the Executive, members of Congress, and the heads of Departments from influences prejudicial to good administration.

The rules, as they have heretofore been enforced, have resulted beneficially, as is shown by the opinions of the members of the Cabinet and their subordinates in the Departments, and in that opinion I concur; but rules applicable to officers who are to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate are in great measure impracticable, except in so far as they may be sustained by the action of that body. This must necessarily remain so unless the direct sanction of the Senate is given to the rules.

I advise for the present only such appropriation as may be adequate to continue the work in its present form, and would leave to the future to determine whether the direct sanction of Congress should be given to rules that may perhaps be devised for regulating the method of selection of appointees, or a portion of them, who need to be confirmed by the Senate.

The same amount appropriated last year would be adequate for the coming year, but I think the public interest would be promoted by authority in the Executive for allowing a small compensation for special service performed beyond usual office hours under the act of 1871, to persons already in the service of the Government.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, April 18, 1874.

The message was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DENNIS presented a petition of a large number of merchants and ship-owners of Baltimore, Maryland, praying the passage of an act to prevent compulsory pilotage; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SCOTT presented the memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, asking the repeal of the statutes relative to moieties and the employment of spies and informers in the customs department of the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. OGLESBY presented the petition of Mary P. Jarvis, of Geneva, Illinois, widow of the late Commodore Joseph R. Jarvis, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of A. A. Bradley, praying compensation for two horses lost and for services rendered by him as temporary inspector of the port of Savannah, Georgia, from April 9, 1872, to December, 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. THURMAN presented additional testimony in the case of Benjamin D. Lakin, of Hillsborough, Ohio, praying to be reimbursed for money paid for a substitute furnished to the Army in the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. STOCKTON presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of New Jersey, recommending an appropriation for the improvement of Barnegat Bay and its tributaries; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LEWIS presented the petition of Abraham Miller and others, of Virginia, praying the establishment of an Army and Navy hospital at Taylor's or Massanetta Springs in Rockingham County, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented the petition of John J. Giles and others, merchants of Boston, asking the passage of a law abolishing the system of compulsory pilotage; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WEST presented the petition of Turner Merritt, praying compensation for one hundred and thirteen bales of cotton taken by order of General Banks for the use of the United States Army for the construction of fortifications at Port Hudson, Mississippi; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAMLIN presented a petition of citizens of the District of Columbia, praying that such provisions as will insure the safety of travelers on the Fourteenth street road be inserted in the charter to be granted the Piney Branch and Rock Creek Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LOGAN presented a petition of officers of the university of Chicago, praying compensation for the use and destruction of their property by United States troops during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Casper Gimber, asking payment for property destroyed by military order, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Benjamin Fish, praying compensation for horses captured by the enemy while in the service of Major J. W. Smith, paymaster United States Army, in 1863, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2100) for the relief of Martin Hoff, Casper Doerr, and George Gebhart, citizens of Saint Louis, Missouri, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Louisa Fitch, widow of Captain E. P. Fitch, praying compensation for two horses appropriated to the use of the United States during the late rebellion, on the death of Captain Fitch, which occurred while on duty in the field as captain and quartermaster in the United States Army, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. MERRIMON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of E. A. Coleman, praying compensation for services rendered by his son, Charles J. Coleman, as first lieutenant Company H, First Kansas Colored Volunteers, from August, 1862, to May, 1863, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 699) to regulate bids for goods, supplies, and transportation on account of the Indian service, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 271) for the relief of Frances A. Robinson, administratrix of the estate of John M. Robinson, deceased, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. STOCKTON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2330) to extend the provisions of section 21 of chapter 200 of the acts passed at the second session of the Thirty-seventh Congress giving to unnaturalized persons enlisting in the naval service or Marine Corps of the United States the same rights as are now given by law to such persons enlisted in the Army of the United States, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 706) to amend an act approved July 17, 1862, entitled "An act for the better government of the Navy of the United States," reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 716) for the better government of the Navy of the United States, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2332) for the relief of S. D. Hicks, administrator of R. M. Harvey, to report it back with a written report and with the recommendation that it do not pass. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] not now in his seat desires that the bill may go on the Calendar.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCOTT, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of R. M. Harvey, praying the refunding of certain moneys, the proceeds of a sale of tobacco under decree of a court at Richmond, Virginia, erroneously covered into the Treasury, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

AGREEMENT WITH UTES OF COLORADO.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2193) to ratify an agreement with certain Ute Indians in Colorado, and to make an appropriation for carrying out the same, to report it back and recommend its passage; and inasmuch as it is a House bill, I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It ratifies and confirms an agreement or convention made and entered into at the Los Piños agency for the Ute Indians, on the 13th day of September, 1873, by and between Felix R. Brunot, commissioner in behalf of the United States, and the chiefs, head-men, and men of the Tabequache, Muache, Capote, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uintah bands of Ute Indians, which is quoted at length in the bill; and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue, set apart, and hold, as a perpetual fund, in trust for the Ute Indians, a sufficient amount of 5 per cent. bonds of the United States, the interest on which shall be $25,000 per annum; which interest shall be paid annually, as the President of the United States may direct, for the benefit of those Indians; and also directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be paid to Ouray $1,000, as the first installment due him annually, so long as he shall be chief of the Utes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 727) for the relief of Mrs. S. V. L. Findlay; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 728) to define a gross of matches, to provide for uniform packages, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 729) to enable Indians to become citizens of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 730) to provide for ascertaining the amount of damage sustained by citizens of Texas from marauding bands of Indians and Mexicans upon the frontiers of Texas; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MENNONITE SETTLERS ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 655) to enable the Mennonites from Russia to effect permanent settlement on the public lands of the United States, which has been once or twice under consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. STEWART to the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WINDOM. If it is in order I should like to perfect the text before the amendment of the Senator from Nevada is voted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in order.

Mr. WINDOM. In section 8 I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to move to strike out the words "five hundred" and insert "three hundred;" so that it will read:

That the aggregate of lands held under declaratory statements as aforesaid shall not at any one time exceed three hundred thousand acres.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On the fourth line of the same section I move to strike out the words "one hundred" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

Nor shall any one filing embrace more than fifty thousand acres.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] as a substitute for the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

The amendment of Mr. STEWART was read, as follows:

Whenever a body of such persons, being heads of families or single persons over twenty-one years of age, shall, through a duly constituted and accredited agent, file with the Secretary of the Interior an application for permission to locate a portion of the public lands of the United States, accompanying such application with a list of the persons composing such body, and the quantity desired by each, the Secretary may authorize such location to be made in any land district of the United States, by giving such agent the proper certificate in writing, under seal of his office, stating that such application has been filed, and reciting the number of persons so applying and the number of acres which they may include in their claim.

SEC. 2. That any person named in the application and petition on file with the Secretary of the Interior shall have the exclusive right of entry for the period of two years from the date of filing as aforesaid upon complying with the laws of the United States existing at the date of entry.

SEC. 3. That at the expiration of the period of two years as aforesaid, all lands not entered by the parties entitled under the foregoing provisions shall be subject to the entry of any other person under the laws applicable to the same as other public lands of the United States.

SEC. 4. That no one filing shall embrace more than one township of thirty-six sections, nor shall a new filing be made until the lands of the former filing shall be exhausted.

SEC. 5. That the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall have power to make all needful rules and regulations to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Nevada is engaged on a committee of investigation. I have sent for him and suppose he will be here in a moment. I think he would like to be heard on this amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY. Then I propose to make an amendment to the text of the bill. I propose in the fifth and sixth lines of the second section to strike out the words "held at the minimum price," and again in the fifth section to strike out the same words in the tenth line.

Almost all the public lands, with scarcely an exception, are held either at the minimum or double minimum; but there is a tract of land in Minnesota known as the Sioux reservation up the Minnesota River for which many of these Mennonites have expressed a very great desire. It is very desirable land. They wish to go there. These lands are held as public lands, but held in trust for Indians subject to appraisement. They have been appraised at prices very little above the minimum, $1.30, and $1.40, and $1.50 an acre. There can be no objection to allowing these people to take those lands at the appraised value; but they will be excluded from doing so unless the amendment I suggest is made. There can be no objection to it, I am sure.

Mr. WINDOM. I see no objection unless some other member of the Committee on Public Lands objects.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Senator having the bill in charge assents to this amendment, and I presume no one else will object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. RAMSEY] to the amendment reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the fact that his amendment leaves the lands that are held at less than the double-minimum price without any price fixed; and therefore his amendment, to the purpose of which I have no objection, ought to be in a separate clause; not to amend this clause but to insert words accomplishing what he desires.

Mr. RAMSEY. As to price there are but two classes of lands as a general thing in the United States, those at the minimum price, of which they may take one hundred and sixty acres, or at the double minimum, of which they may take eighty acres. This is the only exception; I know of no other in the United States. The difficulty the Senator from Vermont apprehends cannot arise in this case.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. But the Senator will see that he strikes out the word "minimum." He wants to include those lands that are sold at the minimum price and those also that are held in trust for the Indians. Why not express it in so many words? Then there can be no chance whatever for any dispute or controversy hereafter.

Mr. RAMSEY. I do not see it as the Senator does, but I will try to get up an amendment to suit him.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Very well.

Mr. RAMSEY. Inasmuch as the Senator from Vermont thinks my amendment will not answer the purpose, I will withdraw it and offer another.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. RAMSEY. Probably he will have no objection to letting us prefect the bill before we vote on his amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection to that.

Mr. RAMSEY. Then I propose to amend by inserting after the word "price," in the sixth line of the second section, where it first occurs, the words "or one hundred and sixty acres of any lands held in trust by the Government at their appraised value;" and the same amendment should be repeated in the tenth line of the fifth section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. RAMSEY] to the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada to the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to modify my amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. While the Senator from Nevada is modifying his amendment, I wish to say that since his amendment was submitted to the Senate the Committee on Public Lands have considered the subject, and unanimously, I believe, with the exception of the Senator from Nevada, decided that the bill as it stands will better accomplish the object, and is less objectionable than the amendment of the Senator from Nevada. I especially requested the Senator from Nevada to be present at that meeting of the committee, but as he was not present, he did not agree to the action of the committee. If he had been, I think the action would have been unanimous.

Mr. STEWART. I will call attention to my objection to this bill. My objection is that it does more than is necessary to accomplish the purpose. I regret that I could not be present at the meeting of the committee of which the Senator speaks.

The first section of the bill provides for any person who is an agent of the Mennonites applying to the Secretary of the Interior, with a list of the names of persons who desire to immigrate to this country and locate on public lands; and then the Secretary of the Interior gives him a certificate reciting that he may make a location for these persons. Then—

Upon presentation of the certificate aforesaid to the register of any land district, such agent, as aforesaid, shall be permitted to locate in a compact body any tract of unappropriated public land not mineral and not exceeding the amount of one hundred and sixty acres held at the minimum price, or eighty acres held at the double minimum price, for each person composing such body of individuals named in the said petition and application: Provided, That no prior right of any person under existing laws shall be prejudiced by this act.

Then, instead of having the Secretary of the Interior simply divide a township of land for the purpose of giving these people an opportunity to come here, this agent enters each specific tract, which in the first place is considerably complicated, in the next place expensive, and in the next place it ties the land up in case the parties never come. The land is entered by an agent, which our land system has never favored. We have struggled in behalf of the soldiers to have large bodies of land entered by an agent; but it was resisted here and discussed for many days, and disagreed to in both Houses of Congress, because it involved the principle of entries of land by an agent; and that is unnecessary for the purposes of this bill. Then—

Such location shall be made by filing with the register a declaratory statement, describing the lands by sectional subdivision, township, and range, and the payment to the receiver of fees at the rate of one dollar, each, to the register and receiver for each one hundred and sixty acres embraced in the application, to be accounted for as other fees and allowances, and subject to the restrictions under existing laws as to maximum compensation of those officers.

It allows the land to be entered, even if the parties do not come to this country at all. This is an entire violation of our whole system of laws and is unnecessary for the purpose. If the lands were withdrawn and these persons allowed to have an opportunity to enter them in a body, that would do all they desire to accomplish.

And upon receipt of such fees, the receiver shall issue his receipt therefor, setting forth the fact of such declaratory statement having been filed—giving the number of the same, and the description of the land, and acknowledging the said payment of the fees as aforesaid; which receipt shall be delivered to such agent, and shall be his voucher for the filing of the declaratory statement and payment of the fees as aforesaid.

A declaratory statement for the whole community filed by one man—

Mr. WINDOM. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I do not understand from what clause of this bill he says it permits them to enter these lands before they come to this country.

Mr. STEWART. By an agent. It permits them to enter the land before they come to this country by an agent.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator point out the language of the bill which authorizes the entry?

Mr. STEWART. It is as follows:

That upon presentation of the certificate aforesaid to the register of any land district, such agent as aforesaid shall be permitted to locate in a compact body any tract of unappropriated public land not mineral, and not exceeding the amount of one hundred and sixty acres held at the minimum price, or eighty acres held at the double-minimum price, for each person composing such body of individuals named in the said petition and application.

Mr. WINDOM. But that word "locate" is certainly construed by the subsequent provisions of the bill not to mean to enter, because the lands are simply withdrawn for two years. If they do not come and take possession of them and comply with existing laws by the end of two years they fall back into the body of public lands under existing laws.

Mr. STEWART. There will be great difficulty about the lands falling back after having been once entered. I object to the entry; I do not object to withdrawing the lands. This is intended to be an entry, because the register, as a portion of his monthly returns, is to make return to the Land Office.

That the register shall forward to the General Land Office, as a portion of his monthly returns, a duly certified abstract of the declaratory statement, in the same manner as similar returns are rendered in pre-emption cases, to be entered upon the books of the General Land Office.

It goes on to say in the fifth section:

That any person named in the application and petition on file with the Secretary of the Interior, or, if he be dead, his legal representatives, shall have the exclusive right of entry for the period of two years from the date of filing as aforesaid, under the laws of the United States existing at the date of entry, of a tract of land embraced in said declaratory statement, not exceeding the quantity named in the original application and petition as the amount desired by such person, and in no case exceeding one hundred and sixty acres of minimum or eighty acres of double-minimum lands.

In the first place, the very act that constitutes entry is done by the agent, and fees are paid for it the same as for other entries. It will cost to enter a township and subdivide it and put down each man's name for his tract six or eight thousand dollars. Then it goes on to provide that they shall have the right of entry after they come here. Will they pay these fees over again? What is meant by the subsequent right of entry to the individual after the land has been entered and it has been credited to him on the books?

Mr. WINDOM. What is meant by the subsequent right of entry is to construe the first word "location," which does not mean "entry" at all, but simply that he makes his selection or location and for two years he has the right of entry if he pays for it. There is no provision, as I read this bill, authorizing any entry until the man settles upon it and enters it under existing laws.

Section 7 provides:

That at the expiration of the period of two years, as aforesaid, all lands not entered by the parties entitled under the foregoing provisions shall be subject to the entry of any other person under the laws applicable to the same as other public lands of the United States.

Showing clearly that the word "location," as first used, does not mean "entry," but means the simple selection of the land, and that the right of entry exists for two years after that location or selection; and if the right of entry is not perfected within two years, anybody else may enter.

Mr. STEWART. Then calling this act of filing a declaratory statement, and having it entered in the land office and sent up here, a "location" in one place is supposed to make it different from an ordinary entry; but these are the same acts that constitute entry in other cases. It is this that I complain of. What does the pre-emption settler or the homestead settler do in locating land? He selects the land, files in the local land office a declaratory statement, then has the land returned as selected or entered by him. That is all. The same acts are required to be done here by an agent. Then it is idle to say that the party shall have the exclusive right of entry if the land has been entered and all acts necessary to constitute an entry have been done. If it is not meant that he shall enter, what is the use of all this expense for making selections to simply have a body of land set aside? If it is not intended to be an entry, it is superfluous and complicated, and it is attended by consequences that may be very inconvenient. It is provided that an individual shall get such a right as shall descend to his heirs; an individual that never comes to the country gets a right through the act of an agent that shall descend to his heirs. The fifth section says:

That any person named in the application and petition on file with the Secretary of the Interior, or, if he be dead, his legal representatives, shall have the exclusive right of entry for the period of two years from the date of filing as aforesaid, under the laws of the United States existing at the date of entry, of a tract of land embraced in said declaratory statement, not exceeding the quantity named in the original application and petition as the amount desired by such person, and in no case exceeding one hundred and sixty acres of minimum or eighty acres of double-minimum lands.

I submit that all that, paying that fee, having it certified to, having it subdivided, is unnecessary for the purposes intended by this bill, and then complications may arise out of it. Again:

SEC. 7. That at the expiration of the period of two years, as aforesaid, all lands not entered by the parties entitled under the foregoing provisions shall be subject to the entry of any other person under the laws applicable to the same as other public lands of the United States.

This is requiring a double entry to be made of the same thing. I do not think it is necessary at all; and my amendment is to avoid it.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, limited as I am in the morning hour I will attempt to reply to some of the objections urged to this bill by the honorable Senator from Nevada. Let me say that this bill was very carefully prepared by the committee; it met I believe its unanimous approbation, with the exception of the Senator from Nevada. It has been very carefully considered by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and meets with his approval.

This bill is to be considered in the light of its recitals; in the light of the preamble which shows the occasion for just such a measure as this, and I do not think that we can improve it possibly by the amendment which the Senator from Nevada proposes.

This, to be sure, is exceptional legislation, but the occasion for it is exceptional and the opportunity which this country has of acquiring a large and very valuable body of emigrants to this country is an exceptional opportunity, and we are very likely to lose this immigration unless we pass this measure or something similar to it. Now, sir, briefly let me refer to the recitals in the preamble of the bill, which are the key to what follows and show the necessity of this legislation:

Whereas it has been represented that a certain sect of people, numbering between forty and fifty thousand persons, known as the Mennonites, now and for several generations residing in Southern Russia, near the shores of the Black Sea and the Sea of Azof, are very anxious to emigrate to the United States of America, and occupy portions of the public lands in compact bodies; and whereas they desire to dispose of their property in Russia, and to settle in various parts of this country in compact bodies, and some modification of the laws relating to the disposition of public lands is necessary in order to enable them to send out their agents and make selections and improvements in advance of the arrival of the main body.

These recitals answer all of the objections which I have heard urged against this bill. They cannot transfer themselves in a body at once. They own large and valuable possessions in Russia, and they must sell them all out between this and the year 1881, until which period the Emperor of Russia gives them the opportunity of disposing of their property there and emigrating to another country in order to escape the military regulations of the empire. Between this and 1881 there are only six years. They must leave in detachments, and they must necessarily send an agent to this country or to Canada, which is competing with the United States for this emigration, for the purpose of selecting lands here or there for the immigrants to occupy when they shall come.

Now what are the provisions of this bill briefly stated? I do not think the Senator from Nevada caught the full import of the bill in reading it. I have abstracted it and the substance is as follows:

The first section provides that a body of persons, defining them, namely, the heads of families or single persons over twenty-one years of age, may by an agent file an application with the Secretary of the Interior for permission to locate a portion of the lands of the United States, giving a list of the persons who desire them and the quantity desired by each; and that quantity, as we know, cannot under our land system exceed one hundred and sixty acres. The Secretary of the Interior may then authorize the location to be made in any land district of the United States. He does this by giving the agent of the Mennonites a certificate under seal which recites the number of persons included in the application and the number of acres which they may include in their claim and location. That is the first section.

The next section provides that upon the agent presenting this certificate to the register of any land district he is permitted to locate in a compact body any tract of public land, not mineral, for each person named in the application, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres for each. This must necessarily be done by the agent, because the Mennonites themselves are not in a condition to make this application themselves; they have not arrived here; and do not propose to come here until their agent shall first have made this selection.

The third section describes how the location is to be made; that is, by filing with the register a declaratory statement for each person named in the list, describing the land located and paying to the receiver the fees which our laws require in homestead and pre-emption cases. The receiver gives a receipt for the fees to the agent, and describes therein the number of the declaratory statement and gives a description of the land, and delivers the same to the agent; and this receipt is the voucher for the declaratory statement and evidence of the payment of the fees.

The fourth section provides that the register is to forward to the General Land Office an abstract of all these declaratory statements so filed.

The fifth section is the important one to which I call the attention of the Senate. Any person named in the application has the exclusive right of entry of the lands described in the declaratory statement for the period of two years. If the entry is not made within that time the right lapses.

The next section provides that all questions of priority arising between actual settlers shall be adjusted under existing rules.

The seventh section provides that at the expiration of two years all lands not entered by the parties entitled under the provisions just stated are subject to entry by others.

The eighth section, as amended this morning, provides that no application shall include more than fifty thousand acres, and the aggregate of lands held under the declaratory statements shall not at any one time exceed three hundred thousand acres.

That is the sum and substance of this bill. The question is whether in view of the exigency Congress will grant this privilege to this religious sect. They live in compact bodies in Europe. They are naturally attached to their religion and customs and habits of life, and they want to live in compact bodies in this country. There is no worthier class of people upon the face of the globe. I hold in my hand a book which describes the articles of their faith, gives their history from the time of Menno Simon, the founder of the sect, and shows how they were persecuted in Europe because of their peculiar views, they, like the Quakers, being unwilling to bear arms; and the editor, at the close of this article giving the history of the Mennonites, says this of them:

> They are distinguished above all others for their plainness in dress, economy in domestic arrangements, being frugal, thrifty, and withal very hospitable. They take in strangers, treat them kindly without charge. They suffer none of their members to become a public charge.

Why, sir, we have had portions of this religious sect upon this continent for nearly two hundred years. They settled in Pennsylvania as early as 1683, under the invitation of William Penn. They number in the United States now probably seventy-five or one hundred thousand. There are settlements of them scattered through Pennsylvania, Virginia, Maryland, Ohio, Indiana, New York, and Canada; and everywhere wherever they are settled they are distinguished by those characteristics that were forcibly pointed out the other day by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.]

Now, Mr. President, the condition of our public domain I do not think forbids that we should make this small concession to these Mennonites. The Commissioner of the General Land Office in his last report to Congress states that the total area of the land States and Territories is 1,834,998,000 acres, and the total public domain which was surveyed up to the 30th day of June, 1873, was 616,554,000 acres, leaving yet to be surveyed 1,218,443,000 acres. During the last fiscal year the total amount of the cash sales of our public lands was 1,626,266 acres, and the number of homestead entries 3,793,612 acres, making a little less than five and a half millions of our public domain that were taken up by settlers under our pre-emption and homestead laws during the entire year. Now, supposing that there are fifty thousand Mennonites who under the invitation of this bill shall immigrate to this country, and supposing that each head of a family or each single man over twenty-one years of age shall get one hundred and sixty acres of land, the whole amount of the public domain that will be taken up under the provisions of this bill will be only one million six hundred thousand acres. That is but a small fraction of the thirty million acres which are annually surveyed. I do not know how we could more usefully dispose of this much of the public domain than by inducing this worthy people to convert these waste lands into productive farms.

Mr. President, in the few minutes that remain of the morning hour I do not care about going further into this subject. Certainly there is no more valuable class of immigrants that have come or will come to this country than these Mennonites. I think we ought to hold out this inducement to them. It is very certain that unless they are induced to come here by something like this bill they will go to Canada. The Canadian government has held out greater inducements to them to emigrate there than this bill proposes, and I do not think that the amendment of the Senator from Nevada improves it. I am informed by my friend on my right [Mr. WADLEIGH] that the Canadian government has sent over to Russia an agent for the purpose of holding out inducements to the Mennonites to emigrate to and settle in Canada.

Mr. CARPENTER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) I do not intend to take much time, but merely to state the reasons why I shall vote against this bill. I think it a very bad bill in principle; I am not speaking of its details or the amendments. It is certainly a new departure in our policy of settling this country. We have heretofore acted upon the theory that people of all nations might find their home with us, that we would furnish to all the same facilities, and that they should be distributed among and commingled with our people, and planted without discrimination all over the country. Now it is proposed to establish a foreign colony in this country. There is no objection to and there is no obstacle in the way of these men coming here and buying land, and they may buy it very nearly in a compact form now; but the design of this bill is to create a close corporation, to plant a foreign colony, and establish a compact foreign community in our body-politic.

Mr. President, such a proceeding can, it seems to me, bear no fruits but evil. It is setting a precedent which we must follow hereafter when other nationalities ask us to do the same thing. Suppose one hundred thousand Irish Catholics desire to settle in one county, upon what principle can we deny them such a law as this after we pass this one? Suppose one hundred thousand German Protestants desire to settle in the next county, upon what principle can we deny them the same privileges? Suppose twenty thousand French communists want to locate here in a compact community, would you grant them such a privilege? If we once enter upon this plan and establish this precedent where are we to stop? Upon what principle can we discriminate against any other nationality or sect?

Mr. President, in my judgment the principle of this bill would be the worst we could adopt, not only for our own interest but for the persons intended to be benefited. We do not desire to have a town or a county settled by any foreign nationality, speaking their own language, having their national amusements, and in all things separate and distinct from Americans. The idea is and should be, and it should never be departed from, that in inviting foreigners to settle in this country they should take their place with our citizens; they should come here not to be Germans or Frenchmen or Italians, but to be Americans, to become American citizens, to speak our language, to support our institutions, to be of us in all things.

Now certainly the greatest obstacle in the way of this result would be to give the different nationalities a separate and distinct location, as this bill proposes to do.

Mr. PRATT. I wish to inquire of the Senator, as he lives in the Northwest, whether it is not true already that the immigrants from the northern countries of Europe, the Swedes, for example, and the Norwegians, have in point of fact located in compact bodies in the Northwestern States, and whether any of the evil consequences which the Senator anticipates have followed from their settlement in compact bodies?

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, if that be so I see no necessity for such a bill as this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the Senator from Wisconsin be permitted to finish his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection permission will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask that the pending order be laid aside informally to finish this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We cannot finish it without taking the day.

Mr. WINDOM. I cannot help that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Leave is given to the Senator from Wisconsin to conclude his remarks, and at their conclusion the Senator from Minnesota can make his proposition.

Mr. CARPENTER. There is only one other point I wish to suggest for consideration. I understand this bill does not require these persons to become American citizens at any time. I understand that it authorizes them, without paying any money, to withdraw this vast body of land from public entry and hold it for two years.

Mr. PRATT. Will the Senator allow me to correct him right at that point? There is nothing in the bill of that kind. It requires them to conform to the existing laws.

Mr. CARPENTER. Does it require them to become American citizens within any given time?

Mr. PRATT. No person can enter a foot of the public land at present under either our homestead or pre-emption laws unless he be a citizen or has declared his intention to become such citizen.

Mr. CARPENTER. May he not become the owner of land by private entry without being a citizen?

Mr. PRATT. Under existing law?

Mr. CARPENTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRATT. I am not aware of any State in which he could hold it as a foreigner.

Mr. WINDOM. The bill does not change that. Foreigners can buy any land that is subject to private entry.

Mr. CARPENTER. An alien can do that, I suppose?

Mr. WINDOM. Certainly; if the lands are subject to private entry. But this bill does not extend that right.

Mr. CARPENTER. In most of the States foreigners are allowed to vote on merely declaring their intention to become citizens. But here is the point to which I wish to call attention and which was referred to the other day by some Senator, I think the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. FERRY;] that is, whether we can compel military service on the part of these people if we allow them to come here and settle as this bill proposes? The Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] maintained that we could, and to show that he referred to our statutes which declare that we will. That is all very well as a question of municipal law or internal policy, but the question is really an international question. The question is whether subjects of the Russian government settling here, without renouncing their allegiance to Russia, without declaring their intention to become American citizens, simply owning land, as all foreigners may do, can they be compelled by us to go into military service in case of war? The act of Congress says they must; I admit that. But the question is an international one, one as to which we must answer on the law of nations; and in my judgment it is a very grave question whether we can do this without giving offense to foreign nations; at all events without bringing us into complications with foreign nations.

In every point of view in which I can regard this bill I think it unfortunate. I think it unfortunate for the settlers themselves. I think it unfortunate for us and prejudicial in its influences and its consequences to our free institutions; and therefore I shall vote against it.

Mr. CAMERON. I trust we shall complete this bill, or try to complete it, before we take up another subject, and I rise for the purpose of asking the Senate to postpone the unfinished business for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to laying aside informally the special order for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the bill under discussion during the morning hour?

Mr. STOCKTON. If the proposition were a reasonable one I should not object to it, but it is manifest now that we are to have a great deal of discussion in reference to the bill which has been before the Senate this morning. The gentlemen in charge of it suggest that the Louisiana bill be laid aside until this bill be finished. If their impression is that such a bill as this is going to be finished while another bill is laid aside informally, I think they are very much mistaken. I agree in all the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] has said. I look upon this bill as a very bad one, a very dangerous one, and one without precedent; and as it must lead to considerable debate, it would not be right, I think, to ask that we lay aside the unfinished business informally, as if it were understood that the present bill would soon be finished. I think it cannot be finished to-day, nor in many days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the proposition.

Mr. STEWART. Before this passes away I should like to submit a modification of my amendment to be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order to print will be made.

Mr. CAMERON. If the Senator from New Jersey insists upon going on with the Louisiana question, on which he has the floor, of course courtesy will compel us to give way; but I am satisfied that if this bill was understood there would be no objection to it. All the argument of the Senator from Wisconsin has no effect on the bill. He seems to be mistaken in every particular of it. I think he can be convinced very readily, if we have time to go on with the bill; but of course I shall make no opposition to the wish of the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is entitled to the floor on the Louisiana question.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me a single moment to give a notice.

Mr. STOCKTON. I will in a moment, after I reply to the Senator from Pennsylvania. I do not wish to be put in the position in which my friend from Pennsylvania places me. I do not intend to go on this morning at all; but having the floor, I propose, with the consent of the Senate, to yield it to a gentleman who does wish to speak as soon as the Louisiana bill comes up. Therefore I did not rise from any personal consideration or to occupy the time of the Senate; but I did rise to tell gentlemen what I believe to be the simple facts. I wish to notify them that I intend to speak against this Mennonite bill myself. I know other gentlemen around me intend to do it. I wish, therefore, to suggest to them that it is not right to bring it up in the place of another bill on the supposition that it can soon be finished. If gentlemen wish to take a vote I have no objection; but I suggest that is not the proper way to act in reference to a bill which is evidently a contested bill.

THE TRANSPORTATION QUESTION.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to give notice that on Friday next I will present the report of the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board, and after doing so I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate at one o'clock of that day to make some remarks explanatory of the report.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 3088) to extend the time for completing entries on Osage Indian lands in Kansas; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3090) to authorize the issue of duplicate agricultural land scrip where the original has been lost or destroyed.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 3029) to provide for the relief of the persons suffering from the overflow of the Lower Mississippi River;

A bill (H. R. No. 2885) to remove the disabilities of David Telfair, of North Carolina, and Charles H. McBlair, of Maryland.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2350) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificate of registry and enrollment to the schooner Almina and changing the name to Minnie Davis;

A bill (H. R. No. 2885) to remove the disabilities of Charles H. McBlair, of Maryland; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3029) to provide for the relief of persons suffering from the overflow of the Lower Mississippi River.

STATE OF LOUISIANA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 446) to restore the rights of the State of Louisiana, the question being on the amendment offered by Mr. BAYARD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STOCKTON. With the permission of the Senate, I will yield the floor to the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] who wishes to address the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I avail myself of the courtesy of my friend from New Jersey, [Mr. STOCKTON,] who was entitled to the floor, to submit some remarks upon the condition of affairs in the State of Louisiana. I said a few days ago, when a motion was pending to take up this measure, that in my opinion no question more important was likely to come before the Senate at the present session; and I now repeat that, in my judgment, no question more vitally affecting, not only the welfare of the people of Louisiana, but the future destinies of the people of this whole country, is likely to come before the Senate in the near future than is presented in the question now under consideration.

Sir, it involves the inquiry and forces the consideration upon us how far the Federal Government, or any Department of the Government, may go in interfering with the affairs of the States of this Union. The position of affairs in Louisiana to-day is the result, the natural, necessary, legitimate result, of improper interference on the part of the Executive of this country with affairs in that State and with the local government of that State.

The further inquiry is forced upon us how long the liberties of the people of this country, in the selection of their own agents in the management of their own local governments, can exist unless something is done by the Senate and by Congress to rebuke the unwarranted action of the Executive in interfering with the condition of affairs in the State of Louisiana.

If we remain silent, indifferent, idle spectators, and see the tyranny and usurpation which has been set up by Federal power continued over the people of Louisiana, we are inviting in other States of this Union similar action on the part of the Executive, and may reap in our own experience the consequences of such action. Therefore I said the other day, and I now repeat, that no question of greater importance is likely to come before the Senate for its consideration than that presented by the bill and the amendment now before this body; and because of its importance I propose to submit some remarks upon it, promising the Senate that I shall detain them but a very short time.

Nothing but a sense of public duty would induce me to participate at all in this discussion. The discussion has been so ample and exhaustive that nothing new can be added to what has been already so well said by Senators who have spoken. The report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections at the last session, and the arguments then had in this Chamber, supplemented as they have been by unanswerable arguments made at the present session by several Senators, have exposed in its true light the great wrong inflicted upon the people of Louisiana.

I do not hope to add a single word that will impress any one not already convinced of the imperative duty of Congress to interpose for the relief of the people of that State. Yet I may not be silent. We on this side of the Chamber have not the power to break the chains that fetter the liberties of the people of a sovereign State of the Union and unloose the grasp of the tyranny that oppresses them. We can, however, assure them of our sympathies and utter a protest against their wrongs. We can appeal to the majority in this Chamber, intrusted for the present at least with the destinies of the country, to interpose in their behalf and do something for their relief. We can call upon the country to bear witness that these wrongs have been perpetrated under republican auspices and by republican influences. We can record our protests and utter our determination, if restored to power in the Government, to undo the great injustice to that State, and to wipe out the reproach upon our institutions and our republican form of government, and guard against the recurrence of similar events in the future. This is our duty. This for the present is our mission. The responsibility for the continuance of the usurpation now existing in Louisiana must rest with the majority in this Chamber and in the other House of Congress.

That responsibility they cannot escape nor devolve upon others. They may fail to meet and discharge the duty imposed upon them, but cannot escape the condemnation which will be sure to follow an omission to perform it. In order that we may see how imperative the demand upon the majority on this floor to do something for the relief of the people of that State let us look at their condition to-day. A government has been foisted upon them without their consent and in opposition to their protests. Local government of their choice has been denied them, and they are compelled to submit to rulers who are eating out their substance, trampling on their liberties, destroying the value of their property, and reducing them to poverty. The condition of things now existing in Louisiana would not be tolerated in any province or appendage of any European monarchy. England or Germany or Russia would not suffer any of their subjects to be deprived of their just rights and robbed of their estates without bringing to speedy and condign punishment the perpetrators of the wrong.

We have heard of the oppression of Ireland; but her saddest tale of injustice tells not of wrongs so great as are now perpetrated in one of our sister States, wrongs which go unpunished and unredressed, and which, I am sorry to say, seem not to awaken the least sympathy in the mind of Senators who have the power and ought to apply the remedy.

In fact, Mr. President, leading Senators upon this floor, belonging to the dominant party, instead of denouncing the Kellogg usurpation and using their influence to remove it from the State, have become its defenders, and are doing all in their power to perpetuate its existence. Twelve months ago the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] stood prominently forth as the open defender of the usurpation; but now the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] becomes even more emphatic, and pronounces judgment in favor of the usurpation, not on the ground of expediency alone, not because it has been recognized by the State courts and by the President and the House of Representatives, but upon the claim which he sets up of its rightful existence.

The Senator, who is a lawyer, and a good one, saw that it would not do to rest the claim of the usurpation upon the grounds urged by the Senator from Indiana, namely, recognition by the President, by the House of Representatives, and by the State courts of Louisiana. This he saw might all be true, and Kellogg's government still be a fraud and tyranny and usurpation, and in the public mind unworthy of respect. He knew full well that before it was entitled to recognition by this body it must present some claim of having been elected by the votes actually cast at the election. The position of the Senator from Indiana might satisfy the mind of the average party politician, but the Senator from New Jersey knew it would not satisfy the honest thinking men of the country, who respect right and justice more than party, and who would look with no favor upon a usurpation with no higher claim to respect than the mere recognition of party friends. The Senator also knew full well that it would not do to attempt the justification of the Kellogg usurpation upon the allegation that but for frauds in the election Kellogg and his legislature would have been elected. Such an allegation he knew could not reconcile the common judgment of the country to a government set up and sustained alone by Federal power. He doubtless had often in his own State attributed the defeat of his party to frauds practiced by his opponents; and he perhaps believed, what almost everybody else believed, that in Philadelphia, and perhaps in other parts of Pennsylvania, there had not been a fair election for twelve or fifteen years, and that his own party had been kept in power in Philadelphia especially by the most flagrant frauds practiced upon the ballot-box—frauds so open and notorious, that it has become a common proverb that majorities in Philadelphia are manufactured by personating and counting out and counting in according to the requirements of party exigency.

The Senator is too good a lawyer to rest the justification of the usurpation on either or both these grounds. He knew it could not be sustained by public sentiment in the country unless it could present some other claim to confidence. He knew it must have some legal status arising out of the votes cast at the election, or be condemned by the judgment of all honest men as a usurpation which ought not to be tolerated by this Senate.

The Senator also knew that it would not answer to rest the legal status of the usurpation upon the return of the Lynch board of supervisors. First, because no member of that board except John Lynch had ever been legally authorized under any law to act as a member of a returning board. Secondly, he knew that the law which created the Lynch board or any other board existing prior to November 20, 1872, had on that day been repealed and superseded by the law under which the De Feriet board was created, and that no board except the De Feriet board had any legal right to count any returns. Thirdly, the Senator knew that if the Lynch board had been in existence it never had a single return before it, and could not therefore count the proper return. It would not, therefore, do to place the legal status of the usurpation upon anything done by that board which based its returns upon rumors and estimates and forged affidavits. Nothing short of evidence arising out of the votes actually cast at the election could avail to clothe the Kellogg government with the semblance of legality, or justify the action of the Senate in refusing to remove its tyranny from the people of Louisiana.

Unless such evidence could be found Kellogg and his party were usurpers, and the duty of the Senate is imperative to remove them at once and to restore to the people of the State the government of their choice, of which they are now deprived. Impressed with this necessity the Senator from New Jersey goes to work to find, if possible, the evidence that Kellogg and his legislature were elected by the votes actually cast at the election. The Senator from Indiana had not attempted to do this. He knew it could not be done. He was a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections; had seen the returns of the election, had seen them added up, and knew from a personal examination of the election returns, as well as from testimony taken before the committee, that McEnery and the fusion legislature had a majority of about ten thousand in the vote actually cast, and he could not and would not and did not venture to assert that Kellogg was elected by a majority of the votes cast.

The Senator from New Jersey, by a process of reasoning satisfactory doubtless to himself, has discovered evidence which he brings forward to prove that Kellogg and his legislature were elected by a majority of the votes cast at the election.

Let us see what that evidence is. The Senator's first evidence is what he terms "moral evidence." I suppose by that he means the impression which certain facts created upon his mind; but I would say to the Senator from New Jersey if that is what he means by moral evidence, the same state of facts might make very different impressions upon different minds. But in order that I may not do injustice to the Senator I will read his remarks and the grounds upon which he bases or from which he derives the moral evidence which he brings up to support the claims of the Kellogg usurpation. In his speech delivered in the Senate April 14, 1874, the Senator says:

> I submit that the moral evidence that McEnery had not a majority of the legal votes cast, and that consequently Kellogg had, is to my mind irresistible.

I desire to read now the grounds upon which he bases that moral evidence, or from which it is derived. He says, and I read his words:

> Warmoth had the purpose, the intent, to carry that election by fraud. This is apparent, and is conceded.

Well, Mr. President, I do not know that Warmoth has conceded that such wash is purpose, and it is a very difficult matter to determine what a man's intention may be unless it is avowed. I do not know who has constituted the Senator from New Jersey or any other Senator a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart, that he can come into this Senate and assert positively, unequivocally, that Warmoth even, whom I shall not attempt to defend in this discussion, had the intention to cheat and to defraud. But I suppose it is inferred from what follows:

> It is notorious that he, elected a republican, was to give the State to the democracy, and as a return was to grace the United States Senate.

That is one of the facts stated out of which this moral evidence arises.

He says further:

> His legislature, I understand, attempted to elect him, but this project was abandoned because it was thought it would interfere with the recognition of the State government by the General Government.

That also is one of the facts from which this moral evidence arises. He proceeds:

> He appointed a man named Blanchard to be register.

I do not know that that would convict Warmoth either of an intention to cheat anybody, or of a desire to go to the Senate of the United States. Again:

> That man—

That is, Blanchard—

> has made an affidavit. If the affidavit be true his character is such that no one can approve; if it be untrue, comment is unnecessary. Blanchard appointed the supervisors in each parish or county, and the supervisor in each parish appointed three commissioners. To these were added three freeholders, who, with the commissioners, assisted the supervisors of the parish in counting the votes of the precincts. And we see at a glance that Warmoth could cheat Kellogg, but that Kellogg could not cheat Warmoth or McEnery. One could cheat. The organization of the election throughout the whole State originated with, and was controlled by, Warmoth. It is not denied that Warmoth meant fraud, and that he had the power to effect it. There was one circumstance which afforded great facility in carrying out this fraud. Almost every republican that came to the polls to be registered had a mark on him which said "I belong to the republican party;" he was a colored man. There were exceptions. There were some white republicans, but they were not so numerous that they were not known, so that it was an easy thing to make it difficult to get registration, or to secure the requisite identification between the voter and his registration papers.

And then the Senator goes on to suggest that Warmoth ought to have called together twenty men, ten democrats and ten republicans, and placed the returns before them to be counted; and he concludes:

Now, Mr. President, when one bent on fraud has it in his power to prove to a demonstration that his candidate is elected and shirks the investigation, it is moral evidence, irresistible, that the investigation would have proven that his candidate was defeated.

These are the grounds from which the Senator from New Jersey derives the moral evidence which he brings here to uphold and support the usurpation and tyranny of Mr. Kellogg. I submit, Mr. President, that there is nothing in the facts which he has related which establishes any evidence, of any character whatever, either that McEnery was elected or that Kellogg was.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator's mode of argumentation is most difficult to comprehend; but if I understand the logic of the Senator and the facts upon which he relies as furnishing moral evidence that Kellogg had a majority of the votes cast, stripped of verbiage it is this: that because Warmoth had the disposition, as the Senator alleges, to cheat Kellogg, and the power to cheat Kellogg, and Kellogg had no power to cheat Warmoth, and because the latter, who had the legal custody of the election returns, did not violate law and his sworn duty and do what no one ever proposed and perhaps no one ever thought about—call together twenty unauthorized men and hand over the returns to them to count and add up, it is moral evidence irresistible that a majority of the votes cast at the election were in favor of Kellogg.

I submit to the Senator that his process of reasoning may be novel and is novel, but his logic is not very apparent, and I am sure did not have the effect upon other minds which it seems to have upon his, to prove irresistibly that Kellogg, the usurper, was elected.

But, Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey, not willing to risk the legality of the usurpation on the moral evidence which he brings forward, goes a step further, and asserts without qualification that Kellogg had a majority of the legal votes cast. The Senator comes to this conclusion by ignoring the returns made by the election officers, and entering into calculations based principally upon the registration of colored voters in certain parishes without any proof that in those parishes any more persons voted for Kellogg than were returned. He substitutes estimates of what the republican vote ought to have been if every negro had voted that day, and voted for Kellogg, for the return of the votes actually cast, and from that process of reasoning concludes that Kellogg had a majority of the votes polled. Well, that is an easy way to carry an election, much easier than by any other process.

Many an election has been carried by calculation in advance of the day of election, but I submit it is not a very reliable mode of determining the result of elections. By this process both parties frequently carry an election in a State long before the ballots are counted—sometimes for months before the day of election—but like all other human calculations how often are they doomed to disappointment! If the Senator has not had some experience in that line he has been a very fortunate man.

This is the kind of evidence which the Senator adduces to prove his proposition that Kellogg had a majority of the votes cast.

But what say the returns, the only evidence which the law recognizes as being legal proof of the result of the election? They were before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, composed at that time exclusively of republicans. They were counted by the committee, and we will hear what they say about the result.

The majority of that committee, composed of the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER,] the Senator from Rhode Island now in the chair, [Mr. ANTHONY,] the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] and the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ALCORN,] say:

Your committee are, therefore, led to the conclusion that, if the election held in November, 1872, be not absolutely void for frauds committed therein, McEnery and his associates in State offices, and the persons certified as members of the Legislature by the De Feriet board, ought to be recognized as the legal government of the State.

* * * * * * *

If the Senate should be inclined not to go behind the official returns of the election, then the McEnery government and legislature must be recognized as the lawful government of the State, and McMillen, if regularly elected by that legislature, should be seated in the Senate in place of Kellogg.

That is what the majority of the committee say in reference to the returns of the election. They do not give the exact majority for McEnery, but Mr. Trumbull, who made a separate report, says that the average majority for the fusion ticket, headed by McEnery, was about 10,000. Every member of the committee but the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON]—and he does not deny it—say that according to the official returns McEnery was elected.

With the returns of the De Feriet board corroborated by the statement of the committee of this body who examined and counted the returns, a committee composed of republicans whose sympathies were not with McEnery, it is too late for the Senator from New Jersey to undertake to prove by his moral evidence, or his calculation, that Kellogg had a majority of the votes cast at the election. Nobody will believe it except the Senator himself. No, sir; Kellogg's government is a usurpation—a vile, flagrant tyranny set up and maintained by Federal power over the people of Louisiana. I need not go into its history; it is known by every Senator on this floor, and by almost everybody in the country. It is a standing reproach to our republican system of government, a blur and stain on free institutions, and a disgrace and dishonor to the American name.

I have said it was set up and maintained by Federal power. Is that not true? Hear what the committee say on this point. I speak of the majority of the committee. On page 28 of the report they say:

But for the interference of Judge Durell in the matter of this State election, a matter wholly beyond his jurisdiction, the McEnery government would to-day have been the de facto government of the State. Judge Durell interposed the Army of the United States between the people of Louisiana and the only government which has the semblance of regularity, and the result of this has been to establish the Kellogg government, so far as that State now has any government.

The interference of Durell and the Army of the United States is what established the usurpation, according to the testimony of four of the leading republican Senators on this floor. They further say, on page 44:

Your committee are, therefore, led to the conclusion that, if the election held in November, 1872, be not absolutely void for frauds committed therein, McEnery and his associates in State offices, and the persons certified as members of the Legislature by the De Feriet board, ought to be recognized as the legal government of the State.

Never in the history of a free people was there a more deliberate and persistent purpose to defeat the will of the people or deprive them of their liberties; no language can adequately portray the enormity of the wrong or express the full measure of guilt that attaches to the chief plotters of the treason against Louisiana. Posterity will judge this matter aright when the partisan passions of the hour have passed away. To-day a sovereign State of this Union is ruled by a usurper who but for the protection of Federal bayonets would be hanging on a gibbet or fleeing from the wrath and indignation of an outraged people. But let us turn to the record; let us see how this has been accomplished. The chosen representatives of the people were gathering at the capital to discharge the trusts devolved upon them when Federal officials, instigated by bold, bad men, interposed to prevent their meeting. Judge Durell, on the night of December 5, issued his abominable order that will link his name forever with infamy, and, under the pretense of executing that order, a willing marshal surrounded and, assisted by Federal troops, seized the State-house and prevented the meeting of the Legislature.

I will read that order. It is as follows:

Now, therefore, in order to prevent the further obstruction of the proceedings in this cause, and further, to prevent a violation of the orders of this court, to the imminent danger of disturbing the public peace, it is hereby ordered that the marshal of the United States for the district of Louisiana shall forthwith take possession of the building known as the Mechanics' Institute, and occupied as the State-house for the assembling of the Legislature therein, in the city of New Orleans, and hold the same subject to the further order of this court, and meanwhile to prevent all unlawful assemblage therein under the guise or pretext of authority claimed by virtue of pretended canvass and returns made by said pretended returning officers in contempt and violation of said restraining order; but the marshal is directed to allow the ingress and egress to and from the public offices in said building of persons entitled to the same.

E. H. DURELL.

That order will go down to posterity and be read by men in after ages as one of the most unjustifiable interferences by a Federal official with the local affairs of a State that ever occurred, and as an order which an American President had executed. Now I will call attention to what the majority of the committee say in reference to that order:

It is impossible to conceive of a more irregular, illegal, and in every way inexcusable act on the part of a judge. Conceding the power of the court to make such an order, the judge, out of court, had no more authority to make it than had the marshal. It has not even the form of judicial process. It was not sealed, nor was it signed by the clerk, and had no more legal effect than an order issued by any private citizen.

That is what the committee say in reference to that order. And I call attention to their comments, because the enforcement of that illegal order is made the excuse for the interposition of the military power of the Government whereby Kellogg and his associates in crime have been placed in power over the people of Louisiana. Possessing power by such means, how unreasonable the objection now interposed, that because of their being in power and having exercised power for twelve months, it would be wrong on the part of this Senate and of this Congress to interfere to dispossess them! I want to call attention emphatically to what the Senator from Indiana says in reference to that order, the results of which he is now defending and trying to uphold:

The conduct of Judge Durell—

Says the Senator from Indiana—

The conduct of Judge Durell, sitting in the circuit court of the United States, cannot be justified or defended. He grossly exceeded his jurisdiction, and assumed the exercise of powers to which he could lay no claim. The only authority he had in the matter grew out of the act of Congress of 1870 to enforce the fifteenth amendment, and the act amendatory of that, passed in 1871, which gave to the courts of the United States jurisdiction in all cases in law and equity arising under the former act.

That is what the Senator from Indiana says about this order, which was enforced by Federal power, that it could not be justified or defended. That, sir, is exactly what I now say, not only with reference to the order but with reference to every result of that order, everything that has grown out of it. There is not a single thing connected with that order that can be defended; neither the interference of the President of the United States by Federal power to enforce it, nor the Kellogg government which by aid of the Federal power has been set up to trample upon the liberties of the people of Louisiana. Neither can be justified nor defended, any more than the issuance of the order so strongly condemned by the Senator from Indiana.

Now, sir, after that order was issued, the United States marshal having been instructed on the 3d of December by a telegram from the Attorney-General to enforce the mandates of the district court and protected by Federal soldiery, the marshal took possession of the State-house, excluded McEnery and the members of the fusion legislature, and gave access to Kellogg and his men. These men, as well as Kellogg, repudiated by the people, assembled in the building used as the State-house, and declared themselves the legal Legislature of Louisiana. To secure themselves in the places they had thus usurped Kellogg and his minions sent telegrams to President Grant for military support, imploring him by considerations which should have had no weight with the Executive to support and recognize the usurpation.

The considerations that were presented to the President for his action were appeals to party interests. The telegrams that were sent by Kellogg, by Casey, by Packard, addressed to the President or to the Attorney-General, all of them, appealed to party feelings. What, sir, would the earlier Presidents of this Republic have thought of such appeals to them? What would General Jackson have thought of such appeals? He would have spurned with contempt the men who would have dared approach him with appeals, in a grave matter of that kind, addressed to party interest and party feeling. I am not sure that, with a full knowledge of the condition of affairs in the State of Louisiana, had he been President, he would not have hung Kellogg and his co-conspirators as high as Haman; and if he had, I think he would have served them right. Surrounded as the President was at the time by evil-minded counselors, unfortunately for his own fame as well as for the people of Louisiana he yielded to the partisan appeals that were made to him for interference and recognition of this usurpation, and directed the following dispatch to be sent to Pinchback, who was one of the conspirators in this business. I will read that dispatch to Pinchback:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, December 12, 1872.

Acting Governor PINCHBACK, New Orleans, Louisiana:

Let it be understood that you are recognized by the President as the lawful executive of Louisiana, and that the body assembled at Mechanics' Institute is the lawful Legislature of the State; and it is suggested that you make proclamation to that effect, and also that all necessary assistance will be given to you and the Legislature herein recognized to protect the State from disorder and violence.

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

There was the recognition which had been coveted; which had been sought by Pinchback, Kellogg, Casey, and the marshal. The President directs him to make proclamation, "let it be understood," that he is recognized as the lawful executive, and the Kellogg legislature as the lawful Legislature of the State. Thus was the usurpation set up over the people of Louisiana.

The issuance of the Durell order and the military support afforded by the President have fastened the usurpation upon the State to the present day. But for the recognition of the Pinchback-Kellogg usurpation by the President and the aid afforded it by Federal troops, it would have disappeared in less than ten days. That is the testimony of the majority of the committee in their report, to which I have referred heretofore.

These are some of the means used to inaugurate and perpetuate the great wrong. I regret the participation of the President in the matter, both on his own account and on account of the high office he fills. While I have never been an admirer of President Grant, I have respected him as the Chief Magistrate of this great country, and would have been glad to have seen him retire from the office he fills with civic honors even more enduring than those he won upon the field.

The President was unfortunate in his counselors. They cared apparently less for his fame than for the accomplishment of their own party schemes; and bitterly, no doubt, has the President regretted the great blunder he made in this matter. But a false step once taken is hard to retrace.

Let us turn now for a few moments to the results of this usurpation upon the State, and the prosperity and happiness of her people.

Naturally rich in all the elements of material wealth, Louisiana was rapidly recuperating from the ravages and wastings of civil war, and despite the bad government forced upon her under the reconstruction acts of Congress, and notwithstanding the disorganized condition of her labor system, the State had already assumed an appearance of prosperity that foreshadowed the future and increasing wealth of her people. With a soil unsurpassed in fertility, and adapted to the growth of the most profitable products of the earth, nothing was wanting but honest government and an improved system of labor to make her prosperity assured. The location of her principal city pointed it out as one of the future chief commercial marts of this whole continent. The Mississippi with its tributaries poured their rich tribute at her feet, while domestic and foreign commerce was destined to bear the rich harvests gathered into her stores to other parts of our own country, or to less favored lands abroad.

But what is the condition of Louisiana to-day? What boots her natural advantages while the liberties of her people are trodden under foot? Robbed and despoiled of their substance by the cormorants that prey upon the State, their estates are literally confiscated by the onerous taxes that oppress them and the consequent depreciation of their lands, which are rendered unsalable and valueless. I was told by a gentleman reputed to be the largest agriculturist in the State, if not in the country, living below New Orleans on the Mississippi River, that his plantation, which had cost him over $700,000 and was equal in fertility to any in the world, had been rendered comparatively worthless by the condition of things in the State. Adapted to the growth of rice, cotton, and the sugar-cane, as well as tropical fruits, with a sugar refinery upon it that cost him $100,000 and one hundred acres in bearing orange trees, he expressed great doubt whether he could sell his plantation for what it cost him to erect his refinery, and stated that he realized from it, though living upon it and giving his personal attention to its cultivation, a bare subsistence for his family after paying the taxes to which he was subject.

Such is the condition of the agriculturist throughout the State, while trade and business have in a great measure been driven from the streets and wharves of New Orleans. The spirit and enterprise of her denizens have been broken, and capital refuses to be employed where it is liable to practical confiscation. Notwithstanding the natural advantages of Louisiana in all the elements of wealth, her people are becoming poor and discouraged; and her young men and others who can do so are leaving the State, which will ultimately become another San Domingo or Jamaica unless something is done to restore to the people wholesome and legitimate government. I clip from a recent paper the following statement of the condition of things in Louisiana:

The once rich and prosperous State of Louisiana has been so plundered by the thieves into whose hands she has fallen that she is fairly reduced to beggary and destitution, and the formerly wealthy and gay city of New Orleans is mourning in dust and ashes. A letter from a merchant of that city to his correspondent in Boston, speaking entirely of business prospects, and having no reference whatever to political matters, with which the writer does not meddle, states that there are now more than six thousand houses and stores to let in the old Crescent City which can be hired for the taxes which are levied upon them, but the tax is a very heavy one; and the terrible financial robberies which have been perpetrated upon the city's means, and the unprecedented taxes have been so severe and disheartening, that the population of New Orleans has decreased thirty thousand the last two years. It was the misfortune of Louisiana that she had two sets of carpet-bagging vampires to feed upon her life-blood, neither of which exceeded the other in rapacity of plunder, and neither would have been exceeded in this by the whole horde of pirates which at one time swept the Gulf and the waters of the adjacent islands, with the black flag at their mast-heads, seizing upon every vessel that came within sight of them.

With this condition of affairs existing in Louisiana, the rights of the people denied them, local government destroyed, and a tyranny and despotism enthroned by Federal power, and the throne of the tyrant surrounded and propped by Federal bayonets, will this Senate remain silent, or will it interpose and strike off the fetters that bind the people of that State, and once more secure them the privileges of freemen?

Mr. President, the condition of this State appeals to-day to the Senate, and demands of us some action that shall remove from her people the oppression which is now upon them and once more restore them to the rights and privileges to which they are entitled under their constitution and under the Constitution of the United States. But how is this appeal met? Those who can control the legislation of this body seem apparently indifferent to this condition of affairs in Louisiana; and some of them, I am sorry to say, interpose objections to every measure that can be brought forward for the relief of the people of Louisiana. As soon as we begin to talk of interfering for the purpose of removing this usurpation from the State, we are at once met by various objections. One of them is a want of constitutional power, and the apprehension that any interference on the part of Congress would be productive of very sad and grave consequences to other States in this Union. I am not in favor of the exercise of any power that is not clearly and distinctly warranted by the Constitution of the United States. I believe it is the highest duty of American statesmen to guard implicitly and strictly that charter of our liberties; and I am sure that the voice of the party to which I belong has been for years loud in its protests against every violation of the Constitution, while I am equally aware that there has not been that respect paid to that instrument by those who of late years have controlled the destinies of the country that ought to have been paid to it.

I am not in favor of the exercise of any power in behalf of Louisiana which does not spring clearly out of the Constitution. We should guard that instrument vigilantly, because it is from it and from the rights which it guarantees to us as American citizens and to the States of this Union that we must look for protection in the future. I would not invade that instrument even for the purpose of relieving the distressed people of Louisiana whose condition appeals so strongly to the sympathies of every humane heart. But, sir, there was power to set up the tyranny. There was power found somewhere to do that; I do not say it was found in the Constitution; but I think there can be power found, without violating the Constitution, to dethrone the tyrant. Suppose a horde of men should have come over from Mexico into Texas, or even to New Orleans, and seized upon the government of that State and that one should proclaim himself the head of the executive department of the State, and that a band of robbers should claim to be the legislators of the State, is there no power under the Constitution to remove them? Most clearly there is. I do not say that you can set up a State government in Louisiana, but I do say that you can tear down the throne of a tyrant wherever it is erected. You need not exercise any power that is denied by the Constitution. All that is necessary is to enact into law the amendment offered by my colleague upon this floor, directing the President to withdraw the force of the United States from New Orleans. If we should direct him to withdraw the aid which he is now giving to Kellogg and his usurpation, there would be an end of the difficulty. The people of Louisiana, unless they have lost the instincts of manhood, would assert their rights, and before the indignation of that outraged people Kellogg would fly from the country or take refuge under the shadow of the White House or of this capital. He would not stay long in Louisiana, notwithstanding he is now, as I am informed, trying to protect and guard himself by State militia trained under Longstreet, into whose hands he has placed arms for the purpose of maintaining him in power, provided the Congress of the United States should direct the President to withdraw the Federal troops which are now his body-guard. That is all the power that is required for the relief of Louisiana. Pass the amendment to this bill and then, sir, we shall see whether the people of Louisiana will not settle their own domestic concerns in their own way.

But, Mr. President, another objection which has been raised to any interference with the condition of affairs in Louisiana is that it would be giving countenance to fraud. That was the burden of the speech of the Senator from Indiana the other day, after the amendment to this bill was offered and an able speech made in support of the measure. The Senator from Indiana could not suffer that amendment and that speech to go out without again raising his voice against the McEnery government. He seemed to think that the adoption of that measure would be to set up a fraud, and he was loud and eloquent in his declamations against the frauds, as he calls them, that had been practiced by Warmoth, and McEnery, and others. In order to prove that frauds existed he quoted from the report of the committee, which declares that McEnery was elected, that in the opinion of the members of the committee there had been fraud. There is no proof in that report establishing the fact that there had been fraud; but the Senator finds the opinion of four gentlemen of this Senate, his own party friends, who while they proclaim that McEnery was elected, also express the opinion that if it had not been for frauds Kellogg would have been elected; and upon that he bases his eloquent remarks in opposition to fraud. Sir, I am not in favor of fraud anywhere. It ought not to exist in elections in Louisiana or in Indiana. It ought not to exist in elections or in the affairs of political or private life. It ought to be condemned, and must be condemned, everywhere. But have there been no frauds committed by Kellogg, who is defended by the Senator from Indiana? Is not his government a fraud as well as a usurpation? And now when it is proposed to remove that fraud and that usurpation we are met with the cry of fraud by Senators who are in favor of continuing the greatest fraud known to American history.

Suppose there had been frauds, does that justify the continuance of the Kellogg government which was conceived in fraud and which was born in iniquity? Suppose that Warmoth had committed fraud, or had intended to commit fraud, does that justify the Senate in upholding what is an acknowledged gross usurpation and a gross fraud upon the rights and liberties of the people of Louisiana? Certainly not. But if there had been frauds, provided Mr. McEnery and the fusion legislature were elected by the votes cast in conformity with the laws and constitution of the State, I ask the Senator from Indiana where is the power of the Senate to go behind the fact of their election in conformity with the requirements of the constitution and laws of Louisiana? That is a claim set up by the Senator, at least by implication, which I think has not heretofore found countenance in the Senate. Suppose there was an election carried in Indiana and an allegation made that it was carried by fraud, would the Senator from Indiana suppose that by reason of that allegation, even if it was clear to the minds of everybody that there had been frauds practiced, would that fact justify the Senate of the United States in interfering with the affairs of the State of Indiana and displacing or keeping out of power the man who according to the constitution and laws of the State had been elected, or who according to all legal and constitutional requirements appeared to have been elected? Would that justify the Federal Government, or the Congress of the United States, to interfere and displace that legally constituted government and to set up a government acknowledged to have been defeated? Why, sir, the democratic party never carries an election but what allegations of fraud are made; and perhaps on our side we sometimes charge that frauds are practiced when we lose a victory in a State. It will not do to say that because McEnery may have been elected by fraud, therefore he shall not have his place; that he shall not be placed in office, or that the Legislature that was elected with him shall not be recognized as the legal Legislature.

But now in reference to the existence of this fraud. I have said that the majority of the committee, while they expressed the opinion that great fraud did exist—and I say frankly that I have no doubt there were frauds to some extent committed by both parties, not to the extent, I apprehend, which the Senators on the other side allege, but I have no doubt there were some, for I apprehend that there is scarcely an election held in any State of this Union but what there are frauds more or less practiced—but was there such apparent fraud, such enormous fraud, practiced in Louisiana as is alleged to have existed by the Senator from Indiana? Now it so happens that Judge Trumbull was a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that he made a separate report; and while the majority of the committee did not give the details and did not give the evidence upon which they rested the opinion that there had been fraud, yet Judge Trumbull in his report refers to the evidence by which the allegation of fraud was attempted to be supported; and I will read what he says on that subject:

If it were admitted—

Says Mr. Trumbull—

If it were admitted, as it is not, that Congress has authority to inquire into the fairness and regularity of a State election, it is denied that there was any such fraud in the late Louisiana election as would justify setting it aside. It was confessedly one of the most quiet and peaceful elections ever held in the State, and the evidence shows that it was substantially free and fair.

The vote polled was 20,000 larger than ever before cast in the State, and against more than two-thirds of it no complaint of unfairness is even alleged.

S. B. Packard, United States marshal for the district of Louisiana, was chairman of the republican State executive committee, and his office in the custom-house was the headquarters of the organization of which he was one, if not the leading spirit. He appointed from one to four special deputy marshals in every parish and upward of six hundred in New Orleans, who were to be at the polls. Some of them served for seventy days; and he made requisitions on the Attorney-General, previous to the election, for the money to pay the deputy marshals and United States supervisors. Under the law one of the two United States supervisors appointed by the court is selected from each party, but in appointing his special deputies United States Marshal Packard confined himself exclusively to his own party so far as the testimony shows. This United States marshal and chairman of the republican executive committee issued instructions to the republican United States supervisor in each parish in regard to the supervision of the vote for State and local officers, but gave no such instructions to the supervisor appointed on the fusion side. With all the sources of information which the hundreds of his subordinates scattered through the State and his position as United States marshal and chairman of the State republican executive committee afforded him, Packard testified before the committee that "in a majority of the parishes, in my judgment, the election was as fair as you usually have it in any State election.

"Rapides and Natchitoches, I should say, were the two worst. Then I would add Madison, Caddo, and Bossier, and East Baton Rouge; a portion of the returns for West Baton Rouge.

"A. Those parishes I have named were the worst cases.

"Q. Seven of these cases?

"A. Yes, sir. There is also the parish of Assumption, which I believe to be a republican parish, which went about 700 republican in 1870, is returned differently.

"Q. I want to know about how many there were in which there were notorious charges of fraud, such as are not usually made in elections?

"A. That is the number, or about the number."

That is what Packard, the co-conspirator of Kellogg, said. These parishes that he had named were about the number. He adds:

"It would increase the number perhaps ten or fifteen if I were to add those in which I believed the returns were not in accordance with the facts."

Taking his statement with the caution which his character and position suggest, where is the proof of enormous frauds?

That is the testimony of the marshal in reference to this question of fraud, testimony which doubtless was highly colored and exaggerated in order to justify the wrong committed. Now I wish to quote what the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] says in his report, not on the question of fraud, but to show what he considers the law in reference to the power of the Senate to go behind the returns and to inquire into frauds that existed at the election.

When the constitution of a State—

Says the Senator in his report—

When the constitution of a State provides that each house of its Legislature shall be the judge of its election and qualification of its members, full faith and credit must be given to their action; and should the Government of the United States go behind their action to inquire whether the members have been lawfully elected to the Legislature, their independence would be wholly destroyed and the validity of their action made to depend upon the will of Congress.

I think the Senator from Indiana announces the law correctly on that point; and so I say, even admitting that there were frauds, that does not justify the exclusion of Mr. McEnery from the office of governor or the members who were elected on the fusion ticket to the Legislature from acting as legislators; much less would it justify the setting up and maintaining by Federal power of any man as governor or any set of men as the Legislature who confessedly were not elected, and who it is admitted by the reports made by the Committee on Privileges and Elections were not elected, but were defeated by an average majority of about ten thousand.

Another reason assigned for not interfering for the purpose of removing this despotism from the people of Louisiana is that the people of that State are acquiescing in the Kellogg government. That has been asserted and reasserted time and again on this floor, upon what evidence I am at a loss to conceive. There was yesterday presented a statement from Kellogg that certain members elected on the fusion ticket had taken their seats in the usurping legislative body. That may be true; but even if it is true—a fact which I am neither prepared to admit nor deny, and of which I know nothing—does that establish the fact that the people of Louisiana, because certain men who were elected on the fusion legislative ticket have gone over and taken their seats in the Kellogg legislature, are acquiescing in the Kellogg usurpation? As well might you say when two or three subordinate officers of an army desert to the enemy, that therefore the great body of the army have acquiesced in the rule of the opposing force. Such an argument is most absurd and establishes nothing.

But, Mr. President, there has been no acquiescence on the part of the people of Louisiana. There may have been and is submission to Federal power. They submit to the Federal power which is protecting Kellogg, because they know it would be useless to attempt to throw off the Kellogg usurpation with the avowed purpose of the Federal authorities to uphold and maintain it. It would bring them in conflict with the Federal Army and with the whole military and naval power of this Government; and therefore if they were disposed to resist the wrong, and however indignant they may be, and however loud they may protest against the Kellogg government, they can do nothing but submit. Sir, Poland submitted to the partition of her territory. Did the people of Poland willingly acquiesce in it? It is doing great injustice to the people of Louisiana, a people as proud and as high-minded and as noble and as brave as any people in this country, to say that they could so far forget their manhood, that they could so far do violence to the instincts of our common nature, as to submit to a usurpation set up by Federal power over them in opposition to their wish and against their protest. I hope, sir, that no day will come when there shall not be a voice in Louisiana protesting loudly and to the very last against this monstrosity, against this great wrong, which is not only doing great injustice to the people of Louisiana, but which is bringing disgrace upon the American name.

But, sir, suppose the people of Louisiana have acquiesced, and are acquiescing—a thing that I say is utterly impossible while the least degree of manhood remains in the bosoms of that people—suppose they have acquiesced and are acquiescing in the usurpation of Kellogg, is the Senate to acquiesce, is Congress to acquiesce? Suppose the people of Louisiana are acquiescing in the usurpation which is now upon them; suppose they have lost their manhood, and are bending their necks to the yoke of the tyrant that sways the scepter over their destinies and over their liberties, have we no duty to perform? Is the Senate also to acquiesce? Will we, too, sit idly by and see a government forced upon the people of any State of this Union and not take action to prevent it? Are we to remain silent and see the liberties of the people taken away from them, see their prosperity as a State going down? Not so would have thought or acted the men who sat in this Chamber in other days. In other years, if such a proposition had been made every tongue in the Senate would havebeen eloquent in denouncing such usurpation, and every hand would have been stretched forth for the relief of an oppressed people. Every man who sat then in this Senate would not only have denounced the usurpation but would have been willing to go to the very verge of constitutional power for the purpose of relieving the people of a State of the incubus upon them.

Sir, we have an important duty to perform. We shall be untrue to the traditions of the country if we fail to discharge it. Our forefathers took especial pains to guarantee personal liberty to the people of this country, and the first ten amendments to the Constitution were specially framed and designed to guard the individual rights of citizens. How much more important are the rights of a whole State, including not only the rights of the individual people of a State but the rights of the State as a component part of the Government of the United States! It is true that the idea doubtless did not enter the minds of the framers of the Constitution that the time would ever come when the people of a State would be denied local self-government, when the people would be compelled to submit to a usurpation over them; and they may not have in distinct terms made provision for such a contingency. But yet I venture to say from the history of those times and from the provisions incorporated in the Constitution to protect and guard individual rights and individual liberty, if it were possible that the idea could have been present to the minds of the framers of the Constitution that such a condition of things could exist in the country as now exists in the State of Louisiana, they would have provided most amply against it. We are here when such things have happened; and have we no duty to perform in reference to them? Is it not our duty to the people of Louisiana? Do we not owe it to ourselves and to posterity? Do we not owe it to the happiness of the people of this whole country in the future that we shall rebuke this wrong and promptly rid the people of Louisiana of the government that now oppresses them?

But, sir, have the people of Louisiana acquiesced? I deny that they have acquiesced. They have remonstrated in every conceivable manner. They have petitioned for a redress of grievances. They sent two hundred of their choice citizens selected to represent them to the President; and how were they met? They were spurned from his presence and told in advance by a telegram from the Attorney-General that their visit to the President would be useless. Our tables are covered with their petitions asking to be relieved from the oppression that is now upon them. Shall we be deaf to all these appeals? They are here to-day. This bill and amendment brings them here to-day to protest against the longer continuance of the Kellogg government over them, and demands of the Senate to remove it and let the government of their choice be reinstated. And shall we be deaf to these remonstrances, to these petitions and appeals? Shall we make no effort to relieve them? Shall they be spurned from our presence as they have been spurned from the presence of the Executive?

Then, if such should be the case, when they go home brooding over their wrongs, finding that no relief can come from any quarter, when the last hope is gone, I say they will be justified in the sight of civilized humanity in becoming the avengers of their own wrongs. I hope no people will long consent to be slaves. Sooner than see the people of any State of this Union tamely submit to oppression it would be better to see them vindicate their rights by all the means which God and nature have placed within their hands. The people of Louisiana and the people of the South will not always remain the tame slaves of power. After having submitted until patience is exhausted, they will in some form or other assert their rights. It may be that in the assertion of those rights they will add another illustration to that lesson taught by history as well as poetry, that—

Who would be free, themselves must strike the blow.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, it is my desire to debate the measure pending before the Senate, but I am not prepared to speak to-day. To-morrow I presume I shall be ready to say what I desire to say.

Mr. CARPENTER. I am willing, if there can be unanimous consent to that effect, that the bill shall be laid aside to-day and be the unfinished business at the expiration of the morning hour to-morrow. I suppose that will accommodate the Senator.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that would be a very proper arrangement, and I suggest that this bill be laid aside informally for the purpose of taking up the Calendar of unobjected cases and devoting the rest of this day to that.

Mr. CARPENTER. I hope there will be unanimous consent to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan.) The Chair hears no objection.

CURRENCY AND BANKING—VETO MESSAGE.

During Mr. SAULSBURY'S speech a message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. BABCOCK, his Secretary.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Senator from Delaware to yield, if he will, that we may hear read the message of the President.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

The Chief Clerk read the message, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

Herewith I return Senate bill No. 617, entitled "An act to fix the amount of United States notes and the circulation of national banks, and for other purposes," without my approval.

In doing so, I must express my regret at not being able to give my assent to a measure which has received the sanction of a majority of the legislators chosen by the people to make laws for their guidance, and I have studiously sought to find sufficient arguments to justify such assent, but unsuccessfully.

Practically, it is a question whether the measure under discussion would give an additional dollar to the irredeemable paper currency of the country or not, and whether by requiring three-fourths of the reserves to be retained by the banks, and prohibiting interest to be received on the balance, it might not prove a contraction. But the fact cannot be concealed that theoretically the bill increases the paper circulation $100,000,000, less only the amount of reserves restrained from circulation by the provision of the second section. The measure has been supported on the theory that it would give increased circulation. It is a fair inference, therefore, that if, in practice, the measure should fail to create the abundance of circulation expected of it, the friends of the measure, particularly those out of Congress, would clamor for such inflation as would give the expected relief.

The theory, in my belief, is a departure from the true principles of finance, national interest, national obligations to creditors, congressional promises, party pledges—on the part of both political parties—and of personal views and promises made by me in every annual message sent to Congress, and in each inaugural address.

In my annual message to Congress in December, 1869, the following passages appear:

"Among the evils growing out of the rebellion and not yet referred to, is that of an irredeemable currency. It is an evil which I hope will receive your most earnest attention. It is a duty and one of the highest duties of government to secure to the citizen a medium of exchange of fixed, unvarying value. This implies a return to a specie basis, and no substitute for it can be devised. It should be commenced now, and reached at the earliest practicable moment consistent with a fair regard to the interest of the debtor class. Immediate resumption, if practicable, would not be desirable. It would compel the debtor class to pay beyond their contracts the premium on gold at the date of their purchase, and would bring bankruptcy and ruin to thousands. Fluctuations, however, in the paper value of the measure of all values (gold) is detrimental to the interests of trade. It makes the man of business an involuntary gambler; for in all sales where future payment is to be made both parties speculate as to what will be the value of the currency to be paid and received. I earnestly recommend to you, then, such legislation as will insure a gradual return to specie payments and put an immediate stop to fluctuations in the value of currency."

I still adhere to the views then expressed.

As early as December 4, 1865, the House of Representatives passed a resolution, by a vote of 144 yeas to 6 nays, concurring "in the views of the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the necessity of a contraction of the currency, with a view to as early a resumption of specie payments as the business interests of the country will permit," and pledging "co-operative action to this end, as speedily as possible."

The first act passed by the Forty-first Congress on the 18th day of March, 1869, was as follows:

"An act to strengthen the public credit of the United States.

"Be it enacted, &c., That in order to remove any doubt as to the purpose of the Government to discharge all its obligations to the public creditors, and to settle conflicting questions and interpretations of the law, by virtue of which such obligations have been contracted, it is hereby provided and declared that the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment in coin, or its equivalent, of all the obligations of the United States, and of all the interest-bearing obligations, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of any such obligations has expressly provided that the same may be paid in lawful money, or in other currency than gold and silver, but none of the said interest-bearing obligations not already due shall be redeemed or paid before maturity, unless at such times as the United States notes shall be convertible into coin at the option of the holder, or unless at such time bonds of the United States bearing a lower rate of interest than the bonds to be redeemed can be sold at par in coin. And the United States also solemnly pledges its faith to make provision at the earliest practicable period for the redemption of the United States notes in coin."

This act still remains as a continuing pledge of the faith of the United States "to make provision at the earliest practicable moment for the redemption of the United States notes in coin."

A declaration contained in the act of June 30, 1864, created an obligation that the total amount of United States notes issued, or to be issued, should never exceed $400,000,000. The amount in actual circulation was actually reduced to $356,000,000, at which point Congress passed the act of February 4, 1868, suspending the further reduction of the currency. The forty-four millions have ever been regarded as a reserve, to be used only in case of emergency, such as has occurred on several occasions, and must occur when, from any cause, revenues suddenly fall below expenditures; and such a reserve is necessary, because the fractional currency, amounting to fifty millions, is redeemable in legal-tenders on call.

It may be said that such a return of fractional currency for redemption is impossible. But let steps be taken for a return to a specie basis, and it will be found that silver will take the place of fractional currency as rapidly as it can be supplied, when the premium on gold reaches a sufficiently low point. With the amount of United States notes to be issued permanently fixed within proper limits, and the Treasury so strengthened as to be able to redeem them in coin on demand, it will then be safe to inaugurate a system of free banking with such provisions as to make compulsory redemption of the circulating notes of the banks in coin, or in United States notes, themselves redeemable and made equivalent to coin.

As a measure preparatory to free banking, or for placing the Government in a condition to redeem its notes in coin "at the earliest practicable moment," the revenues of the country should be increased so as to pay current expenses, provide for the sinking fund required by law, and also a surplus to be retained in the Treasury in gold.

I am not a believer in any artificial method of making paper money equal to coin when the coin is not owned or held ready to redeem the promises to pay; for paper money is nothing more than promises to pay, and is valuable exactly in proportion to the amount of coin that it can be converted into. While coin is not used as a circulating medium, or the currency of the country is not convertible into it at par, it becomes an article of commerce as much as any other product. The surplus will seek a foreign market as will any other surplus. The balance of trade has nothing to do with the question. Duties on imports being required in coin creates a limited demand for gold. About enough to satisfy that demand remains in the country. To increase this supply I see no way open but by the Government hoarding through the means above given, and possibly by requiring the national banks to aid.

It is claimed by the advocates of the measure herewith returned that there is an unequal distribution of the banking capital of the country. I was disposed to give great weight to this view of the question at first; but, on reflection, it will be remembered that there still remains $4,000,000 of authorized bank-note circulation assigned to States having less than their quota not yet taken. In addition to this, the States having less than their quota of bank circulation have the option of twenty-five millions more to be taken from those States having more than their proportion. When this is all taken up, or when specie payments are fully restored, or are in rapid process of restoration, will be the time to consider the question of "more currency."

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, April 22, 1874.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now before the Senate; and the question is, Shall the bill pass notwithstanding the objections of the President of the United States?

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the Constitution and the usages of the Senate together point out the appropriate proceeding to be taken now. The Constitution provides that "If he"—the President—"approve he shall sign it"—the bill—"but if not he shall return it, with his objections, to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it."

It might be supposed that the language of the Constitution contemplated necessarily an immediate reconsideration. The usages of the Senate establish the contrary. We have now before us a bill likely to consume some further time, which I think it would be convenient to dispose of. The message, of course, we want to see in print and have an opportunity to examine; and unless we sit on Saturday we shall not be likely to make much progress this week. Monday, as we already know, is to be devoted to observances on which we cannot well encroach. I take it, therefore, that it will be the pleasure of the Senate to take up the bill and reconsider it, doubtless at an early day next week. In that view, I move that the message be printed and lie on the table, with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the message be printed, and, with the bill, lie on the table for the present.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1706) to authorize the opening of Wight street through the grounds of the United States marine hospital at Detroit, Michigan, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3090) to authorize the issue of duplicate agricultural land scrip where the original has been lost or destroyed was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. No. 3088) to extend the time for completing entries on Osage Indian lands in Kansas was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 1706) to authorize the opening of Wight street through the grounds of the United States marine hospital at Detroit, Michigan, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

THE NAVIGATOR'S ISLANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State and the report by which it is accompanied, upon Samoa or the Navigator's Islands; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask consent of the Senate to call up the bill (S. No. 669) referring the petitions and papers in the case of Robert M. and Stephen A. Douglas, in so far as the same relates to cotton seized, to the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know what the bill is that the Senator moves to take up; but I hope the motion will not be agreed to. We have unanimously agreed to take up the Calendar of unobjected cases to accommodate my friend from North Carolina, and now I think he ought not to ask a second favor.

Mr. MERRIMON. I was not aware of that, and I will not press the motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is no case on the Calendar that I have any interest in whatever; but I think that we cannot devote the day so profitably to any business as to take up the unobjected cases on the Calendar.

Mr. MERRIMON. I withdraw my motion.

ARMS TO NEBRASKA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar is the bill (S. No. 499) to authorize the issue of a supply of arms to the authorities of the State of Nebraska.

Mr. WEST. That is objected to.

Mr. INGALLS. That is under debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside.

JOHN B. WEBER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1039) for the relief of John B. Weber, late colonel of the Eighteenth Regiment Corps d'Afrique; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It is a direction to the Paymaster of the Army to allow and pay to John B. Weber, late colonel of the Eighteenth Infantry, Corps d'Afrique, out of the appropriation for the pay of the Army, the pay and allowances of first lieutenant, from the 28th day of September, 1863, until the 8th day of November, in the same year, being from the time he received his commission as such officer until the time when he was mustered into the service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HOWE. I should like to hear the report in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report made by Mr. ALBRIGHT, of the House of Representatives:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 224) for the relief of John B. Weber, late colonel of the Eighteenth Regiment Infantry, Corps d'Afrique, have had the same under consideration, and make the following report:

On and before September 28, 1863, Colonel Weber was adjutant of the One hundred and sixteenth New York Volunteers, on duty in the Department of the Gulf.

The same day he received a commission as colonel of Eighteenth Regiment Infantry, Corps d'Afrique, but was not then mustered.

October 12, 1863, special orders issued, to take effect September 28, 1863, to discharge him as adjutant to enable him to accept his commission as colonel. From September 28, 1863, he was in command of the Eighteenth Regiment of Infantry, as colonel, but was not mustered until November 8, 1863.

He was paid as adjutant up to September 28, 1863, and no longer, and received no pay from this date to November 8, 1863, one month and ten days, when his pay as colonel commenced.

By General Order No. 7 he was compelled to apply for a discharge as adjutant on receiving commission as colonel.

The reason he was not mustered as colonel before November 8, 1863, is that the regiment was not full, although he was on duty and in command of the regiment. The committee, therefore, recommend that Colonel Weber be allowed pay as first lieutenant from September 28, 1863, to November 8, 1863, and that the bill (H. R. No. 224) be so amended.

The committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. HOWE. The point that strikes me is that the bill proposes to pay a colonel for a regiment which did not exist and was not entitled to a colonel.

Mr. INGALLS. If there is to be discussion, under the understanding I suppose the bill ought to go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside, and the next bill on the Calendar will be called.

Mr. LOGAN. I think the Senator from Wisconsin was under a misapprehension about the Weber bill. I do not think it gives the officer pay as colonel. If the report be read again I think the Senator will see that there is no cause for objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill may be passed for the present, and after consultation among Senators and examination be returned to.

Mr. LOGAN. I know what the case is, and I think if the report is read so that Senators understand it there will be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be again read.

The Chief Clerk again read the report.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Wisconsin will see that the bill does not provide for pay as colonel; but he was mustered out as adjutant of the regiment and acted as colonel, but he could not receive the pay of colonel until he was mustered in as such. The bill provides for continuing the pay of lieutenant to him until the time he was mustered as colonel.

Mr. HOWE. I see I was mistaken about it. I hope the bill will be passed; there can certainly be no objection to it.

The bill was passed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN MISSOURI.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 32) obviating the necessity of issuing patents for certain private land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes.

The Committee on Private Land Claims reported an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert the following as a substitute:

That all of the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all of the lands in the State of Missouri which have at any time heretofore been confirmed to any person or persons by any act of Congress, or by any officer or officers, or board or boards of commissioners, acting under or by authority of any act of Congress, shall be, and the same are hereby, granted, released, and relinquished by the United States, in fee-simple, to the respective owners of the equitable titles thereto, and to their respective heirs and assigns forever, as fully and as completely, in every respect whatever, as could be done by patents issued therefor according to law.

SEC. 2. That nothing contained in the first section of this act shall in any manner abridge, divest, impair, injure, or prejudice any valid adverse right, title, or interest of any person or persons in or to any portion or part of the lands mentioned in said first section; and this act shall in nowise affect any lands or lots heretofore relinquished to the United States; and all persons who, under the statute of limitations of said State, would be protected in their possessions had patents for the lands or lots occupied by them been issued at the date of the confirmation of the claims thereto as aforesaid shall be deemed to have the equitable title to the lands so occupied by them within the meaning of this section, and the release herein provided for shall be as effectual in their favor as in cases where the owner derives title from the original claimant.

SEC. 3. That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall be of the opinion that the public interest no longer requires the continuance of the office of recorder of land titles in Missouri he may close and discontinue the same; and all of the records, maps, plats, field-notes, books, papers, and everything else concerning, pertaining, or belonging to said office of recorder shall be delivered to the State of Missouri: Provided, however, That said State shall provide by law for the reception and safe-keeping of said records, maps, plats, field-notes, books, papers, and every thing else belonging to said office of recorder, as public records, and for the allowance of free access to the same by the authorities of the United States for the purpose of taking extracts therefrom or making copies thereof, without charge of any kind: And provided further, That when said office of recorder shall be closed and discontinued as aforesaid, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall forever thereafter possess and exercise all of the powers and authority and perform all the duties of said recorder.

Mr. BOGY. This bill was before the Senate a few days ago and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] raised some objection to it and desired some amendments to be made to the bill. He has indicated the amendments and I have accepted them. I will state them. In the seventh line of the first section the word "or" should be stricken out after the word "under" and the word "and" inserted in its place. In the third line of the second section, after the word "valid," the word "adverse" should be stricken out; and in the ninth line of the second section, after the word "lots," the word "aforesaid" should be inserted; and after the word "been," in the same line, the word "lawfully" should be inserted. These I believe are the only amendments suggested by the Senator from Vermont, and I move that they be accepted.

Mr. PRATT. I think this bill had better go over. Some Senators want to look into its provisions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be laid aside.

Mr. BOGY. I will ask the Senator from Indiana why should this bill be laid over? I would ask its consideration as a favor It has been here for months. It involves no appropriation. It is entirely local; it affects no one in the world but persons in the State of Missouri, and is of importance only to them. It is here on the application, I may say, of the entire people of the State of Missouri, except a few land speculators. Why should the bill be laid over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana insist on his objection?

Mr. PRATT. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Missouri what committee had the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BOGY. The Committee on Private Land Claims had this bill under consideration and reported it unanimously. It was referred to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and approved by him. It is sustained is every way that a bill can be sustained. It involves no appropriation, no grant of land, nothing in the world but a mere grant of a naked legal title, which now remains nominally in the hands of the Government of the United States.

Mr. PRATT. What is the quantity of land which this bill conveys or transfers?

Mr. BOGY. It does not convey any land at all, not an acre, not a foot. It relates merely to the old Spanish grants in the State of Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana withdraw his objection?

Mr. PRATT. For the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BOGY. The bill does not convey any land at all. The lands referred to in it have been confirmed by boards of commissioners heretofore or by acts of Congress. It has always been supposed in that State that the confirmation was not only a sufficient title, but that the confirmation itself was a sufficient evidence of title. Under a recent decision, however, until patents are issued, there appears to remain a mere legal title in the Government. It is a question on which the profession in Missouri have been united. This bill simply obviates the necessity for issuing patents by saying that the confirmation shall be a legal title.

Mr. PRATT. Is there any letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the subject?

Mr. BOGY. The Commissioner of the General Land Office had the bill before him, and it is recommended by him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana withdraw his objection?

Mr. PRATT. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendments of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 253) to authorize the county commissioners of Thurston County, in Washington Territory, to issue bonds for the purpose of constructing a railroad from Budd's Inlet, Puget Sound, to intersect the North Pacific Railroad at or near Tenino; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Territories reported the bill with amendments.

The first amendment was in section 1, line 7, to strike out the word "North" and insert the word "Northern," so as to read "Northern Pacific Railroad."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "thereof" in the ninth line of the same section to strike out the following words:

Not exceeding in amount the sum of $200,000, and to designate the time and manner of payment of principal and interest of said bonds; and also to determine the class and gauge of said railroad.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Which bonds shall bear interest not exceeding 10 per cent. per annum, and the principal thereof shall not exceed in amount 10 per cent. of the value of the taxable property of said county of Thurston as legally assessed for territorial taxation, and shall not, in any event, exceed, in the aggregate, $200,000, notwithstanding this sum may be less than 10 per cent. of such taxable valuation; and any such bonds issued in excess of said 10 per cent. of the territorial taxable valuation of the property of said county, or in excess of $200,000 in the aggregate in any event, shall be absolutely void; and all persons interested are required to take notice hereof. And the said commissioners are hereby authorized and empowered to designate the time and manner of payment of the principal and interest of said bonds, and also to determine the class and gauge of said railroad: Provided, That no bonds shall issue until the full and final completion of said railroad: And provided further, That said county of Thurston shall not contract with any person, firm, or corporation to construct said railroad until such person, firm, or company shall enter into a good and sufficient bond, in the penal sum of $200,000, to be secured by first mortgage on said railroad, conditioned that they will operate said road with passenger and freight trains for a period of twenty-five years: And provided further, That when the said county commissioners shall have agreed upon the terms for the construction of said railroad with any individual, firm, or corporation, they shall call a special election at such time as they may designate, by causing three notices of such election, which said notices shall embrace the terms of the proposed contract, to be posted for twenty days in each election precinct of said county of Thurston, at which the said proposed contract shall be submitted to the legal voters of said county; and if two-thirds of the said votes cast at the said election shall be in favor of the said contract, and such two-thirds shall be equal in number to a majority of the votes cast in said county at the then next preceding election for Delegate in the Congress of the United States, then the said county commissioners shall complete the said contract and issue the bonds provided for by this act and not otherwise. Such election shall be held at the same places, in the same manner, and the returns thereof made by and filed with the same officers, as is required in case of election for county officers under the laws of said Territory.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "ten" in line 20, and inserting "seven;" so as to read, "may be less than 7 per cent. of such taxable valuation."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM N. DENNY.

The bill (S. No. 560) for the relief of William N. Denny was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Paymaster-General of the United States Army to pay, out of any money appropriated or hereafter to be appropriated for the payment of the Army, to William N. Denny, late major in the Fifty-first Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, the pay and emoluments of a major of infantry, from the 30th of June, 1863, the date his commission was received at the headquarters of the command to which he belonged, to the 15th of May, 1865, the date of his muster in as lieutenant-colonel, as if he had been mustered in as major on the date of the receipt of his commission, first deducting whatever sum may have been paid him as captain during the period for which pay is hereby allowed as major.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. CLAYTON on the 3d of March:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the petition and papers in the case of William N. Denny, late major of Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteers, praying that he may be allowed the pay and emoluments of a major from June 30, 1863, to March 25, 1865, less amount already received as pay of captain, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The petitioner represents that he was a captain in the Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteers; that on or about the 3d day of May, 1863, he was, with his regiment, captured by the command of General Forrest, near Rome, Georgia, and was confined in prison by the enemy until March 25, 1865, when he effected his escape and rejoined his regiment; that on or about June 30, 1863, he was commissioned as major of his regiment, vice D. A. McHolland, promoted to be lieutenant-colonel; that neither Denny nor McHolland were mustered, because of their captivity.

The papers before the committee substantiate these representations.

The accompanying bill is reported and its passage recommended.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES H. MOSELEY.

The bill (S. No. 561) for the relief of Charles H. Moseley was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Paymaster-General to pay Charles H. Moseley, late a second lieutenant in the Forty-seventh Regiment Kentucky Mounted Infantry, the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of infantry from the 9th of September, 1864, until the 30th of November, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BANKING AND CURRENCY—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. MORTON. On the motion of the Senator from New York a few minutes ago, the finance bill and the veto message of the President were laid upon the table and the message ordered to be printed, with the statement on the part of the Senator from New York that it would be proper to have an early consideration of it next week. As the Senator did not name any date, I will now suggest in the hearing of the Senator next Tuesday at the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest in answer to that, that it may be quite inconvenient to a number of Senators to have the consideration proceed at that time, and I purposely abstained from intimating any special time. I did so in part upon the suggestion and in deference to the judgment of other Senators. There are several members of the Senate who will be absent in the mean time, and some of them I think who will be absent a little later than that; and therefore in so far as the fact that I made the motion in any way devolves upon me the duty or propriety of moving to take up the message, I say to the Senator that I shall not be likely to do it on Tuesday next, as it is quite possible that I may not be able to be here on that day myself; and there are several Senators whose presence is more important than I can suppose mine to be who will not be here either. Therefore I suggest that it had better lie probably until a later day, to be taken up of course with convenient dispatch when the Senate may so choose.

Mr. MORTON. Of course if it does not suit the convenience of the Senate to take it up on Tuesday, the Senate will not take it up. I suggest, however, for the purpose of naming a day, that it be taken up on Tuesday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. CONKLING. It is understood, of course, that no assent is given to the suggestion just made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from New York to have objected.

Mr. CONKLING. I make no objection, except that I say, having moved to lay the message on the table, I shall move to take it up myself at what I think is a proper time, unless somebody makes the motion before; and as far as it appears now, I do not think Tuesday is likely to be a convenient time. I understand, among other things, that the chairman of the Committee on Finance is to be absent for several days; and although I suppose the Senator from Indiana is going to sustain the message, from the suggestion he makes about taking it up, it might be well to have the Senator from Ohio, the chairman of the committee, also here to help sustain it.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator from New York no doubt will be ample aid in that matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the Calendar will be read.

GEORGE S. WRIGHT.

The bill (H. R. No. 1581) for the relief of George S. Wright, administrator of the estate of John T. Wright, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to George S. Wright, administrator of the estate of John T. Wright, deceased, $2,758.45, the amount of Treasury settlement numbered 536, dated March 13, 1869, in accordance with the certificates of the Third Auditor and the Second Comptroller.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHEROKEE REMOVAL CLAIMS.

The bill (S. No. 505) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1849, and for other purposes," approved July 29, 1848, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend sections 4 and 5 of the act referred to in the title, so as to make them read:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a new census to be taken of the Cherokee Indians now residing east of the Mississippi River, which shall include the number and names of such individuals and families of said Indians who wish to remain and become citizens of the States in which they live; also the number and names of such individuals and families who desire to remove and join the Cherokee tribe west of said river, whereupon the Secretary of the Interior shall report the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall set apart, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum equal to $53.33 for each individual ascertained as aforesaid; and that the Secretary of the Interior cause to be paid to every such individual, or his or her legal representatives, interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum on said per capita from the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. —. That whenever hereafter any individual or individuals of the Cherokee Indians specified in section 1 of this amendment shall desire to remove and join the tribe west of the Mississippi, the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized to withdraw from the fund set apart as aforesaid the sum of $53.33 and the interest due and unpaid thereon, and apply the same, or such part thereof as may be necessary, to the removal and subsistence of such individual or individuals, and pay the remainder, if any, or the whole, if the said Indians, or any of them, shall prefer to remove themselves, to such individuals or heads of families upon their removal west of the Mississippi.

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Interior cause to be ascertained the number and names of such individuals and families of the Eastern Cherokee Indians who have, since July 1, 1867, at their own expense removed and joined the tribes west of the Mississippi River, and have not been reimbursed therefor by the United States as provided by section 5 of the act aforesaid, approved July 29, 1848, and shall report the amount necessary to reimburse such persons to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall set apart, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount sufficient to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay, or cause to be paid, to the individuals or heads of families who removed at their own expense, a sum which shall be equal to $53.33 for each person who removed as aforesaid: Provided, That the amount herein required to be funded for the benefit of the said Cherokees east and west of the Mississippi River, and the amount required to be paid to them, shall be charged to the general Cherokee fund, under the treaty of New Echota, and shall be reimbursed therefrom.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs be kind enough to explain this bill. It seems somewhat important.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. In 1836 a treaty was made with the Cherokee Indians, by which a large portion of them were to remove west of the Mississippi. It was provided in that treaty that those who removed should receive for removal the sum of twenty dollars each, and the sum of $33.33 each for sustaining themselves one year after their arrival in their new country. It was also provided that those who did not choose to remove and remained in North Carolina should receive the interest of that $53.33, to be divided per capita. Since that time it has been found very difficult to ascertain who were entitled to this division of interest, and it has been pretty difficult sometimes to trace the genealogy of the Indians, and a new census was made a few years ago in order to ascertain to whom this payment should be made, but there is some embarrassment still under that, and now this bill provides that a new census shall be taken in order to ascertain who are entitled to this interest. The bill also provides that if any of the Indians have removed who have not received their share of this $53.33, to pay them for their removal and subsistence they shall be paid that amount.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How long is it since they removed?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. They have been removing all the time from 1836 to the present time, as I understand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then may I ask the Senator what means this bill provides for ascertaining the identity of these claimants? Would not that part of the bill specially mentioned by the Senator be liable to the objection that under it we shall allow a vast mass of claims, bought up and in the hands of claim agents, which will do no good to the Indians; or else fictitious claims may be brought forward to pay Indians removed since 1836 for the expenses of their removal? A great many of them must be dead. The rest are scattered. Their identity may not easily be proved; and that leads me to make the inquiry of the Senator, what means we can provide for securing the Government against wrong in that respect?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. The bill provides that a census shall be taken for that very object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are not the Indians who have removed scattered? I am not speaking of those who have remained behind, but those who have gone.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Those who have gone, I suppose, are with the bulk of the tribe west of the Mississippi. The second section provides "that whenever hereafter any individual or individuals of the Cherokee Indians specified in section 1 of this amendment shall desire to remove and join the tribe west of the Mississippi," he shall have his pay; and then in the third section the Secretary of the Interior is to "cause to be ascertained the number and names of such individuals and families of the Eastern Cherokee Indians who have since July 1, 1867, at their own expense, removed." I do not know of any better way to ascertain who are entitled to it than to leave it subject to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. If the honorable Senator will point out any better way, I shall be glad to take it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can the Senator tell me where the treaty is under which this obligation arises?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. The treaty of 1836, called the New Echota treaty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The date of the treaty is 29th of December, 1835, I find by the volume of treaties.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I named the date when it was proclaimed, May 23, 1836.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The eighth article of the treaty does provide "that the United States agree to remove the Cherokees to their new homes and subsist them one year after their arrival; and that a sufficient number of steamboats and baggage-wagons shall be furnished to remove them comfortably, so as not to endanger their health; that a physician, well supplied with medicines, shall accompany each detachment of emigrants removed by the Government. Such persons and families as in the opinion of the emigrating agent are capable of subsisting and removing themselves can be permitted to do so. They shall be allowed in full for all claims for the same twenty dollars for each member of their family; and in lieu of their one year's rations they shall be paid the sum of $33.33 if they prefer it."

Now I wish to ask the Senator in charge of this bill what is the evidence we have to act upon that during forty years—it will be forty years next year since this treaty was made—we have failed in our obligation to discharge this duty by either removing them bodily at our own expense or paying their expenses for the removal in the time of it? How does it happen that forty years have gone by before this claim is brought forward for payment by Congress?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I am not aware that we have failed in any respect; but as a matter of fact the difficulty arises from the impossibility, if you please, of ascertaining who among them are entitled now to the interest on this $53.33. The descendants of those entitled to it have so increased in numbers that it is only a small fraction which each one is entitled to. The difficulty arises from the trouble in tracing the genealogy of the Indians. The present bill is not to avoid any duty or renew any, but to ascertain precisely who are entitled to this money, and then also to carry the repetition, if you please, or the re-enactment of the same treaty, so that instead of paying them the money at home we will pay them $53.33 each if they remove the same as we would have done had they gone in 1836.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That part of it is not what I am asking the Senator to explain. I can understand the second section which provides for the future that if a Cherokee chooses to remove west of the Mississippi and join the tribe he shall have $53.33 for doing it. That I can understand, and that probably cannot be made the subject of covering up and concealing from Congress a job of a lot of claim agents to get on these old, stale claims of forty years' standing, if there ever was any claim at all, a large sum of money on fictitious Indians. The second section is not open to that objection. But what troubles me is the necessity of our interfering here after forty years have passed and providing for trying to ascertain who among the Indians who removed forty years ago or thirty years ago are entitled to this $53.33 with interest upon it, among their numerous descendants, whose legitimacy the honorable Senator from Connecticut tells us with great propriety and frankness it is somewhat difficult to ascertain. That is the trouble which appears to me, and I suggest it in all sincerity to the honorable Senator as a very dangerous feature in respect to protecting the United States against fictitious claims for money to be paid out of the Treasury.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Can the Senator suggest any better way to guard the interests of the Government than submitting this question to the Secretary of the Interior to appoint a commission to ascertain who the parties are?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir. I think I can; and that is to strike out the section. I do not know any state of public affairs that requires us to submit anything to the Secretary of the Interior upon this topic of hunting up the descendants of Indians beyond the Mississippi, who were removed there thirty or forty years ago, for the sake of paying them interest on $53.33.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I believe we are not paying them the interest.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only took it as the Senator stated it.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Perhaps I stated it incorrectly. It is to pay those who have gone the $53.33, provided they have not already had it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator understand that any delegation of Indians of the proper color and apparent proper race have been here showing to any Department a prima facie case looking to the fact that this money has been this long time due and not paid?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I do suppose, from what I understand from the Secretary of the Interior, that within the last five years, for instance, Cherokees from North Carolina have gone voluntarily from North Carolina and joined their friends west of the Mississippi, and that those men, whoever they are, are entitled to this $53.33 each, and it is this class of men whom this bill proposes to have paid if we can ascertain who they are. They are entitled to it if they stay in North Carolina; and if they have gone, we say pay it to close the matter with them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The treaty of 1835, upon which this legislation is stated to rest, certainly does not provide that the Indians may wait forty years, as long as the Children of Israel were in the wilderness, and then go to this land of Canaan and get $53.33 for it. It provided for a substantially immediate removal then of the tribe, and they were to be removed by the United States bodily; but if any were able to remove themselves and could get on they were allowed to do so and to commute at this sum. Thereupon the great body that were ever to go did go, and that part of the treaty exhausted itself. I am sure it will not be contended by my honorable friend from Connecticut, that article 8 of that treaty providing for the removal of the Cherokees west of the Mississippi is still in force as obligatory upon the United States to remove any more or to commute with any more who go. It was a thing that was closed out long ago.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. The obligation of the Government is not to commute. There is no limit to the obligation to pay each of the Indians the $53.33 until it is paid. If the honorable Senator will show me that it has been paid to any one or more, that ends the case in regard to that particular Indian; but if he cannot show that, and if he cannot show that those who are the heirs of the one who was originally entitled to it have had his pay, it seems to me the money is still due, and if due it should be paid.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So far as I understand the law or justice, there is no presumption arising because my friend and I have dealings, by which it would appear that forty years ago I owed him a sum of money, that I owe him yet. The presumption is exactly the reverse.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. It would be between you and me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Government, whose Treasury is always full and always open to the raid of anybody who chooses to make a claim, seems to be utterly helpless to protect itself, and as to it the presumption is the other way, I infer from my friend's intimation. No, Mr. President, in all seriousness it is not. Therefore I feel justified in saying that the presumption is, the strong presumption is, that every Indian who removed west of the Mississippi in the time of the removal between 1835 and 1840, if you please—suppose you give them five years to do it—has been settled with and has had his rights long ago. If he has not, then the period of thirty-five years of non-claim, and of descent and distribution and the ten thousand chances of life and of estate, ought to be a bar in and of itself.

We do not find from anything that is reported that any of these Indians have come to the United States saying that they have not been provided for and showing any prima facie case tending to lead us to believe that injustic has been done to them; but this appears to be an attempt on the part of the Secretary of the Interior, or of the Indian Office, to close out this treaty as if it were still fresh and a thing that had just been done, and that we are to go now upon an expedition to look up the descendants of Indians who from 1835 to 1840 went west of the Mississippi, with the genealogical doubts that my friend so very handsomely paraphrases, as who is who, and find somebody that is to take $53.33 apiece. I dare say you can find plenty of people west of the Mississippi who are willing to take $53.33 apiece. I know some east of the Mississippi who would do the same thing. But the question is, is it safe for the Government to leave to the Secretary of the Interior or anybody else to institute a commission to go over into that land west of the Mississippi and advertise or hunt in whatever way he may to find the descendants of the immigrants of 1835? If there are any who have gone there within five years, as my friend says, I am sure every gentleman who will read this article will say they do not come under the provision of article 8 of the treaty of 1835. That had long expired and exhausted itself. They went, if they went at all, not under the auspices and enumeration of the Government, as everybody was to go under the eighth article in the time of it, so that we knew who they were; but they went of that free will which belongs to everybody born in this country, and some others now, of moving from one State or Territory to another at pleasure. We do not owe them any money under that treaty, I feel sure. What I object to is the principle and the practice of creating commissions in the Interior or any other Department to go out over the world in the western prairies searching for somebody to whom $53.33 can be paid. I do not think it is safe.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. It is well known that a large number of Cherokees remained in North Carolina after the treaty of 1836, and it is well understood also that by that treaty the United States should pay those who left and went west of the Mississippi the sum of twenty dollars for each member of each family, and one year's rations, or in lieu thereof $33.33 if they preferred to remain. I do not find any limit to that. That claim remains against the United States and in favor of the Indians who staid in North Carolina just so long as they remain there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How do you know it has not been paid to them? It has been forty years ago.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. This is to ascertain how far it has been paid or how far our payment has come short of the obligation. We have never paid it to those who remained in North Carolina.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What evidence has the Senator of that?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Nothing in the bill proves that, it is true. No provision has been made for the payment of it while they remained there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you say that the treaty provided they should be paid?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. The interest on it in North Carolina, not the principal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have we not continued to pay the interest?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I know nothing to the contrary. I ask the Clerk to read the communications which I send to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1874.

SIR: In accordance with the provisions contained in the fourth and fifth sections of the act of July 29, 1848, (Statutes, volume 8, pages 264, 265,) a census or roll of the Eastern Cherokees who remained in the State of North Carolina at the time of the ratification of the treaty of New Echota, May 23, 1836, (Statutes, volume 7, page 478,) and who were entitled to have set apart for them the per capita fund of $53.33 referred to in said act, and to receive interest thereon, was taken by J. C. Mullay, in the year 1849, and the number thus entitled ascertained to be one thousand five hundred and seventeen in all, including many white people claiming affinity with the Cherokees.

Subsequently, in order to determine who were the legal heirs and representatives of those enrolled in 1849, but since deceased, the Secretary was directed by act of Congress approved July 27, 1868, (Statute, volume 15, page 228,) to cause another census of said Indians to be taken to serve as guidance in future payments.

This census was taken by S. H. Swetland in 1869, and he was instructed to make payment of interest then due to the Eastern Cherokees, guided by said roll, but on the same principle on which previous payments had been effected; that is, to those individuals only embraced in the roll of J. C. Mullay, or their legal heirs and representatives, as ascertained by the census taken by himself.

The difficulty of tracing Indian genealogy through its various complications in order to determine who are legal representatives of deceased Indians, without any rules by which hereditary descent among these people may be clearly established, and where, as in the present case, a single share of $3.20 would frequently have to be divided into small fractional parts, was fully demonstrated in the payment made by Mr. Swetland, and has led to litigation and serious embarrassment to the Department.

With a view to avoid similar complications in the future, I have caused to be prepared and herewith inclose a draught for a bill amendatory of the act of July 29, 1848, above referred to, and respectfully recommend the same for the favorable consideration of the Department and of Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. P. SMITH,
Commissioner.

Honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date, returning the draught of a bill submitted with my report of the 10th instant, amendatory of the act of July 29, 1848, with reference to the Cherokees of North Carolina.

As suggested in your said letter, I have caused to be added to said bill a proviso that the amount of moneys furnished under the bill shall be charged to the general fund of the Cherokees under the treaty of New Echota, and shall be reimbursed therefrom.

I have also caused to be changed the date mentioned in section 3 of the bill, from July 12, 1869, to July 1, 1867.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDW. P. SMITH,
Commissioner.

Honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut if the Cherokees who went west of the Mississippi River do not resist this payment of the Eastern Cherokees out of the Cherokee fund?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. There is some opposition to it.

Mr. SARGENT. Is there not very decided opposition? Have they not maintained agents here for years insisting that there was no right or claim on the part of the Eastern Cherokees to share in the money which belongs to the tribe?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I know not as to that; but I presume it is so if the Senator states it.

Mr. SARGENT. I understand that to be the case, and it seems to me that this bill which provides that this fund belonging to this tribe shall be taken for this purpose ought not to be passed, unless the committee have taken some pains to ascertain upon what grounds this protest rests. My own impression is that there is good ground for it; but my recollection of the case is rather indistinct.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. The protest rests on the great desire of the Cherokees of the West to retain all the funds for their own benefit. They are not particularly friendly to the Eastern Cherokees, and are disposed, as other men often are, to get the larger half, if you please. The committee have the impression that this is an act of justice, and that the money should come from the general fund of the Cherokees, not from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In addition to what I stated before, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that so far as the Cherokees who did remove—and it is of them alone that I have been speaking so far—are concerned, in 1866, after they had gone into the rebellion and did us all the harm they could, we made a fresh treaty with them which wiped out all old scores and began anew, in which I find that there is no pretense of a claim like this set up by them. It goes on to enumerate the matters between them and the United States under this old treaty, provides for a new statement of accounts between them and the United States, how it shall be done, and that if anything is found there due it shall be invested in the registered stock of the United States and kept for their benefit, and all that, and then there is an express repeal of all the old treaties that should be inconsistent with this general jumping settlement that we made after they had forfeited all their rights by going into the rebellion.

Now this bill proposes to revive this old, slumbering, long-since obsolete article 8 of the treaty of 1835 for the purpose of finding somebody—as we know how things are done in these Indian countries, through some white man—to hunt up a lot of Indians who will swear that they are the descendants of Nickite-Wapote-Paw, or whatever his name may be, and his family forty years ago, under what I must again pay the homage of my admiration to, my friend's paraphrase in calling the genealogical difficulties which exist in such cases. No, Mr. President; that will not do. I move to strike out the first section of the bill, if that is it, which provides for doing anything about hunting up the Indians who forty years ago departed this land and went beyond the Mississippi. Each section contains a little on the same subject, I believe.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I will ask the Senator one question. He speaks of reviving an old, obsolete treaty. I will ask if the treaty of 1866, to which he refers, does not virtually forgive and forget and revive previous obligations?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir, it does not. It does this, if the Senator will pardon me, because it may be a difference in phraseology; we may have the same thing in our respective minds: it does forgive these Indians, but forgives them upon the terms that we now make a fresh settlement of all affairs, that they agree to ascertain in a certain way what sum of money may stand to their credit and that that is to be invested in the registered stock of the United States. That is what it does; and for one I must be excused from voting to take any money from the Treasury to pay people who may be hunted up as descendants of the Indians who emigrated West of the Mississippi under that old treaty. If there are any recent cases where Indians have gone, then I say the treaty does not provide for them at all, and they are no more entitled to have somebody gather up their claims and speculate out of them or to have the money themselves, than I should be if I chose to emigrate beyond the Mississippi, because the treaty of 1835, the eighth article, long since exhausted itself on the subject of the removal by the United States of these Indians. It speaks of a thing then to be done and of the fact that the United States were to remove them in a body, making a special exception of Indians who were then able to remove themselves and to commute for the amount which they should have for it. Forty years have gone by, and it is said that from time to time afterward, and some within a few years, a Cherokee in North Carolina, or Georgia, or Mississippi, or wherever he may have happened to be, has gone west of the Mississippi, and is therefore entitled under the treaty. That cannot be a just construction of it. You cannot torture out of the words of the eighth article any such meaning unless your eyes are so set on the Treasury that everything in a treaty means money to you and every line means pay to you——

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. He would be entitled to the interest of it if he remained in North Carolina.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose he would. Suppose I am entitled to be supported at the poor-house while I am in Vermont, and I do not know but that I shall have to be, then if I emigrate to the Indian Territory Vermont is under no obligation to me as far as I know, and the same may be said in respect to these Indians. If they are entitled to $53.33 if they remain in North Carolina, then they are not entitled to $53.33 on that account if they choose to go somewhere else in the exercise of their right to better their condition by emigration, as other people do.

I submit to the gentlemen of the Indian Committee that they are opening the door to extreme danger of fraud and falsehood, to say nothing of the fact that these Indians themselves have a very shadowy right to this money at best.

Mr. BOGY. Would it be in order to move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would.

Mr. BOGY. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE AGREEMENTS WITH INDIANS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 668) relative to private contracts or agreements made with Indians prior to May 21, 1872; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill provides that thereafter it shall not be lawful for any United States officer, or other person under its employ or control, to recognize the binding force or legality, or in any manner sustain or enforce or counsel, or give any aid or assistance to sustain or enforce, any contract or agreement made by any person or persons or corporation, with any band, tribe, or nation of Indians, or individual Indian or Indians, not a citizen of the United States, entered into prior to the date of the act of Congress entitled "An act regulating the mode of making private contracts with Indians," approved May 21, 1872, for the payment or delivery of any money or other thing of value, in present or prospective, or for the granting or procuring any privilege to him or her, or any other person or persons, or corporation, in consideration of services for, or advancements made to, said Indians relative to their lands, or to any claim growing out of or in reference to annuities, installments, or other moneys, claims, demand, or thing under laws or treaties with the United States, or official acts of any officer thereof, or in any way connected with or due from the United States, unless such contract or agreement was reduced to writing and duly signed by the parties in interest thereto at the time it was entered into and fully made known to the parties at the time the contract was signed, and then not until such original written contract shall first have been presented to and examined by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and these facts by them severally indorsed thereon, and a copy of the contract and of any assignments that may have been made thereon duly entered of record in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The second section in addition requires that there shall also be filed in the Commissioner's office, and retained therein as official papers, and be examined by the Commissioner and Secretary, and that fact indorsed on them, the following statement of facts touching each and all such contracts and agreements so presented; which statements shall be sworn to specially by all and severally the person or persons claiming interest in and seeking the support and enforcement of such contract or agreement, and not by agent or attorney: First, that the writing presented for examination and record, as provided for in the first section of the act, and purporting to be the original contract or agreement, is in fact such, and that it was entered into and reduced to writing at the date and for the purposes it purports to have been made and executed; secondly, such sworn statement shall give particularly the names of the real parties in interest in the original contract or agreement, naming them if not named in the written contract or agreement, and if either of the contracting parties is a band, tribe, or nation of Indians, or a corporation or firm, the name of the person, officer, or agent contracting in their behalf, together with his authority for so doing, shall be specially stated; thirdly, a particular statement of all and singular the services rendered or the thing or things done under such contract or agreement prior to said filing, with those things to be done or rendered, together with a particular statement of any and all moneys paid or advanced by either party under such contract or agreement, giving in all cases the time, place, and real value of services rendered, or thing or things done, or the kind and manner of payment, whether in money, property, or credits, up to the date of the filing of the said sworn statement; fourthly, state specifically whether the original contract or agreement had been submitted to any Secretary of the Interior, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, superintendent of Indian affairs, Indian agent, commissioner, or other person having official control of or connection with Indian affairs, giving the time when, place where, and person by name to whom such submission was made, and whether by said officer indorsed or not, or whether any such officer was cognizant of such contract or agreement having been made, though not submitted to him for approval.

The third section empowers the Secretary of the Interior or Commissioner of Indian Affairs to require, in writing, any additional facts or proofs that may be necessary to aid in determining the true character of the contract or agreement, or assignment thereof.

By the fourth section it is provided that no such contract or agreement shall be recognized by any officer or employé of the United States until the Secretary of the Interior shall, after full consideration of any such contract or agreement, together with the proofs and papers in this act required to be filed, and such as the Secretary of the Interior or Commissioner of Indian Affairs may require in addition thereto, consider it to be just and reasonable, and not tainted with fraud, and not exorbitant in its demands. The Secretary of the Interior is in all cases to enter, in writing, on the original contract, on the record in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs wherein such original contract is recorded, an official statement showing that the contract or agreement and proofs have been filed in accordance with the provisions of this act and considered by him, and that in his opinion the contract or agreement or assignments thereof are not exorbitant and not fraudulent, and that they are just. But if, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, such contract or agreement, or the assignment thereof, is fraudulent or exorbitant, he shall officially enter his rejection, in writing, upon the record of such contract or agreement, and they shall not be considered of binding force by any officer or employé of the United States.

The fifth section makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to cause an investigation to be made of all existing contracts or agreements, within the purview of this act, now on file in his office, or of the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or any other office or Bureau under his control, and by special notice to the party or parties in interest compel, in the case of each such contract or agreement so found on file, the same strictness of official examination, and indorsement, record, and sworn statement of fact, as is required by the several provisions of the act; but the investigation of facts touching the character of any contract or agreement contemplated by the act may be made by a commissioner appointed by the President for that purpose, who shall report all such facts to the Secretary of the Interior in writing.

Mr. STEWART. I think the committee had better further examine that bill. I fear they have not guarded the very thing they intended. A contract touching the lands of an Indian reservation might be made in due form, not fraudulently, which might be confirmed under this act, though such contracts have all along been prohibited, and I think it would be very injurious to allow them to be made. I do not know that the bill is subject to that objection, but I am afraid it is. I have glanced it over hastily. I think it ought to be further considered.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. This is a House bill which has been well considered by the House, and well considered by our committee. It is similar to a bill that passed in 1872, except that the bill which passed at that time referred to contracts with Indians made from that time on. This refers to contracts made previous to that date, and it provides that the officers of the Government shall not recognize contracts made with Indians unless they have been made in a specific way; and the manner in which they have been made is to be proved before the Secretary of the Interior, and the object for which they were made stated. The bill provides, very thoroughly it seems to me, for guarding against fraud upon the Indians and any parties connected with them. I do not think any reconsideration will bring any new facts. I am sure the bill will commend itself to the minds of Senators at once.

Mr. STEWART. I do not wish to antagonize the committee, but I think it is a great deal better that the bill should be further examined. I think the Secretary of the Interior has no power to interpose unless he finds a contract to be fraudulent. If the contract is fair on its face, he has to ratify it.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. It is not worth while for the committee to reconsider this bill. Let the Senate act with it as they see proper. If they think it worth while to reject it, very well; be it so.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SETTLERS ON CHEROKEE STRIP.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 200) for the relief of settlers on the Cherokee strip in Kansas; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

All persons who, by the provisions of the second section of the act entitled "An act to carry out certain provisions of the Cherokee treaty of 1866, and for the relief of settlers on the Cherokee lands in the State of Kansas," approved May 11, 1872, had become entitled at any time to enter and purchase any portion of the lands mentioned in that act, but who have failed to make proof of settlement, entry, and payment within the times provided by it are by this bill allowed additional time within which to make such proof of settlement, entry, and payment to the 1st day of January, 1875.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs whether there was not a treaty which the Indians have accepted, by which on a certain day they were to receive a fulfillment of the stipulations of that treaty; and whether Congress has a right, after the Indians have accepted the treaty, to undertake on one side to extend the time without their consent? I desire to be informed on that question.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I understand that this is not that case; but this is an extension of an act of Congress by which persons become entitled to certain rights.

Mr. STEVENSON. But my impression and understanding was—I do not know that I am fully informed—that a treaty was entered into which the Indians accepted, by which on a certain day that treaty was to be carried out. Now I understand that this act proposes to extend the time within which certain things are to be done. I only ask for information.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. The bill does propose to extend the time of payment until 1875 to those who have the right to the land or suppose they have it but failed to make the proper proof. I think perhaps the Senator from Kansas may give a better explanation of it.

Mr. INGALLS. With the permission of the Senator from Connecticut, and in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Kentucky, I will say that by the treaty of May 6, 1828, and the supplementary treaty of February 14, 1832, and the second article of the treaty of December 29, 1835, the United States guaranteed to the Cherokee tribe of Indians a tract of country amounting to seven million acres in what is known as the Indian country and in the State of Kansas. On the 19th of July, 1866, by the seventeenth article of the treaty of that date, the Cherokee Nation ceded in trust to the United States all the portion of that tract which was found to be lying within the boundaries of the State of Kansas. They consented that the land should be included in the limits and jurisdiction of the State, and the lands were to be surveyed as public lands and appraised at the average price of $1.25 an acre and sold to the highest bidder for cash, or in gross for a sum not exceeding $800,000. On the 11th of May, 1872, an act was passed to carry out the provisions of this treaty, and that act directed the survey of the lands and their sale to actual settlers within a certain time, stipulating that the lands on the east side of the Arkansas River should be sold at a price not exceeding two dollars an acre and those on the west side at not less than $1.50 an acre. On account of various misfortunes occurring to the settlers on that tract who went into possession under the provisions of that law, the failure of the crops and other misfortunes, they have been unable to comply with the provisions of that act; and this bill now before the Senate proposes to extend the time until the 1st of January, 1875.

The Indians themselves consent to this arrangement; the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has given his assent to it; and the settlers themselves desire it simply as an act of justice to them, the condition being that they shall pay on the deferred sum 5 per cent. interest, that being the same amount that the Government is compelled to pay to the Indians. It is a matter that is agreed upon by all parties in interest.

Mr. STEVENSON. I have nothing to say then.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M. M'PIKE.

Mr. CONOVER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope not. Let us go on with the Calendar. We can go on for half an hour longer.

Mr. CONOVER. I withdraw the motion.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 563) for the relief of John M. McPike; which was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides for the payment of $19,473.50 to John M. McPike, in full settlement for beef and supplies furnished the troops by Jordan & McPike in quelling the Indian disturbances in the Territory of Utah, now the State of Nevada, in 1860.

Mr. WEST. I should like to hear the report read in that case. It involves a large amount of money.

The Chief Clerk commenced to read the report submitted by Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, March 4, 1874.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is a very long report, and we have but a short time. I think we had better take up the cases which can be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside.

Mr. BOGY. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. This bill has been before Congress for many years. I have examined it carefully. It is eminently just and eminently proper that it should pass. Mr. McPike furnished beef and provisions to the Army in Nevada fourteen years ago——

Mr. ANTHONY. I objected simply because I saw it was going to occupy the whole of the remainder of to-day's session and I wanted the time devoted to unobjected cases.

Mr. STEWART. Allow me to say a word.

Mr. ANTHONY. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. STEWART. I do not believe anybody will object to the consideration of the bill when the case is stated.

Mr. BOGY. There certainly should be no objection.

Mr. STEWART. In the spring of 1860 we had an Indian war in Nevada. The inhabitants themselves organized a militia company that went out——

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not like to interrupt my friend, but I am going to dispute the historical facts he states now, because he told us some days ago that they never had had an Indian war in Nevada because they treated the Indians so much better there than anywhere else.

Mr. STEWART. They went out to meet them. The Indians made an attack, and some sixty of our best citizens were killed. There were but few people there at that time. The snow was deep. The United States forces came over, and some volunteers from California, under Colonel Jack Hays. The citizens contributed largely. I gave $700 myself. The citizens generally have never asked for any pay, and I have never presented any claim on their account. Two or three hundred thousand dollars were raised by our people and contributed to the campaign. There was a firm known as Jordan & McPike, who were in the trading business with mules over the snow, and the snow was then fifteen or twenty feet deep. They used pretty much all the capital they then had in supplying the volunteer forces of the army that was under Colonel Jack Hays. The affair was conducted under Captain Stewart of the regular Army, assisted by Colonel Jack Hays, whose volunteers came from California.

These supplies were furnished and receipts given for them under a contract with the quartermaster of Jack Hays, and everybody was required to contribute. An ordinary war of this kind would have cost the Government of the United States $1,000,000. There has never been a cent paid by the United States on account of these volunteers. The campaign was an expensive one and a successful one, but we have never asked for and have never had an Indian claim paid in Nevada. Here a couple of men put in nearly their entire fortunes fourteen years ago. The claim has been before the committees all the time since I have been here. I have not pressed it, because I am not much of a hand to press claims. Mr. Willey examined it upon the Committee on Claims, and made a favorable report some years ago. The committee have again examined it now, and come to the conclusion that the claim is just. There is no doubt about its justice, and I hope it will be allowed to pass.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the amount involved?

Mr. STEWART. About $19,000.

Mr. BOGY. I have examined it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD H. SWIFT.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1575) for the relief of Richard H. Swift; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill provides for the payment to Richard H. Swift of $4,080.24, in full payment and satisfaction of all claim to moiety as informer in case of the United States against Jonathan M. Dair and certain property of Dair, and wherein judgment of condemnation was rendered in favor of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KENTUCKY AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATION.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 375) for the benefit of the Kentucky Agricultural and Mechanical Association; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $25,000 to the Kentucky Agricultural and Mechanical Association, to pay for damages to their fair grounds, resulting from their occupancy by United States troops during the late rebellion, which sum has been recommended to be paid by the board of claims and by the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not that come under the class of claims we have passed over?

Mr. STEVENSON. It is recommended by the Secretary of War and by the Claims Committee and fully examined.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is not that of the J. Milton Best class of claims?

Mr. SCOTT. In response to the Senator from Rhode Island, who I understand addresses me as chairman of the Committee on Claims, I will state that this is not a claim of the class which he designates as the J. Milton Best class of claims. It is a claim for the occupation of real estate by the troops of the United States and for injury and destruction to the property. The bill is reported by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] and it had the support of a majority of the Committee on Claims. There was some diversity of sentiment in the committee as to whether the evidence in the case was sufficient to justify this report in its entirety. I was not myself entirely satisfied with the report, but I shall not object to its consideration, leaving the Senator from West Virginia who had charge of the case to explain it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand, then, the Senator from Pennsylvania does not object to the principle, but to the amount?

Mr. DAVIS. That was the only question.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I have no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed

WASHINGTON INEBRIATE ASYLUM.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. R. No. 224) to incorporate the Washington City Inebriate Asylum in the District of Columbia.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am not familiar with the legislation of the District. Is not there a general incorporation law in this District?

Mr. JOHNSTON. There is a law authorizing private charters.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is there any necessity for this special act of incorporation?

Mr. JOHNSTON. These parties are advised that that law does not cover this case. It is a very important matter; and they prefer a charter from Congress.

Mr. ANTHONY. But the law does cover this case.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not think it does.

Mr. SARGENT. I want to hear the bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the Senator who has charge of this bill will explain it. Certainly it is for a very good object, and I heartily sympathize with all those institutions which treat intemperance as a disease rather than a vice, which I think it generally is; but it seems to me this bill gives most extraordinary powers to the incorporators. They have the power to receive a man who comes there and to hold him there for a year without his consent, as I understand. I feel very reluctant to vote to give any men so great power as that. Perhaps I have not apprehended correctly the reading of the bill, but I should like to have it explained.

Mr. JOHNSTON. This bill is precisely on the model of the charter of the Binghamton asylum in New York, which is operating well there. It is almost a copy of that charter; and as that operates so well, in framing this law that charter was adopted as the model.

Mr. ANTHONY. Under this bill, if an intoxicated man voluntarily or by the persuasion of his friends delivers himself up to the officers of this institution, have they the power to keep him there a year?

Mr. JOHNSTON. No, sir; it gives them the same control that the officials have in a lunatic asylum over lunatics. It treats drunkenness as a disease, and proposes to treat it the same as lunacy is treated. I trust there will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SARGENT. I do not wish to object to the present consideration of the bill, but I desire to discuss it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SARGENT. The question was asked by the Senator from Rhode Island whether the District government was not authorized to grant corporate powers to benevolent corporations, and I understood the answer to be that that was true; that such power existed given by Congress, but that it did not cover this case.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should not think it would.

Mr. SARGENT. I would like to inquire of the Senator who reports this bill whether section 28 of the law creating the District government does not wholly cover it? That section is:

> And be it further enacted, That the said Legislative Assembly shall have power to create by general law, modify, repeal, or amend, within said District, corporations aggregate for religious, charitable, educational, industrial, or commercial purposes, and to define their powers and liabilities: Provided, That the powers of corporations so created shall be limited to the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The power desired can only be exercised by Congress directly; and as this is a great enterprise, and will require the outlay of a great amount of money, the parties concerned do not desire to embark in it without having a charter from Congress itself. It is not that they deny that the terms of that law would cover the case; but they are of opinion that the charter would not be sufficiently valid unless granted by Congress itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Committee on the District of Columbia will be read.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not see that it is pointed out why the powers of the District government are not adequate to cover cases like this. Certainly they are adequate for all judicious legislation. Some of the provisions of this bill are extraordinary in their character, very far-reaching, and go very far toward restraining the liberty of the citizen under circumstances where it ought not to be restrained. Furthermore there is very liberal provision made for the support of this institution out of certain taxes levied by the District government.

Mr. JOHNSTON. No.

Mr. SARGENT. Out of licenses, then. It is very difficult to understand such a bill when it is read for the first time at the Clerk's desk, and perhaps that should induce me to object to its consideration entirely; but I will not do that. I should like the Senator to state the provision in reference to the disposition of the taxes or licenses which the bill provides for.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. SARGENT. I will get the bill and examine it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. That provision is stricken out by an amendment of the committee.

Mr. SARGENT. That motion has not been made.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, sir; it is so reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the committee will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia is in line 11 of section 1, to insert after the word "estate" the words "not exceeding sixty acres;" so as to read:

In their corporate name to take, purchase, have, lease, and hold real estate, not exceeding sixty acres, in the District of Columbia, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was at the end of the first section, to insert the following:

But the limitation that the said asylum shall not take, purchase, have, lease, and hold real estate shall only apply to property leased or purchased, and shall not prevent the said asylum from taking and holding any estate, real or personal, given or devised to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like that explained. Do you intend to allow this corporation to become the owner of all the land in the District because it takes it by grant or devise?

Mr. JOHNSTON. No, sir. The bill as presented to the committee had no limit as to the amount of land the asylum might buy. The committee limited what the corporation might purchase to sixty acres, but if anybody chooses to give them land we allow them to accept it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Without limitation?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the consequence is that this corporation, like some religious corporations that we know of in other countries, may become the proprietor of half the real estate in this District, withdraw it from taxation, and become a monstrous corporation with no power in Congress to correct it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Does the Senator think it likely that the people of the District are going to give half their property to the asylum?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator cannot forget that this corporation is a perpetual one, and that his day and my day will be gone, and perhaps that of our posterity, while this corporation is still blooming, and once getting hold of land it can hold on until it can get more, and so on, and bring influences to bear on people so that they will continue to give. You thereby build up at last—as we know religious corporations were built up in the same way in Great Britain and other countries—a monstrous land monopoly which is free from the taxing power of the Government entirely. The committee could not have intended that; or if they did I most respectfully submit that it is very wrong. This provision does, as the Senator correctly says, in their terms provide for that. I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The bill simply provides that this asylum may buy real estate not exceeding sixty acres, and then the amendment further provides that that limitation upon the right to purchase and hold real estate shall not apply to cases where it is given to the asylum. That was put in in order to allow charitable persons who choose to do so to make donations either of land or personal property to the asylum. I suppose the apprehension of the Senator is rather an extravagant one, that there is any danger of the asylum absorbing the land in the District of Columbia, or any considerable amount of property. I think the suggestion is hardly worthy of consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The practical danger of to-day may be very small, but we are bound as sensible Senators to legislate upon a principle, and a principle which runs through the political jurisprudence of I believe every State in this Union and every civilized country in the world. I have no doubt that the statutes of Virginia do not allow any kind of corporation to hold unlimited real estate, because civilized history shows us the danger of permitting that species of accumulation of real property. Now the proposition is in the District of Columbia that here shall be an eleemosynary corporation that shall have no limit upon the amount of real estate which it may hold, provided it can get it by gift or by devise. Inasmuch as I believe the laws of almost every State in the Union are based upon exactly the opposite theory and fix the upper limit, it appears to me that this ought to be fixed; and instead of providing that they may hold unlimited real estate obtained by gift or devise, there should be a limit that they should not hold, as there is in the other part of the section, beyond a certain amount.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Does the Senator propose to strike that out altogether, or merely to restrict it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. As it stands now, I am opposed to it, and hope the Senate will disagree to it, because in my opinion the Senator himself—for he is an intelligent gentleman and understands history—must see that it violates a fundamental principle of free government; that is, never to intrust to a corporation the unlimited power to acquire land.

Mr. JOHNSTON. If the Senator will suggest how it can be done, let him submit a motion to amend restricting the amount to be held by the asylum to so many acres or to such a value.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can use words "not exceeding so many acres" or "so many dollars in value."

Mr. EDMUNDS. So many dollars, I would prefer.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that the bill had better be recommitted to the committee. There are certainly some provisions in it which ought to be guarded with care; and that can be done much better in committee where the bill is in charge. It seems to me the power given over the liberty of the citizen in some cases is extraordinary. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia to move to recommit the bill. He has charge of it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. This bill is drawn precisely on the model of the charters of institutions which are in existence and which are working well. For that reason I did not suppose there would be objection to it.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator says this is exactly on the model of the Binghamton institution. Certainly he does not mean to say that the Binghamton institution allows a person brought there by the permission of his friends in a state of intoxication to be detained by the authorities at their pleasure for one year.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have here the charter of the Binghamton institution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator read that clause?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator point to the clause he refers to?

Mr. ANTHONY. The clause which allows the authorities to retain at their discretion from one month to one year a person who voluntarily or by the permission of his friends, when he is unable to act for himself or judge for himself, commits himself to their keeping.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is section 7.

Mr. JOHNSTON. That reads as follows:

Said institution shall have power to receive any inebriate who shall voluntarily, or by the persuasion of others, come thereto, and retain him therein for a period not less than one month nor more than twelve months—

Twelve months is the limitation of detention under any circumstances—

as may be advised by the physician in charge.

It is exactly the provision that prevails in all lunatic asylums, as I understand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A lunatic asylum where a man is committed by judicial process and where a man is subject to judicial process to be brought out at any time, would be quite a different thing. But here you are to put a man in prison by the persuasion of his friends, when he is temporarily insane by intoxication; and when he gets sober, according to the ordinary rules applicable to Washington, in the course of two or three weeks, then you say that the physician in charge shall be the lord and master of this sober man for the eleven months left of the year. It seems to me that, with the notions we have on this side of the Chamber of republican liberty and the liberty of the citizen, that is drawing it pretty strong against private rights. If the Senator from Virginia will be kind enough to read such a clause as that in the law of the State of New York, I shall be glad to hear it, although it would not change my opinion of the error of it if it were there.

Mr. JOHNSTON. As the bill seems to be objectionable, I move to recommit it to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before it is recommitted I wish to suggest to the Senator, because I sympathize with the object of his bill, that there ought to be a section at the end reserving to Congress the power to alter, amend, or repeal it. That is usual now in all acts of incorporation, and is necessary to the public safety.

The motion to recommit was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 22, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

DISABILITIES OF RAPHAEL SEMMES.

Mr. BROMBERG. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to relieve Raphael Semmes, of Alabama, of political disabilities. If there be no objection I ask that the petition he has addressed to Congress, asking for relief, may be read.

Mr. RUSK. Let it be printed.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The petition will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned respectfully shows unto your honorable bodies that prior to the late war between the United States and the Confederate States he was a commander in the Navy of the United States, domiciled in the State of Alabama, of which State he had been a citizen for a number of years; that, viewing the questions at issue between the Northern and Southern States from a southern stand-point, he believed in the right of secession of a State for cause, and in a contest of allegiance as between his State and the Federal Government he believed his allegiance to be ultimately due to his State; that when his State seceded he felt himself in honor bound to follow her fortunes, for better for worse; that his State did secede, and upon the happening of that event he tendered his resignation to the then Secretary of the Navy, who well knew the object of the tender, and his resignation was accepted; that being by such acceptance relieved from all his obligations to the Federal Government, which grew out of his late commission, he returned to the State which he believed was entitled to his allegiance, took up arms in her defense, and defended her, and the Confederate States of which she had become a member, to the best of his ability; that at the close of the war he retired to private life and has again become a citizen of the United States, having as a voter of the State of Alabama sworn to support and defend the Constitution of the United States and the Union of the States. Having thus renewed his allegiance to the Federal Constitution in good faith, he desires the prompt and entire oblivion, except in so far as history may deal with the subject, of the late differences between the two sections. He has the natural affection of an American citizen for the land of his birth, and the same pride as formerly in the glory and prosperity of his country, and of his whole country. And he now requests your honorable bodies to remove the political disabilities under which he has so long labored, and restore him to the full and free embrace of the only country which can claim him and the only country which he cares to claim.

Respectfully,

RAPHAEL SEMMES.

Done at Mobile, in the State of Alabama, on this the 30th day of January, A. D. 1874.

Mr. MERRIAM. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the passage of the bill.

Mr. BROMBERG. Does any gentleman object to the passage of the bill?

Mr. SMART, and Mr. HAWLEY of Illinois, objected.

Mr. BROMBERG. I should like to say a single word about this case, and I hope gentlemen will at least hear me a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks leave to make a brief statement.

Mr. BROMBERG. There is not a word in that petition that is not the simple truth. Ever since the close of the war——

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I desire to state the reason of my objection, if the gentleman is heard.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I think this matter can at least wait until after we get the Geneva-award money distributed.

Mr. BROMBERG. I think it strange, that when the House has passed a general bill relieving of their disabilities men who have trained cannon against their fellow-citizens and killed them, a man against whom the only charge is the destruction of a few ships and causing the loss of a few dollars is to have his disabilities remain on his head. Is blood less valuable than money?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I think he can wait as long as the claimants under the Geneva award can wait.

AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 2199) to carry into execution the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution concerning citizenship and to define certain rights of citizens of the United States in foreign countries and certain duties of diplomatic and consular officers, and for other purposes, was recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. CONGER. Is that bill a report from a committee?

The SPEAKER. It is a report which was made some time since to the House and recommitted, and a motion entered by general consent to reconsider the vote recommitting it in order that it might be brought up for action at any time. The Committee on Foreign Affairs report a substitute for the bill, which alone will be read.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That for the purposes of this act the words "domicile" and "reside" are to be construed as implying a fixed residence at a particular place, with direct or presumptive proof of an intent to remain indefinitely.

SEC. 2. That in order to assure to all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, the full enjoyment of the right to be citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside, it is hereby declared:

First, that all persons shall be regarded as entitled to the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, and as subject to the duties imposed upon such citizens, who may have been born and are residing within the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and also all married women whose husbands may be such citizens as against all powers, except the power within whose jurisdiction an alien woman married to a citizen of the United States may have been born and shall continue to reside. But a child born within the United States of parents who are not citizens, and who do not reside within the United States, and who are not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, shall not be regarded as a citizen thereof, unless such child shall reside in the United States, or unless his or her father, or in case of the death of the father his or her mother, shall be naturalized during the minority of such child, or such child shall within six months after becoming of age file in the Department of State, in such form and with such proof as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of State, a written declaration of election to become such citizen, or shall become naturalized under general laws.

Secondly, a child born abroad, whose father may be a citizen of the United States, residing in and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be regarded as a citizen of the United States at the time of birth, and shall follow and have the domicile and citizenship of the father during minority.

Thirdly, the following persons shall be regarded as not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States within the intent of the said fourteenth amendment, or as not residing within the United States within such intent, namely: First, born or naturalized citizens of the United States who become naturalized as citizens or subjects of another State, or who enter into the civil, naval, or military service of any foreign prince or state, or of any colony, district, or people foreign to the United States; secondly, citizens of the United States who may be domiciled abroad, unless registered as hereinafter provided; commercial establishments shall not be regarded as creating a domicile unless made with an intent not to return; citizens of the United States engaged in them may, by registering themselves, as hereinafter provided, preserve presumptive proof of intent to return; thirdly, naturalized citizens of the United States who may, by the terms of any treaty, be regarded as having resumed their original nationality, or who, on returning to their native country, may be convicted of offenses against the laws of that country committed prior to their arrival in the United States; fourthly, a citizen of the United States becoming the wife of an alien, who shall not reside within the United States; but such citizen may, on the death of her husband, become again a citizen of the United States by residing within one of the States or Territories, and becoming subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and filing in the Department of State, in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, a written declaration of her election to become such citizen; fifthly, a naturalized citizen of the United States becoming domiciled in the country of his or her nativity, unless when otherwise regulated by treaty.

SEC. 3. That citizens of the United States who are, or may hereafter be, domiciled in a foreign country may, if adults, within six months of the time of first acquiring such domicile, and if minors, within six months after becoming of age, register themselves as such citizens at the legation of the United States in the country in which they may be domiciled, or if there be no such legation, then at a consulate to be designated by the Secretary of State; the registry shall be made by a written declaration, signed by the person making it, stating in full his name, and the place and date of his birth; if naturalized, the time and place of his naturalization; his place of previous domicile in the United States; how long since he actually resided in the United States; whether he intends to return; if married, the name and nationality of his wife, and the names and ages of his minor children, if any, and the dates and places of their birth. The diplomatic or consular representatives of the United States, as the case may be, shall, at the close of each calendar year, make return to the Department of State of such registries in such form as the Secretary of State may direct; and the Secretary of State shall annually transmit copies of such returns to Congress; and citizens of the United States, of adult age, who shall remain out of the jurisdiction of the United States, and within the jurisdiction of some other power, continuously for two years, shall be held as domiciled in a foreign country, except as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 4. That the foregoing provisions of this act shall not be construed as affecting the right of inheritance or succession to real or personal property in any State. Within the Territories and within the domain subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, real and personal property of every description may be taken, acquired, held, and disposed of by an alien in the same manner in all respects as by a citizen of the United States; and a title to real and personal property of every description may be derived through, from, or in succession of an alien in the same manner in all respects as through, from, or in succession to a citizen of the United States.

SEC. 5. That a marriage in a foreign country between citizens of the United States, or between a citizen of the United States and an alien, unless forbidden by the law of the country in which it takes place, may be contracted and solemnized in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, in the presence of the principal diplomatic agent of the United States in such country, or of a consul-general or consul for the district in which it takes place, and shall in such case have full force and effect, and shall be valid to all intents and purposes throughout the United States. It is made the duty of such diplomatic agent, or consul-general, or consul, on being satisfied of the identity of the parties, and that at least one of them is a citizen of the United States, and that the marriage is not prohibited by the laws of the country, and on being requested to be present at any such marriage, to indicate a time and place when and where it may be solemnized in his presence, and to be present at such time and place, and, when the marriage shall have been solemnized, to give to each party a certificate thereof, in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State. At the close of each calendar year he shall make a return to the Secretary of State of all marriages so contracted or solemnized in his presence within the year, showing with respect to each party the name, the age, the place and date of nativity, the place of residence, and such other facts as he may think necessary. Section 31 of the act of June 22, 1860, entitled "An act to carry into effect provisions of the treaties between the United States, China, Japan, Siam, Persia, and other countries, giving certain judicial power to ministers and consuls or other functionaries of the United States in those countries, and for other purposes," is hereby repealed.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. This bill, Mr. Speaker, is in regard to a subject of very great practical importance. The House will remember that in the President's message the attention of Congress was called to the necessity of legislation upon this subject; and there accompanied the President's message, among the documents, a large pamphlet of some two hundred and fifty pages containing the opinions of each of the Cabinet officers, which the President had called for; containing also a statement of our treaties affecting the subject with different foreign nations, and showing, I think conclusively, the necessity of some legislative declaration and provision applicable to the case.

The bill which is now submitted to the House for action has been most carefully considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It was originally drawn by the State Department, and has been most carefully, in every line, revised; and suggestions in regard to it have been received, and many of them have been adopted, from various classes of citizens interested in the subject. It is the belief of the committee that, as now reported, the bill contains a just, equitable, and practicable mode of disposing, as far as it goes, of the interesting questions involved.

I wish to say at the outset that the committee recognize to the fullest extent the American doctrine of the right of every human being to elect the nation to which he will belong, and to which he chooses to remove from the place of his birth. There is not, as I believe, in this bill a single provision which infringes in any degree upon this great right. We not only recognize and intend to assert the right of natives of all other countries on the earth to come to this country in the pursuit of happiness and prosperity who may choose to cast in their lot with us, but we recognize the corresponding right of every American citizen if he chooses to join himself to any other nation in the pursuit of fortune or of any of the objects of life.

There have been found practically many cases which have come under the consideration of the Executive in the State Department from which it seems that there is a necessity for some rule by which in a simple and easy manner it can be determined whether American citizens have chosen to change their nationality. We recognize the obligation of protecting American citizens, native, and naturalized also. It is therefore most desirable that there should be as easy and ready a means of determining whether persons have renounced their American nationality as of determining whether citizens of other countries have adopted American nationality; and a counterpart to our simple and easy method of naturalization, determining when the obligation of the American nation to interfere in behalf of those citizens abroad exists will be recognized as an object of importance. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the House will feel and understand that the object of allowing citizens of other countries to become citizens of this is that they may assume the practical duties of citizenship. It is because they cast in their lot with us and hold themselves ready to perform their duties of citizenship that we invite them and make such easy and ready provision for their becoming citizens of the United States.

In like manner we wish to recognize the right of native or naturalized citizens, whenever in their opinion their interests may lead them to adopt that course, to change their relations and become practically if they choose citizens of other countries. But we do not desire to encourage or foster a class of persons, whether native or naturalized, who acquire or inherit by birth the right of American citizenship, and renouncing all its obligations and all its duties, actually reside within and practically become citizens of foreign countries, using their right of American citizenship solely for the purpose of embarrassment to their country.

I will state to the House one case which has been brought to the attention of the State Department, and which created a practical embarrassment. Some twenty or twenty-five years ago a young Frenchman came over to New Orleans, apparently in pursuit of adventures. Soon after he arrived he took means to become naturalized, and was naturalized at New Orleans. The year following his naturalization he returned to France without any intention of ever returning to this country. He there married a French lady, established himself at his home as a French citizen, exercised all the rights of a French citizen, had children born to him, and died leaving his family there. His eldest son, born in France of French parents, never having resided, and never intending to reside in or to come to this country, on reaching the age of twenty years was called upon to perform military service. Thereupon he applied to the American minister for protection as an American citizen against that demand of the authorities of his native country, and, under the statutes of this country providing that a child born abroad of a father who was a citizen of the United States, claimed that he should have the protection and intervention of this Government. As I am assured by the State Department, several such cases have occurred, and they have given us great embarrassment.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if it will not interfere with his line of argument. I have hastily read over this bill, and it seems to me there is the same provision in it that the gentleman speaks of as having brought about the embarrassment to which he has referred. If not, then I would like to have him say what provision is made for the case to which he has referred.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I do not propose to go into all the details of this bill at this time. I desire merely to state the general objects which the committee had in view. As I was saying, there are many cases which have occurred which are similar to the one I have stated. It is a subject of great practical difficulty. The object of the committee in framing this bill has been as far as possible to retain the rights of citizens of the United States, of persons entitled to the privileges of citizenship, where the parties themselves are willing to indicate that they desire that relation to continue. The first provision of the bill is a definition "that for the purposes of this act the words 'domicile' and 'reside' are to be construed as implying a fixed residence at a particular place, with direct or presumptive proof of an intent to remain indefinitely." That provision will be found applicable to the use of this language in several passages of the bill.

But the main purpose of the bill is to provide that when a person, a native or a naturalized citizen, leaves this country and establishes a domicile that is a fixed, permanent residence with intent to remain indefinitely in a foreign country, while perhaps he is having all the rights and privileges of a citizen of that country, if he desires to retain American citizenship he shall give notice by filing a declaration to that effect. That provision will enable a foreign government to distinguish by some accurate line what permanent residents of that country claim American citizenship.

It is provided that a commercial domicile, a residence for the purpose of commerce, shall not be considered a domicile unless it is accompanied with an intent not to return at all. And persons who have a commercial domicile, by registering their names with the diplomatic representative of their country, or with the consul, can preserve the evidence of their right of citizenship.

We have incorporated into this bill corresponding provisions in regard to the inhabitants of other countries who may have children born to them here and who are not citizens of the United States, by giving that same election which we claim for our citizens abroad to citizens of foreign countries who are born in this country, and who would be entitled to the privileges of citizenship in the country of which their fathers were citizens; in giving them, instead of naturalization, if born and residing here, the power to become citizens simply on their making their election and filing it here upon arriving at majority. That extends to children of foreign parents born in this country whose parents do not become naturalized here a privilege in regard to acquiring citizenship on coming of age which they do not now enjoy.

We have a number of treaties with different foreign nations in which some provisions of this bill are substantially included. They differ somewhat in their terms, and it was thought expedient to make a general legislative provision which would apply equally to citizens of all countries, those principles which have been recognized in our treaties with particular nations.

The only particular, so far as I am aware, in which in this bill any important distinction between native and naturalized citizen occurs is in regard to the length of time in which a presumption of domicile may arise when a citizen has been naturalized here, returns to the country from which he came, and establishes himself there. We have treaties with several nations of Europe already by which that presumption is held to arise upon two years' residence, and that time has been fixed in this bill as the time to be applied alike in all cases.

I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to go over in detail the particular provisions of the bill at this stage of the discussion. I have stated the general purposes and principles upon which the bill is framed. I will simply say, in conclusion, that it is intended not to interfere at all, and does not interfere as I believe, with naturalization.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I trust that before the gentleman takes his seat, he will inform the House what substantial changes in existing law are made by this bill. I ask this for the reason that in running my eye over the bill, which I have seen for the first time this morning, I see there are many changes, and there may be others which I have not noticed. I think it certainly desirable that the House should understand precisely what changes are made by the bill.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I will reply to the gentleman when I have finished my sentence. I was saying that the bill did not affect naturalization; that it was intended to make in regard to our citizens who go to foreign countries corresponding provisions with those which we apply to citizens of foreign countries coming here, and was framed, as the committee believe, in the interest of allowing as free an exercise of the right to select the nationality to which the man will belong as is practicable, providing only simple, direct, and practical modes for ascertaining what for the time being is the citizenship that he has selected.

In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York, I will call the attention of the House——

Mr. HALE, of New York. I was going to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether, instead of going through with a statement of the entire changes, he would not allow me to call his attention to certain clauses, and to inquire whether those do in his judgment change the law, and if so, whether the change is desirable.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I shall be happy to answer any question I can when we come to the discussion of details, if the gentleman desires to call attention to them. There is one general feature of the bill to which I propose to call attention. While it is provided that under certain circumstances the United States shall not be required to recognize as citizens for the time being persons who occupy certain positions, it does not interfere with the right of such persons on their return to the United States to have and enjoy all their rights of citizenship.

Early in the bill there is a provision to which I will call attention, and which may be a change of existing law, though it is probably in conformity with our principles in a corresponding case. We hold that the marriage of a foreign woman to a citizen of the United States makes the wife a citizen of the United States. We provide here that if an American woman marries a foreigner abroad, and continues to reside abroad, she shall not be considered a citizen of the United States while that relation continues; but we do not interfere with her right to resume her citizenship of the United States by returning to this country. Whether under existing law an American woman marrying a French citizen domiciled in France, and herself going there to reside, and becoming a citizen of France under the French law, would on her return to the United States require to be naturalized as having lost her citizenship, may be a question for discussion.

We do not propose that such renaturalization shall be required under the provisions of this bill.

There is another very important provision of the bill in which a similar rule applies. Our citizens sometimes go abroad and enter the service of foreign governments, the military or naval or civil service, and, establishing themselves in those countries, enjoy the emoluments and honors and assume the duties of citizens of those countries. This bill provides that while such a state of things continues such persons shall not be regarded as citizens of the United States; but whenever they may choose to put an end to such a condition of things, they may under the bill become again citizens of the United States without any new naturalization. The object of this provision (and it is perhaps an important object with reference to the military and naval service of foreign countries) is that such persons shall not be considered as citizens of the United States unlawfully engaged in belligerency, shall not subject themselves to the penalties of treason. We recognize in the bill the right of our citizens to attach themselves to a foreign government if they see fit, and while that attachment continues we concede to them the rights of citizens of the government to which they have attached themselves.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Allow me to inquire right here whether an American citizen going abroad and entering the service of a power actually at war with the United States would not by the terms of this bill thereby abrogate his citizenship, and of course be absolved from the penalties of treason?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. There is no absolution in the bill of such penalties. We recognize the right of any country to impose punishment for crime previously committed. I suppose an American citizen who had in time of peace gone abroad and enlisted in the service of a foreign country, if that country went to war with the United States and he remained in its service, would not be liable to the penalties of treason. We recognize that by that act he has made himself a citizen of that country as against the United States. If a citizen of the United States should join any power at war with the United States, that is treason; and whenever we caught him we should deal with him, I presume, as leniently as we have with all other treasonable persons.

Mr. HALE, of New York. My point was whether in the latter case this bill does not relieve the party of the penalties attached to the crime of treason?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I apprehend not. It is not so intended. Now, Mr. Speaker, I had proposed to yield at this stage of the discussion to my colleague on the committee from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. HALE, of New York. I wish the gentleman would allow me to call his attention to a few points in reference to which I very much desire to get the views of the committee.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I am willing to yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. HALE, of New York. In the second section of the bill, lines 11 to 14, I find a provision in regard to citizenship as conferred by marriage as follows:

> All married women whose husbands may be such citizens as against all powers, except the power within whose jurisdiction an alien woman married to a citizen of the United States may have been born.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. "And shall continue to reside" is in the copy I have here, and is an amendment which has been accepted, and which will perhaps cover the point the gentleman makes.

Mr. HALE, of New York. It is not in the printed copy.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. "And shall continue to reside;" that is to say, as we should not deprive an American woman marrying a foreigner here of her citizenship, we ought not to deprive a French woman marrying an American citizen of her French citizenship in her own country. For the purpose of inheritance, for the purpose of domestic protection it is supposed to be more important she should have the citizenship of the country where she resides.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the fact that this law does change, not only the statutory law of the United States as it now exists, but is also a departure from the international law recognized I think by every civilized country on the earth except Great Britain; in all of which—the United States by statute and the other States by usage and practice at least recognize the status of married women always as controlled by the citizenship of her husband irrespective of domicile—Great Britain alone of all the nations requiring domicile as well as citizenship in the husband in order to make the wife a subject and citizen of Great Britain.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. America I think does not.

Mr. HALE, of New York. The gentleman is in error, and I refer him to the statute of 1855 which distinctly says every woman married to a citizen of the United States is by such marriage a citizen of the United States without limitation as to domicile.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The remark of the gentleman does not seem to apply to the case I am now considering. Take for example what has frequently happened in my own neighborhood. A girl marries an unnaturalized foreigner. The man comes and marries her perhaps because she has some property, and settles down here. He does not get naturalized. Is that woman made an alien?

Mr. HALE, of New York. I regret I did not hear what the gentleman from Massachusetts has just said.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Suppose an American girl marries a man who is not naturalized; is it desirable, she living here and never having changed her domicile, not going abroad with him, that she shall forfeit her American citizenship; and if her husband dies without being naturalized she shall be, as an alien, incapable of inheritance in States where that law exists? This is a provision for that case, to make it correspond with the other.

Mr. HALE, of New York. The converse of the other proposition. That is precisely the point to which I wish to call the gentleman's attention. I am discussing the relation of a foreign woman married to an American citizen, and I stated to him that by the laws of the United States an alien woman married to an American citizen becomes by that marriage such citizen irrespective of domicile. I refer him to the statute of February 10, 1855, (10 Statutes at Large, page 604,) which provides "that any woman who might legally be naturalized under the existing laws, married, or who shall be married, to a citizen of the United States, shall be deemed and taken to be a citizen." There is an explicit statutory provision. I am not discussing whether it is or is not a desirable provision, but I repeat the law enacted by this statute as to the United States is recognized as well, I think, by every European government except Great Britain to-day. What I desire to ask of the gentleman who represents the Committee on Foreign Affairs is an explanation whether such change is desirable and whether the committee intended it?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. It was intended on the general principle I have stated. It was called to the committee's attention by gentlemen who had daughters married in foreign countries, and the committee could see no reason why it was not a fit and proper exception; that is to say, if an American woman married a foreigner and desired to retain her citizenship why she could not be allowed to do so whenever she returned to the United States. We therefore inserted this particular provision, "married women whose husbands may be such citizens as against all powers, except the power within whose jurisdiction an alien woman is married to a citizen of the United States may have been born and continued to reside." Why should we, if she remained in her native country and by the laws of that country would be allowed to retain her citizenship, not give her in this country the privilege of American citizenship having married a citizen of the United States? We do not, in other words, in this country think it would be expedient to require a native woman of this country, marrying a foreigner here, and continuing to reside here, to lose her citizenship in this country so long as she proposes to remain here.

Mr. HALE, of New York. This section, however, does not touch that question at all. It has nothing to do with that. There is another question I would like to propound to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Before the gentleman passes from that, will he allow me to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts what is meant by the exception there:

> Except the power within whose jurisdiction an alien woman married to a citizen of the United States may have been born?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. "And shall continue to reside." That ought to have been in the printed copy.

Mr. ELDREDGE. But still I suggest to the gentleman whether that would not make her a citizen of this country, except as to a single power. Is not that the meaning of it?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The meaning of it is that a woman married to an American citizen, in a foreign country, and continuing to reside in the country of her birth, shall not be by this country, as against that power and against her rights and duties there, be treated as a citizen of this country; and vice versa, if an American woman marries a foreigner here.

Mr. ELDREDGE. But she will be a citizen, I take it to mean, as against all other powers but the one power within whose jurisdiction she was born.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. And continues to reside. Yes, that is it exactly.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Now is there not a likelihood of great embarrassment growing out of such a provision as that? She is recognized by this country as not altogether a citizen, but as a citizen except as against one other power, which is recognizing the right of that power to claim of her the rights and duties and obligations of citizenship.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. We think that a wise provision and one which, in the converse as I have been stating, we should like to assert for ourselves; that is, that an American woman though married to a foreigner in this country, if she continues to reside here, shall, so far as this country is concerned, be continued in her citizenship.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts one question.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Before any further questions are raised, as this is a very desultory method of proceeding, I suggest that, after the floor shall have been occupied by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who wishes to make some general observations on the bill, we shall take up the bill for consideration by sections and confine the discussion to the particular clauses. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] desire to proceed to-day?

Mr. COX. I prefer to go on and finish what I have to say to-day.

Mr. GARFIELD. I give notice that after the gentleman from New York shall have concluded his remarks I will ask the House to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. CONGER. Is it the understanding that this bill shall be considered by sections?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. E. R. HOAR,] who has charge of the bill, suggests that after the remarks of his colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York, the bill shall be debated by sections for amendment. If there be no objection that understanding will be had. The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX. The remarks that I make shall be general, though they may go into the details of the bill itself. This bill has been very well matured by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It could have been committed to nobody more accomplished than my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. E. R. HOAR,] who has given it the very strictest attention. His experience as Attorney-General and his education as a careful publicist give to his dissertations on such a theme unusual emphasis. I do not detract from a word he says.

All the matters connected with the questions of naturalization and expatriation have been more or less discussed in a document to which I refer the gentlemen who have been so anxious to anticipate proper discussion by asking questions. It is Executive Document No. 1, part first, of the Forty-first Congress, first session—papers relating to expatriation, naturalization, and change of residence. These papers, running over two hundred pages, were published in response to a call by the President on the various Departments for their opinions with respect to this subject. You will find in the answers to the various questions which the President puts to the members of the Cabinet pertinent information, indispensable to intelligent and cogent discussion.

There has been no more interesting collation of facts or array of principles on this subject than is found in that document. Whether they are colored by peculiar events or traditional hate of foreigners; whether they mean party bias or individual interest, it is not for me to determine. But I would suggest to gentlemen who are disposed to put questions that they can, perhaps, answer them more intelligently when we reach the minor debate arising on the different sections of the bill, and more especially after reading that document. The questions which the President propounded in the document referred to were directed from the Executive Mansion, under date of August 6, 1873, and are as follows:

1. The law-making power having declared that "the right of expatriation is a natural and inherent right of all people, indispensable to the enjoyment of the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," (15 Statutes at Large, 223,) should the Executive refuse to give effect to an act of expatriation of a citizen of the United States?

2. May a formal renunciation of United States citizenship and a voluntary submission to the sovereignty of another power be regarded otherwise than as an act of expatriation?

3. Can an election of expatriation be shown or presumed by an acquisition of domicile in another country, with an avowed purpose not to return?

4. Ought the Government to hold itself bound to extend its protection, and consequently exert its military and naval power for such protection, in favor of persons who have left its territories and who reside abroad, without an apparent intent to return to them, and who do not contribute to its support?

5. What should constitute evidence of the absence of an intent to return in such cases?

6. When a naturalized citizen of the United States returns to his native country and resides there for a series of years, with no apparent purpose of returning, shall he be deemed to have expatriated himself, where the case is not regulated by treaty?

7. Are the children born abroad of a person who has been a citizen of the United States, but who has become a subject or citizen of another power, or who has expatriated himself, citizens of the United States, entitled to its protection?

8. Can a person who has formally renounced his allegiance to the United States and assumed the obligations of a citizen or subject of another power become again a citizen of the United States in any other way than in the manner provided by general laws?

If, Mr. Speaker, I should proceed to answer these queries in detail, as the Cabinet did, I would only repeat what is in type; and perhaps I can best obtain their best meaning, and give an added meaning to them, by pursuing my own method of discussion. I do not deny that these questions have been touched with great, though partial skill by the gentlemen of the Cabinet.

One thing is apparent in this discussion. It is this: that the common-law right, the old feudal idea, that a man who is "racy of the soil" is always a citizen, has become more or less obsolete. This is manifest by the progress of civilization and international law, as well as by the laws of all countries, including our own. So that now the question is not between a man who was born here and one who is naturalized here, for they are exactly in the same condition, and so far as our Government and its faith are concerned we are committed to the doctrine that a naturalized citizen is in the same troth and plight as one born here. We must love and comfort him the same, at home or abroad. His children are our children; his folk and kin are our folk and kin. Like Ruth, we will follow him irrespective of previous or other conditions. His citizenship is as immutable as if he had been born here for all purposes. When, when, when will the people who remember Columbus, Kosciusko, DeKalb, La Fayette, the gallant Germans and the gallant Irishmen, the McMahons and the O'Donnells, the men who make, fight, and create peoples; when will they remember that they are scions of a stock which emigrates, populates, fights, civilizes, and progresses?

There should not, therefore, be made in this bill any difference between naturalized and native-born citizens. I hope my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. E. R. HOAR] has eliminated from the bill any such feature.

The former and recent immigrations—the movements of men and women on our star—have no parallel in history. Not one word do I pronounce against the doctrine of expatriation. It is the epic of our age. This remarkable movement from foreign countries—from one side of our planet to another, and especially just now the immigration from that hive of the nations, Germany, to this country and to all other lands—is the wonder of the world. The Germans are not only overrunning New Zealand, Australia, and South America, but they are taking possession of England itself. They are not only doing the business of England, but by the thrifty and trustworthy character of their people they are making New York tributary to the good sense and industry of the German people. I speak now of what I see and know.

This bill concerns them more especially, I think, than any other class of our foreign-born population. I was curious, therefore, to know what the more eminent and reflective of our German citizens, those who direct the best thought of the race, might think about this particular measure. I have the responses of gentlemen connected with the German public press. I cannot send them to the Clerk's desk to be read; for they are in the tough Teutonic syllables, which Milton said never echoed the doctrines of slavery. They are not understood in this Congress. The honorable Senator, Mr. SCHURZ, has given me their inner meaning. I accept his statement as that of an honest man. These extracts are from the Staats-Zeitung of New York of April 4, 1874, and also from a German paper of the same title and date in Chicago, and from the German paper of Philadelphia of April 6, 1874. They speak as if they were jealous and fearful of this and similar bills; not because the German people would disfavor expatriation, but because such bills seek rather to deter immigration and to make our citizenship subject to odious and onerous restriction; subject to a net-work of police.

In other words, the general drift of this bill—it was not, of course, intended by the gentleman from Massachusetts—is to discourage immigration, because it detracts from the value of our citizenship.

I might go into the details of the bill to show you this, but I will not refer to details, excepting as far as it may be absolutely necessary. One of the many objections to this bill is a power with which the Secretary of State is clothed, as if he were a judicial person to renaturalize under certain circumstances. This, sir, is a power which belongs to the legislative branch of the Government. I will never give it to the State Department.

Although it may be true, as my honorable friend [Mr. E. R. HOAR] says, that embarrassments have arisen in our Department of State and to our Government in being called upon to protect men who have become citizens here and have afterward gone to their native land to make difficulties, yet I do submit that we might well have these alleged embarrassments, and more of them, rather than discourage immigration or throw a cloud over American citizenship.

What is such citizenship? To men and women, ay, to women and children, to persons of both sexes, it is their all. Many of them have this and nothing more when they go abroad. Should we not guard it carefully? Should we raise any presumption that, because they may have remained abroad for one or two or more years, they do not therefore intend to return? Should we be overprompt to raise the presumption that they have not the animus revertendi? Should we not be careful about the precise evidence required to indicate that intent?

I might go on, sir, for some time to show the House, in a general way, that the whole drift of this bill is at variance with the fundamental ideas of our republicanism as illustrated by those attractive forces which have brought men of all nations here to commingle with us in their and our varied independencies and industries. The old idea under the feudal system was glebæ ascriptus. The idea was that a man was bound to the soil. It was a system that resembled the villanage in England. A man owed personal service to the lord of the soil, the same as his master owed it to the king; and it was born with the child and only ended in the grave. It was from this relation of lord and vassal, or rather of master and servant, that the system of passports took its origin. That system is alien to our federal system of States, interdependent, with perfect comity among each and all.

I might here say to gentlemen who have traveled abroad that the passport system is obsolete. Turkey long since abolished it; Greece has abolished it; France too has abolished it, and even Germany does not require it. It is dead in all Europe. The passport system has now a certain legal status. If the passport be properly obtained it is sometimes evidence in court for certain purposes. But of that hereafter.

But so far as passports are concerned, they are almost obsolete. The world has changed and is changing. Locomotion has changed its ways. Steam and the telegraph, and what not, have made new relations. The feudal system, which my friend has unconsciously incorporated in this bill, cannot exist under our civilization. Therefore this bill is objectionable in two points: first, it recognizes the old feudal principle of supervision of American citizens abroad by diplomatic and consular agents; and second, in that it makes the continuance of American citizenship dependent upon this supervision, and imposes the loss of citizenship as a penalty for disobedience in this respect. The question presented here is not as to the right of expatriation, but as to the right of the government, of the nationality of which an individual has either by birth or naturalization become a citizen, to restrict the freedom of his movements, and to deprive him of his citizenship against his will unless he submits to arbitrary restrictions.

To concede that right would indicate that under certain circumstances citizenship is held merely at the pleasure of the Government. Government may enforce when it chooses its claim to the service of the citizen. It may at will renounce its own duty to protect. Such a construction of the authority of the Government over the citizenship of an individual is untenable. By all the canons of American interpretation it is untenable. Upon it alone can the three principal sections of this substitute be reasonably defended.

A variety of thoughts strike me here, which I will reserve until the debate on those sections takes place. Among others, whether Congress has the constitutional power to pass any such act as this. Would it not be to some extent in the nature of a bill of attainder to legislate a citizen out of his rights? Because he resided two years abroad and did not register at the consulate, is he therefore lost to us? If Congress has the power to denationalize a citizen for being away from the country two years, could it not impose the same penalty for going abroad for any time, or at all? Undoubtedly it could. If Congress may prescribe registration at the consulate as the only means to avoid denationalization, could not the same authority change it the next year, and exact a penalty of a thousand or ten thousand dollars or some other sum for the privilege, or insist upon some less oppressive condition? Some of these suggestions come to me, as did others more important to General Cass, while Secretary of State, from such German citizens as Mr. A. V. Hofer. To him, as well as to the brave and just German press, am I indebted for many suggestions, which hurriedly I throw into this debate. Such suggestions never fail to instruct the men who make laws, even as the Germans made our organic laws in the ancient Wetenagemote!

Mr. Speaker, in what I have already said I do not wish to be understood as objecting to passports generally. They have their utility. I will reserve anything I may say on that subject to some time hereafter. Allow me to say, just here, that it seems to me that this bill to that extent would repeal the act concerning the right to citizenship which was approved July 27, 1868, and with which members are familiar. The motive for the passage of that bill just before the presidential election is not difficult to fancy. It was done to placate our Irish-born citizens. It did not do it to any great extent. But whatever may have been the motive of that act, it was the expression of legislative will. One cannot go far astray in getting at the true meaning.

The second section of that act provides that "all naturalized citizens of the United States while in foreign States shall be entitled to, and shall receive from, this Government the same protection of persons and property that is accorded to native-born citizens in like situations and circumstances."

The third section provides that "whenever it shall be made known to the President that any citizen of the United States has been unjustly deprived of his liberty by or under the authority of any foreign government, it shall be the duty of the President forthwith to demand of that government," &c.

No distinction was then made between native born and naturalized citizens. Nor is an individual of the latter class excepted who may return to the country of his birth. The rights of each are broadly defined as being identically the same. The duty of the President is made the same as to them. Now, sir, compare with this the following provision taken from the second section of the substitute under consideration:

> Thirdly, the following persons shall be regarded as not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; fourthly, naturalized citizens of the United States who may by the terms of any treaty be regarded as having resumed their original nationality, or who, on returning to their native country, may be convicted of offenses against the laws of that country committed prior to their arrival in the United States; fifthly, a naturalized citizen of the United States becoming domiciled in the country of his or her nativity, unless when otherwise regulated by treaty.

What is the meaning of that? It is an offense in Germany for a man to desert from the military service. Such a horrible crime is, of course, committed before he leaves Germany. The man may have become a citizen of this country. He renounces and abjures all allegiance, &c.; when he goes back he becomes denationalized by the provisions of this bill, if I understand it rightly. If so, this bill is a gross and glaring outrage. In some parts of Germany, I believe, citizens are sometimes regarded as having committed an offense if they emigrate.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Yes; the very act of emigration is a crime.

Mr. COX. The very act of emigration, as my friend well says, is an offense by law. When they return to their native country they lose all the benefits of naturalization because of that very offense. And this, in this nineteenth century! And this, when Germany dominates Europe!

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. There is no such law as that in Germany.

Mr. COX. In some parts of Germany such a law exists; I do not speak of Prussia particularly.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. There is no such law as that in any part of the German Empire.

Mr. COX. I will not contradict my honorable friend, who has traveled there. He perhaps knows more than I do about it. He will have an opportunity hereafter to correct me, and no doubt will do it with authority. I will not waste the time of the House or space in the RECORD in calling to the minds of members the clause cited about offenses committed prior to the arrival in this country of the naturalized citizen. It may include the evasion of military duty, or it may go further, and, as I have said, conviction may be obtained for the mere act of emigration. Leaving all these considerations aside, as they would carry me too far, I am constrained to ask if these provisions do not make a very decided, unjust, injurious, and wholly un-American distinction between native and naturalized citizens, and against the latter?

Is not the inference pardonable that the sole purpose of this bill is to curtail the rights of naturalized citizens tarrying abroad? Can such an inference be hid by the addition of a few general clauses? What need is there for such legislation? Has the American Republic grown so weak that it must in the ninety-eighth year of its existence, by a public act of Congress, declare its inability and even aversion to protect those of its citizens who for two years remain away from its soil? Does not this sort of legislation oppose the spirit that speaks through the act of 1868? Is it not contrary to the spirit that prompted the naturalization laws from the beginning of our Government? What the true intent is of these laws, even of those enacted under the administration of the elder Adams and repeated by the act of 1802, no one has better or more forcibly expressed than General Cass as Secretary of State, in his letter of instructions to Governor Joseph Wright, American minister to Prussia. That letter is dated July 8, 1859; and in it the veteran American statesman and diplomatist said:

> The moment a foreigner becomes naturalized his allegiance to his native country is severed forever. He experiences a new political birth. A broad and impassable line separates him from his native country. Should he return to his native country he returns as an American citizen and in no other character.

The last sentence states broadly as well as most concisely the true American doctrine, which was referred to as such by Lord Tenterden in his Memorandum on Naturalization and Allegiance, issued from the British foreign office in March, 1868. Judge Black, than whom no better interpreter of international law ever acted as Attorney-General of the United States, expressed himself in an official opinion with equal clearness in defining the meaning of naturalization. "In its popular etymological and legal sense," he wrote, "it (naturalization) signifies the act of adopting a foreigner and clothing him with all the privileges of a native citizen or subject." And this very same construction was adopted by a royal commission in England, which had for its chief the Earl of Clarendon, and among its members such eminent authorities and writers as Sir R. J. Phillimore, Baron Bramwell, Sir John Karslake, Sir Roundell Palmer, and Mr. Vernon Harcourt (late solicitor-general of England, and better known here as "Historicus.") This commission examined the whole subject thoroughly, and concluded to abandon the old common-law rule of perpetual allegiance. It adopted the American doctrine as eminently in accordance with the enlarged freedom of the age, and applicable also to Great Britain hereafter. Their recommendation was subsequently approved and confirmed by Parliament in the passage of the naturalization act of 1870, the sixth section of which reads:

> Any British subject who has at any time before, or may at any time after the passing of this act, when in any foreign state and not under any disability, voluntarily become naturalized in such state, shall from and after the time of his so having become naturalized in such foreign state be deemed to have ceased to be a British subject and be regarded as an alien.

Mr. Speaker, you will observe from this that it is precisely the ground taken by Secretary Cass and Attorney-General Black, to wit, that naturalization invests the foreigner with complete citizenship the same as birth, and that as to all other countries, even that of his nativity. Can the United States afford to be less liberal than Great Britain? Can we be less liberal than Great Britain, which regards a British subject naturalized here as an alien thereafter within its territories? Why should Congress, then, make a distinction between these two classes of citizens as if the rights of the one were not the same but less than those of the other? This is done most unequivocally by the language of the fifth clause of the third subdivision of section two of the substitute I have quoted, that a naturalized citizen becoming domiciled in the country of his nativity—which by section 3 means a continuous residence of two years—shall cease to be under the protection of the United States, be arbitrarily deprived of his rights acquired by naturalization, and abandoned to the very power all allegiance to which he had under oath renounced in accordance with the laws of the United States.

See how this would work in a supposable case. John Doe, a native of London and subject of Great Britain, emigrated to the United States and is here duly naturalized. After that, for some legitimate purpose, he returns say to Scotland, and remains there for three years or longer without being registered at any American consulate. Having completed his naturalization here, he is under the act of Parliament of 1870 an alien in Great Britain. But the proposed act of Congress would deprive him of his American citizenship also. He would therefore in fact be "a man without a country." Suppose he removed from Scotland to France and circumstances arise compelling him to appeal to the interposition and protection of his home government. He has abjured his allegiance to Great Britain, the country of his nativity, and being an alien there he has no rights. He applies to the United States. Here he would be met with an act of Congress of 1874 denying him all right to protection as an American citizen. Why? Because he had resided in the country of his birth continuously for two years; for which reason he is to be regarded as having become domiciled there and to have forfeited his claim to American protection. This will not do.

A native of Austria (supposing another possible case) comes to the United States and in due time is naturalized according to law. After an absence of many years from his childhood's home he returns as an American citizen. Remaining there for two years he falls under the operation of this proposed new law of Congress, and may by its operation and by the mere will of the American Secretary of State be deprived of his citizenship. But the treaty between the United States and Austria (or Hungary) specially provides that return to and residence in his original country by a naturalized citizen shall not of itself work a renunciation of his acquired citizenship. As a consequence the man is thrown into grave doubts as to his true national character, which, like Mahomet's coffin in the air, may be kept dangling between America and Austria, neither claiming and both rejecting him.

No native citizen can possibly be exposed to any such difficulties, doubts, and entanglements; although under the bill now pending even he may often be unreasonably vexed and harassed. Why not place or rather leave the naturalized citizen upon the same footing as originally intended, as lucidly expressed by Cass and Black, tardily adopted by England, and authoritatively confirmed by act of Congress in 1868? Why change it now in 1874? Has any new light dawned upon our Federal Legislature—the great Sanhedrim of thirty-seven States—that makes it desirable to enter now upon such a retrograde movement? I believe I can discern far across the Atlantic the true source of this intended reactionary legislation.

The Bancroft treaty with the North German Confederation, concluded in 1868, does now apply to all the states comprised within the limits of the newly constituted German Empire, including Alsace and the annexed portion of Lorraine. A native of any part of that country, being naturalized here, is by the terms of that treaty reincorporated among the subjects of the Emperor after a residence anywhere in Germany, though hundreds of miles away from the place of his birth, for even a day over two years. He may be a native of Bavaria; and if after his naturalization in the United States he enters into business relations at Hamburg or Bremen, a residence of two years in either of these cities far remote from the country of his nativity, or elsewhere within the empire, makes him a subject of the emperor, of whom he never was a subject before, and divests him of the character of an American citizen without his consent and possibly against his will. And it need occasion no surprise were it to appear that this very bill has been suggested in the interest of that policy which seeks by every means to render emigration from Germany to the United States and the naturalization of native Germans as American citizens less desirable and popular in the country under its sway. The treaty on this subject of expatriation concluded with the North German Union and now extended over the whole empire seems to have had principally that end in view on the part of one of the contracting parties. The late postal convention between the two countries subserved a similar purpose, by inferentially imposing higher mail-rates on American newspapers and periodicals, printed in the German language and circulating in Germany, than upon those published in English. In all these measures the object was the same—to prevent the spread of knowledge on American affairs among the resident population of Germany. The pending bill is but an appendix to the rest. Ostensibly carrying out the provisions of the treaty, it aims at discouraging German-Americans from returning to the old country except at the risk of renouncing the protection of the United States and sacrificing their American citizenship.

Mr. George Bancroft is a learned and able man. He has large if not wise experience in diplomacy; but he is no match when pitted against men like Baron Thiele, the German under-secretary of foreign affairs; or Lothar Bucher, Bismarck's privy councilor. And as compared in statecraft with Prince Bismarck himself, Mr. Bancroft vanishes. Under these influences Mr. Bancroft was induced to consent to the treaty and sign away the rights of nearly two millions of naturalized citizens, and change the declared policy of the American Republic.

Even our Senate, I might say even our favorite Senator, Mr. SCHURZ, was captured by the transcendent renown of Bismarck's genius. His well-earned rank as the first statesman of the age, his unparalleled success, and above all his professed friendship for the United States, for the expression of which he found a loyally eager mouth-piece in Mr. Bancroft at Berlin and an eminent translator in the suave Baron Gerolt at Washington made him a paramount power.

The return to their native country even for a brief visit by German-American citizens who had founded a new home here, and by thrift and perseverance attained to a comfortable position, is not what the aristocratic court of Prussia, now of Germany, desires. That a man who in his youth left home a poor mechanic or farmer, who had his place assigned him among the lower ranks of society, should reappear upon the scenes of his early life after years of successful toil in his adopted country as a man completely changed in character and bearing, as one accustomed to independence of thought and action, as a man in fact, the proud self-conscious peer of any of the blue-blooded nobility, and as such shine brightly in his own person as convincing proof of the vast superiority of the American over the European system, was too offensive a contrast.

Hence it came that Prussian local officials always had orders from Berlin to keep a sharp lookout for returned German-Americans, and to treat them with the less respect and the more severity the better off in the world's goods they seemed to be. The few who came back poor and told tales of woe about America were seldom molested, and but rarely charged with having absconded from military duty. On the contrary, most of these disappointed people were rather encouraged to recount their experiences and disappointments, and were even helped along and assisted by the authorities. Returning German-Americans are always welcomed with open hands, and invited to hospitable homes—provided they do not talk too much republicanism. If they are disposed to be lackeys to those in power; if they are ready to depreciate American institutions, they are, I fear, welcomed too cordially. Fortunately there are but few such; and for their sake neither Bancroft's treaty nor the proposed act of Congress is required. But the naturalized citizen who has identified himself in feeling with our country, going back there and talking republican sentiments, is after two years' residence there, put to the trouble of a sort of espionage. O, sir, he must register himself! He must submit himself to a species of police or consular regulation. He must do this in order to save himself from a forfeiture of his American citizenship! This is our American welcome! This is our bill!

A large number of our naturalized citizens are justly proud of their new nationality. It is of these that Baron Manntеuffel, the predecessor of Bismarck as Prussian minister of foreign affairs, so bitterly complained that they excite the jealousy of the populace and flaunt their American citizenship even in the face of the authorities. My constituents are a part of these proud adopted people. There are nearly one hundred thousand such Germans in my district. They belonged originally to every part of Germany. Some of them left Germany owing certain so-called military duties. Some have political disabilities. Many might to-day be prosecuted there under new religious edicts or laws. The treaty with North Germany and the proposed act are intended to punish such for believing that naturalization in the United States means what it says. They do not believe citizenship is a mere illusion. It is this class who have reason to love the country of their adoption. They burn with a desire to make others also participants in the blessings of that liberty which they themselves enjoy, and whom the policy of Prussia under Bismarck and others before him would so wish to repel, that they should not return and induce a still larger number of Germans than are leaving Germany annually to seek new homes on this side of the Atlantic. That Bancroft treaty might be termed a convention to impede German immigration to this country, and the bill before the House, begotten in the spirit of that and other similar treaties, could appropriately be entitled "An act to discourage immigration to the United States." For myself, and representing a hundred thousand Germans, I do desire to bring the kith and kin—all the good folk of Germany to this land, to meet and kiss their kith and kin here. Our race so needs replenishing; and are not the Germans so thrifty, good, and prolific? Who could help us better?

The true policy of this Republic lies in a direction opposite to this bill. Not that my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. E. R. HOAR] does not intend, if possible, to be mutual; not that he has in his nature anything of that old spirit of federalism in connection with the alien laws which this country got rid of as early as 1802; not that he would not welcome people from all lands to this country—welcome them heartily and give them privileges and citizenship; certainly he would not place the negroes, who, born in Canada and the West Indies, have become without naturalization United States Senators and constitution-makers, above our German or Irish fellow-citizens! But, in spite of all he may say or do, this bill does go in an opposite direction. I am so glad to be able to say he means well when he does wrong.

Instead of surrounding the citizen after leaving our shores with an irksome net-work of technical observances, the outgrowth of the feudal relations between king and subject and lord and vassal, clogging his progress at every step, or abandoning him to the mercy of those from whom he has separated, the United States should look upon every one of their citizens abroad, from the highest to the humblest, as a voluntary and effective missionary in the cause of republicanism. Sir, I would throw around him the shield of our protection under any and all circumstances. I would copy the policy of Jackson and Marcy. I would do this until he himself renounces his rights; until he becomes recreant to his country and voluntarily assumes allegiance to another. This actual voluntary change of allegiance alone, and nothing else, is meant by the "natural and inherited right of emigration and expatriation."

Sir, the mere duration of residence abroad, although it is fixed in some of the treaties at two years, should be allowed to work no such change of relation as this bill contemplates.

I think that the numerous colonies of American citizens in foreign states should stand as republican outposts in monarchical countries. They should disseminate intelligence as to our country; they should attract new recruits to our home-army of freedom.

In this way the United States could colonize the whole world. England with all her wars and endless bloodshed has failed to make herself loving and kind. It was in this pre-eminently kind and liberal spirit that Congress passed the act of February 10, 1855, declaring that—

Persons heretofore born or hereafter to be born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were, or shall be at the time of their birth, citizens of the United States, shall be deemed and considered, and are hereby declared to be, citizens of the United States: Provided, however, That the rights of citizenship shall not descend to persons whose fathers never resided in the United States.

Mr. Caleb Cushing, I have been told, was the author of this act, being then Attorney-General of the United States, and it stands a monument of his foresight and sagacity. The proposed bill runs counter not only to this, but also to the act of 1868, and must prove exceedingly injurious to the best interests of the country. Congress should adhere to the doctrine which prevailed before the advent of the impolitic and injudicious Bancroft treaty, after which all the subsequent treaties on the subject seem to be modeled. Admitting, as it is but just to admit, that every man has a natural right to expatriate himself, it must be borne in mind that, in the terse language of Judge J. S. Black, "expatriation" includes not only emigration out of one's country, but naturalization in the country adopted as a future residence." Hence I incline to a principle totally at variance with this bill, and I consider it a principle distinctively and truly American that no mere residence abroad, however protracted and wherever it may be, can divest one of the rights and correlative duties of American citizenship or relieve our Government of its obligation to protect the citizen except by his own free will expressed by becoming fully naturalized.

I do not believe my honorable friend from Massachusetts is illiberal. Nor do I believe he desires to be illiberal; but this bill does march in the contrary direction from that which always made American citizenship honorably and beautifully attractive. And although we may have exceptional cases; although we do have difficulties growing out of our being a new land; although we may have our Koszta and Cuban cases, yet all these exceptional cases might well be tolerated, provided we hold over all our citizens the splendid ægis of American citizenship. Can we not do this without detracting from its full power?

I reserve, therefore, my right, if it be proper and not infringing upon what may be the order of the gentleman, to make such amendments to the bill as may appear proper for its perfection.

I have no objection to the last section of the bill. It refers to marriage. Perhaps that even might be better done by treaty. Perhaps many other provisions could be better secured by treaty. Perhaps treaties are indispensable to carry out all of the provisions of the bill. Of that I will not speak just now. Let us legislate heedfully on a question of so much importance to those who come from abroad to cast their lot with us here. Let our legislation be in accord with the genius and spirit of our age.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a single word, as the gentleman from New York is to be absent. I entirely agree with most of the spirit of his remarks, but differ with him totally as to their being applicable to this bill.

He speaks about a feudal supervision over our citizens requiring them to be followed by police, or something of the kind. There is nothing of the sort in the bill. What do we do when a man comes to this country and wants to be naturalized? We provide he shall say so. That is about the sum of it; to go into a court and have it made of record. We do not in this bill provide his residence abroad shall affect his nationality except at his election. If he is domiciled abroad, if he goes there to stay, we want to know whether he wishes to be one of our citizens or not, and if he will just say so it continues. The whole object of that is a most ordinary and thoroughly American idea of ascertaining who the citizens are that have certain rights.

Why, we have registration laws in most of our States, and if a man wants to vote he has to enter his name. And my friend from New York might get up and go into ecstasies about feudal supervision over the American voter because he has to go and enter his name before he could vote.

What is the great harm in it? The real purpose is simply that the American Government may have a means of distinguishing whom they are to protect as their citizens abroad. And I will say that while we welcome all new citizens to our shores, while we protect native and naturalized citizens abroad, we do not want to have any of that class of people who, as Sheridan says in one of his plays, speaking of Little Moses, have renounced Judaism without embracing Christianity, and are like the blank leaves between the Old and the New Testaments. We do not want the class of citizens that have renounced all their American relationships and duties, who have cast in their lot with foreign governments, who take their property and pass their lives there, and consider it a great hardship even to tell our consuls civilly that they wish to retain their citizenship. If this is a hardship to anybody I do not so understand it.

We do not seek to denationalize anybody except those who have given the strongest presumptive evidence that they intend to denationalize themselves and are unwilling to admit that they are American citizens, and who stay continuously and acquire a permanent residence in a foreign country, and are not willing to say to our consuls that they are desirous of retaining their citizenship. But I shall not occupy time in going further into the discussion at present. I believe the understanding was that when the gentleman from New York had concluded his speech the House should go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ORTH was recognized by the Chair, and said: I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations desires the House now to go into Committee of the Whole. I yield, therefore, to the gentleman from Ohio, or any member of the committee, to make a motion for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is not now in the Hall.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. What will be the position of the pending bill if the House goes into Committee of the Whole now? When will it come up again?

The SPEAKER. When the committee rises the bill will be before the House, and immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I suggest that by unanimous consent the consideration of the bill be postponed until immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. That will be the effect of it.

PETITION OF WORKINGMEN.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, presented a petition of the workingmen of the District of Columbia, praying Congress for relief; which was referred to the select committee appointed to inquire into the affairs of the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same.

An act (H. R. No. 2350) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificate of registry and enrollment to the schooner Almina, and changing the name to Minnie Davis;

An act (H. R. No. 2885) to remove the disabilities of Charles H. McBlair, of Maryland; and

An act (H. R. No. 3029) to provide for the relief of the persons suffering from the overflow of the Lower Mississippi River.

BARNEGAT BAY.

Mr. WARD, of New Jersey, by unanimous consent, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of New Jersey, asking an appropriation for improving the navigation of the waters of Barnegat Bay and its tributaries; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

DETROIT MARINE-HOSPITAL GROUNDS.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1706) to authorize the opening of Wight street through the grounds of the United States marine hospital at Detroit, Michigan, and that the bill be now put upon its passage.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to dedicate to the public for the purpose of a street or highway, known as Wight street, a strip of land off the southeast end of the grounds known as the United States marine hospital, at Detroit, Michigan, not exceeding fifty feet in width.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does that bill come from a committee?

Mr. CONGER. It comes from the Committee on Commerce, recommended by them. There is a street there which is fifty feet out of the direct line of the streets laid out in the city, and it is desired to straighten the street by allowing it to pass through one end of the marine-hospital grounds.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury? If it is, I should like his letter to be read.

Mr. CONGER. It is recommended by the surgeon of the marine hospital.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not desire to antagonize the gentleman.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Rule 126 be so amended that less than a quorum of the Committee of the Whole may proceed with the consideration of any regular appropriation bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. Pending the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph be closed in ten minutes. I wish also to ask the unanimous consent of the House that there shall be an evening session to-night or to-morrow night, according as the pleasure of the House shall be, for the consideration of the appropriation bill. Some gentlemen around me state that they prefer we should not have an evening session to-night. I now ask unanimous consent that there shall be an evening session to-morrow night for the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of others and not at all upon my own impulse I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether, if this bill shall be disposed of, he will make objection to holding a session on Saturday for debate only? As I say, I have no desire to address the House myself, but I have been requested by several gentlemen to make this proposition.

Mr. GARFIELD. I shall be very willing if we can get the appropriation bill through by that time. I now ask consent that to-morrow evening, at half-past seven o'clock, the House may meet for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. NIBLACK. Has the proposition that the Committee of the Whole may proceed without a quorum been agreed to?

The SPEAKER. It has not; it went to the Committee on Rules. It proposes a general rule on the subject.

Mr. NIBLACK. It might have been adopted by unanimous consent. I do not object to holding an evening session to-morrow; I think we ought to have one.

There being no objection, the order for an evening session to-morrow was made.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to trouble the House with one further request, and it is that to-day we may proceed in Committee of the Whole with the consideration of the appropriation bill without the necessity of a quorum being present. My own belief is that a quorum will be more certainly here if we try it than otherwise.

A MEMBER. Why?

Mr. GARFIELD. Because gentlemen will not be willing to run the risk of having business done without a quorum. Now they know that if they are away and a quorum is found wanting they will be sent for. We are troubled every day for want of a quorum, and at any time when any gentleman pleases to demand it we are blocked for half an hour. Our progress with this bill has been very slow. Let us try the experiment for to-day. It will do nobody any harm if we find it does not work well. I ask unanimous consent that that may be the rule for to-day in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NIBLACK. I hope no one will object to trying the experiment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It would not allow any amendment to be attached to the bill by less than a quorum, would it?

The SPEAKER. Of course all the work of the Committee of the Whole has to be revised by the House.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I object until it has been adopted as a rule.

Mr. GARFIELD. Well; I insist on my motion that all debate on the pending paragraph be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is a point of order pending.

Mr. GARFIELD. That makes no difference.

The motion to close debate was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now ask for a vote on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WOODFORD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The pending paragraph was that making appropriations for "Treasury miscellaneous."

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on the pending paragraph will close in ten minutes. When the committee rose last evening there were two amendments pending. The Clerk will first read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.]

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 22, in line 514, strike out "two hundred," before the word "thousand," and insert in lieu thereof the word "five;" so that it will read:
For purchase of official postage-stamps, $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 514 and 515, and insert in lieu thereof the following:
The postage-stamps required by the Treasury Department shall be furnished by the Postmaster-General at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon that last amendment the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] raises the point of order that it changes the existing law, and the gentleman from Maryland desires to be heard upon that point.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire that the gentleman who has charge of this bill shall state on what law he bases the point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order under the law which is part of the deficiency bill of last year, and which declares that all official stamps furnished to the several Departments shall be paid for by said Departments at the same rate now required for stamps purchased at the several post-offices. I ask the Chair, to whom I have sent up a copy of the law, to have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the law to which the gentleman from Ohio refers.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall cause to be prepared a special stamp or stamped envelope to be used only for official mail matter for each of the Executive Departments; and said stamps and stamped envelopes shall be supplied by the proper officer of said Department to all persons, under its direction, requiring the same for official use, and all appropriations for postage heretofore made shall no longer be available for said purpose, and all said stamps and stamped envelopes shall be sold or furnished to said several Departments, or clerks, only at the price for which stamps and stamped envelopes of like value are sold at the several post-offices.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I understand, from the reading of the RECORD, that there is but one amendment pending, and that is the one offered by me.

The CHAIRMAN. The first amendment is that offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL,] which has been read. The gentleman from Maryland moved an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and on that the point of order was raised. Does the gentleman from Maryland desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do not desire to be heard any further than to say that I understand that the point of order is also made on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is in error. The point of order is not made against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL,] which simply proposed to change the amount to be appropriated from $200,000 to $5,000.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask the Clerk to read the decision made on yesterday by the Chairman himself.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. On this the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PACKER] raises the point of order that it changes existing law. To this the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] suggests it does not involve any change of existing law as it provides for an appropriation for stamps. The law as it stands to-day requires the Post-Office Department shall prepare and furnish to the different Executive Departments the stamps to be used in the transaction of their business. The other law to which reference has been made provides the same postage shall be imposed on matter sent to or from the Departments as on other mail matter. It is suggested the amendment does not mean for payment to the Post-Office Department of the face value of stamps, but is to cover the expense of their preparation. As the law stands stamps must be prepared in the Post-Office Department. As this is under the heading of the Treasury Department, the Chair thinks were it to be put in here, to be logical it would involve the preparation of stamps in and by the Treasury Department. The Chair regards the point of order as well taken, and therefore rules the amendment out.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I believe the Chairman will now admit that I was correct in stating that the amount offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] was ruled out of order by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment ruled out by the Chair was the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota. He then offered a second amendment, striking out $200,000 and inserting $5,000. It is clearly within the province of the Committee of the Whole to recommend to the House such an amount for appropriation as to the committee may seem good. The amendment is therefore clearly in order. The point of order is raised upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN.]

Mr. O'BRIEN. I withdraw my substitute.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. DUNNELL to reduce the appropriation from $200,000 to $5,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not wish to occupy the time of the committee. I have said all I desire to say on this subject. The Chair has ruled my amendment in order, and I trust the Committee of the Whole, for reasons given yesterday, will adopt the amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say but a word. This amendment simply amounts to this, that we will allow but $5,000 face value of postage-stamps for the use of the Treasury Department. Of course nobody supposes that the Treasury Department can get along with any such amount of postage-stamps. We believe that $200,000 face value of postage-stamps is the smallest amount possible with which the Treasury Department can do its business. If the House wants that Department to get on with their business it will give them the means of doing so.

Mr. MERRIAM. Would it not be much better and wiser for us to employ a clerk at $3,000 a year to frank these documents of the Treasury Department, saving to the Government a very large sum of money, which it seems to me is now thrown away?

Mr. GARFIELD. That might be. But Congress plainly and squarely changed the policy, and I think it is the duty of the House to follow the law as it now is.

Mr. MERRIAM. Even if we can make a great saving the other way?

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. Is debate still in order on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. There is one moment left before debate is closed.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of saying that I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] for the simple reason that I do not believe in the system of accounts between Bureaus and Departments of this Government. In other words, I do not believe it wise to make it the first and primary object of the head of a Department or Bureau to take care of the money that may be appropriated for the support of his Department or Bureau, instead of taking care of the money that comes out of the general Treasury.

Some time since I brought before this House a question of this character, relative to an appropriation made for the support of the Army, when the Army appropriation bill was before the House. In relation to that bill the Quartermaster-General distinctly and plainly said that rather than look after the money of the United States he would look after the interests of his own Department. In other words, that when he could use a route for the transportation of supplies of the Army by which one dollar would not go out of the Treasury, but a debt would be paid, because the amount would be charged against the appropriation that was made for the support of his Department, he would not use it. It seems to me that there ought to be some sort of a system inaugurated by the Committee on Appropriations, certainly a very able committee, by which every head of a Bureau and every head of a Department would make it his primary interest to save the general fund of the Treasury, instead of saving the specific appropriation which may have been made for the support of his Bureau or Department.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. DUNNELL; and upon a division there were—ayes 65, noes 55; no quorum voting.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for tellers. The idea of appropriating $5,000 in postage-stamps for the Treasury Department is absurd.

Mr. BECK. The idea of giving the Postmaster-General $200,000 for postage-stamps for the Treasury Department is absurd.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. No quorum having voted, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GARFIELD, and the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. DUNNELL, will act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 85, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Independent treasury:

Office of the assistant treasurer at New York: For assistant treasurer, $8,000; for deputy assistant treasurer, $3,600; cashier and chief clerk, $4,200; chief of coin division, $4,000; chief of note-paying division, $3,000; chief of note-receiving division, $3,000; chief of check division, $3,000; chief of registered-interest division, $2,800; chief of coupon-interest division, $2,500; chief of fractional-currency division, $2,500; chief of bond division, $2,400; chief of canceled-check and record division, $2,000; two clerks, at $2,400 each; six clerks, at $2,200 each; ten clerks, at $2,000 each; nine clerks, at $1,800 each; four clerks, at $1,700 each; four clerks, at $1,600 each; ten clerks, at $1,400 each; three clerks, at $1,200 each; five messengers, at $1,300 each; one messenger, $1,200; keeper of building, $1,800; chief detective, $1,800; assistant detective, $1,400; four hall-men, at $1,000 each; six watchmen, at $730 each; one engineer, $1,000; one porter, $900; in all, $148,980.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend by inserting in line 582 of the clause just read the words "two clerks, at $1,500 each." This was omitted by misprint in the estimates.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I also move to amend by striking out "four" before the word "hall-men," and inserting "three," so as to provide for "three hall-men, at $1,000 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at San Francisco: For assistant treasurer, $6,000; for cashier, $3,000; for book-keeper, $2,500; for assistant cashier, $2,000; for assistant book-keeper, $2,000; for one clerk, $1,800; for four watchmen, $4,000; in all, $21,300.

Mr. RANDALL. I find that last year we appropriated only $5,000 for the assistant treasurer at San Fransisco. I would like to learn from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether there is any law to authorize this increase, or if not what reason there is for it.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will remember that the coinage law terminated the relation of the assistant treasurers to the mint. They formerly received a part of their salary in the capacity of superintendents of the mint and assay office, the other part being paid to them directly as officers of the sub-Treasury. It was necessary therefore that we should appropriate for their salaries independently of their duties in connection with the mint. We simply continue the pay at what it was for the two offices.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not the case anywhere else than at San Francisco.

Mr. GARFIELD. Wherever there was a change we have made the appropriation accordingly. In some cases no change was required.

Mr. RANDALL. But the duties of these officers are very much reduced.

Mr. GARFIELD. We have followed the law in this respect in every case.

Mr. RANDALL. The law fixes $5,000 as the salary, I think.

Mr. GARFIELD. By reference to the law of February 12, 1873, the gentleman will find that the salary is $6,000.

Mr. RANDALL. In what capacity?

Mr. GARFIELD. As assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco. The Book of Estimates refers to the seventeenth volume of Statutes at Large, section 65, page 435.

Mr. RANDALL. If that was the law last year, why did we then appropriate only $5,000?

Mr. GARFIELD. This law was passed after we acted on the appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Philadelphia: For assistant treasurer, $5,000; for cashier and chief clerk, $2,700; book-keeper, $2,500; chief interest clerk, $1,900; assistant book-keeper, $1,800; coin teller, $1,700; chief registered-interest clerk, $1,900; assistant coupon clerk, $1,600; fractional-currency clerk, $1,600; two assistant registered-loan clerks, one at $1,500 and one at $1,400; assistant coin teller, $1,400; assistant fractional-currency clerk, $1,400; receiving teller, $1,300; assistant receiving teller, $1,200; superintendent of building, $1,100; seven female counters, at $900 each; four watchmen, at $930 each; in all, $40,023.

Mr. MERRIAM. I move to amend by striking out "$930" and inserting "$750," so as to make the clause in regard to watchmen read "four watchmen at $750 each." I find that the watchmen in the sub-Treasury at New York City are allowed only $750. It certainly must be as expensive to live in New York City as it is in Philadelphia; and the amount of property to be watched is certainly ten times as great. I can therefore see no reason why the watchmen at Philadelphia should receive greater pay than those at New York.

Mr. GARFIELD. The disparity of pay is in the law.

Mr. MERRIAM. That is the reason I think it ought to be corrected.

Mr. GARFIELD. The pay of the various officers employed under these assistant treasurers has been fixed by law.

Mr. MYERS. I make the point of order that as the appropriation is in accordance with existing law, the amendment proposing to change the salary is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. G. F. HOAR.) The Chair is of opinion that it is competent to strike out the appropriation altogether; and it is competent to appropriate one-half or any greater or less proportion of what the law fixes as the salary of a particular office. The point of order is therefore overruled.

Mr. MYERS. With deference to the ruling of the Chair, my view is that while it might be competent not to make an appropriation at all, while we might allow a session to pass by without appropriating for the salary of a particular office, yet if we do appropriate, the appropriation should be in accordance with the existing law fixing the salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that it would be perfectly competent to appropriate in a particular appropriation bill any proportion to the salary fixed by law for any public officer, leaving the remainder of the salary as established by law to be appropriated whenever Congress may choose. The point of order, therefore, does not lie.

Mr. KASSON. I do not think there is any law fixing the permanent rate of pay for watchmen; it is only fixed by the appropriations made from year to year.

Mr. MYERS. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GARFIELD] to state his views upon this question. My attention has been called to the matter very suddenly.

Mr. GARFIELD. The form of the appropriation in this case is the same that has been made for a series of years. We have never attempted in an appropriation bill to equalize the pay of the employés in the offices of the different assistant treasurers. This office at Philadelphia is the oldest of these offices. Those at other points were established at different times, under different acts which were supposed to meet the special necessities of each city. There has never been any attempt to codify and make harmonious, according to any one gauge, all these different sub-treasurers' offices. We have therefore taken the law just as we have found it and appropriated in accordance with it. The inequality in this case may be right or may be wrong. It would strike me that there is no special reason for paying watchmen in one city more than in another, except on the Pacific coast. I find that this has been the appropriation since 1867.

Mr. RANDALL. These watchmen are very responsible officers.

Mr. MYERS. There are six in New York and only four in Philadelphia.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MERRIAM, there were—ayes 18, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Chicago:

For assistant treasurer, $5,000; for cashier, $2,500; for paying teller, $1,800; for book-keeper and for receiving teller, at $1,500 each, $3,000; for one clerk, $1,200; for one messenger, $840; for one watchman, $720; in all, $15,060.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the Chairman whether there is not in the paragraph just read an increase of $5,000 over the appropriation of last year?

Mr. GARFIELD. It was only last year that an assistant treasurer was authorized at Chicago. It was not certain how much force would be needed; and we appropriated then $15,060. This year they submitted an estimate for $25,080. They urged we should give more messengers, more clerks, and more watchmen, and also for rent of a suitable office. We did not listen to their demand except to this small extent.

Mr. RANDALL. My impression is that this is an increase over former appropriations of $5,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. How much is the total?

Mr. RANDALL. Fifteen thousand and sixty dollars.

Mr. GARFIELD. These are the figures of the last year. Instead of giving $25,080, which was the estimate for this year, we followed the figures of last year?

Mr. RANDALL. I still think this is an increase, but I will figure it up to see whether it is so or not.

Mr. DUNNELL. When the paragraph in reference to the assistant treasurer at the city of Philadelphia was up, I noticed that the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not refer to his book for the amount of the appropriation now and formerly. I should like to ask him now how the present appropriation for the assistant treasurer at Philadelphia compares with that made last year?

Mr. RANDALL. I will turn to my book to see. The appropriation in the bill is an increase of $3,700.

Mr. DUNNELL. I noticed that you did not call attention to it at the time.

Mr. RANDALL. My attention was called away for a moment to listen to a statement made by some gentleman on the floor that the President had vetoed the Senate currency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment being pending, the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Cincinnati:
For assistant treasurer, $5,000; for cashier, $2,000; for one book-keeper, $1,800; for assistant cashier, $1,500; for check clerk and interest clerk, at $1,200 each; for fractional-currency clerk, $1,000; for one messenger, $600; for one night watchman $720; two watchmen, at $120 each; in all, $15,260.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the whole of that paragraph and insert in lieu of it the following:

Office of depositary at Cincinnati:
For cashier, $2,000; one clerk, $1,800; two clerks, $2,400; one clerk, $1,000; in all, $7,200.

I offer this substitute for the pending paragraph, and will proceed to state the reason why, in my judgment, it should be adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order against the amendment. Last year the office of depositary at Cincinnati was abolished and an assistant treasurer was established in place of it. The gentleman now proposes to abolish the assistant treasurership. The point of order therefore lies against it that it changes existing law. In these appropriations we have followed exactly the law of last year, both as to the force and amount of appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. No person knows better than the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that this increase of expenditures in salaries from $7,200 in 1873 up to $15,260 was entirely unnecessary in the management of the public funds at Cincinnati. It was required by no public necessity. It is absolutely certain that neither in Cincinnati nor Chicago was there any necessity for creating the office of assistant treasurer. The United States depositories in those cities were all that the public interests required. But in the unexampled scramble for offices last session, and increased salaries, the old depositories of public funds, well and economically administered, were abolished, and the offices and salaries were doubled through assistant treasurerships. In this one instance, salaries to the extent of $8,080 were created.

I am aware that this and all other increase of offices and salaries are accepted as a matter of course, and any proposition to reduce the expenditures is received with indifference. It is well known that these assistant treasurerships were created without any public reason for it. These cities did not ask the creation of these new offices, and the well-informed citizens of those cities I am certain saw no reason or excuse for their creation. The public press, so far as I am aware, throughout the West condemned this increase of officers as entirely inexcusable.

I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG,] chairman of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to the fact that here is the office of assistant treasurer at Chicago, Cincinnati, and Charleston, South Carolina, which can very well be dispensed with without any detriment to the public service, and ought to be abolished. The business at these points can be done through depositories very well, and safely as it has been done heretofore.

I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to another fact, that the appropriation for the year ending June 30, 1872, for the purposes covered by this paragraph was only $5,200. It is increased in this bill to $15,260 since 1872 by turning this depositary into an assistant treasurer. He made the point of order against my amendment, that restoring the depositary and abolishing the office of assistant treasurer was a change of existing law. Let me remind him that the change from depositary to the office of assistant treasurer at Cincinnati and Chicago was made in an appropriation bill. But of course the rules look to expenditure and not to economy. Yes, sir; these offices were created by an appropriation bill. And the gentleman makes the point of order that you cannot by an appropriation bill reduce the expenditure unwarrantably increased by an appropriation bill by abolishing the office. Certainly, such is the rule!

Mr. GARFIELD. I profess to have no special personal knowledge of the necessity of what was done last year in that regard except what was represented to the Committee on Appropriations. By the fifth section of the act of last March the following provision of law is made:

That there shall be appointed an assistant treasurer of the United States, to be located in the city of Cincinnati, in the State of Ohio; and one to be located in the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois; and such assistant treasurers shall be appointed in like manner, for like time, and be subject to all the provisions of law to which the other assistant treasurers of the United States are subject.

This was done on the recommendation of the Treasury Department, and the reasons given were in brief that these two cities being central cities in the West, needed all the guards and sanctions that are thrown around the offices of the independent treasury, as distributing centers, as fiscal centers, as disbursing centers of the United States Treasury, and that to sweep away the old depositary system and place the assistant treasurership instead of it would make but a slight increase in the cost of it.

The recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury were such as to convince the Committee on Appropriations that this was a correct proposition, and it went into the bill with, I believe, the unanimous sanction of the House. I do not think there was any opposition to it at the time.

Now, if Congress has made a mistake in the matter it is a very innocent mistake. There are more guards thrown around the public money in an assistant treasurer's office than there are in a depository, and we appropriate here the exact amount authorized by law, the exact amount given last year after the law had passed. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. HOLMAN. These offices were created by an appropriation bill, and the official salaries doubled, and I believe that it was the same appropriation bill by which a large number of other offices were unnecessarily created and a vast number of salaries increased, many of which Congress has been compelled to repeal.

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir; this was in the miscellaneous appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, it amounts to the same thing; and the point of order should not have been insisted on when an effort is made to get rid of the offices thus created by correcting one of the inexcusable acts of the last Congress. This abuse ought to be corrected.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not admit that this is an abuse. I think it is wise legislation.

Mr. HOLMAN. The appropriation bill of 1871 makes this appropriation:

For clerks and messengers in the office of the depositary at Cincinnati, $5,250.

Now for the same service you propose to appropriate $15,260. And no person in office or out of office had ever intimated that the duties of the Treasury of the United States at Cincinnati had not been well and safely performed through the depositary.

There is, therefore, an increase in this one instance of over $10,000 without a public reason for it. I should have made the motion as to Chicago and Charleston but my attention was called away from the bill when those paragraphs were read. Even if we must have those assistant treasurers at $5,000 a year each, I still ask the gentleman from Ohio why he could not leave the other offices as they were left by the legislation of 1872?

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman from Indiana thinks that the force of clerks in this Cincinnati office is greater than is needed, and has any special information to that effect, I will heartily join him in cutting down that force. But the office of assistant treasurer is fixed by law, and the salary provided is not greater than ought to be allowed for an officer of that grade. But if the gentleman will tell me that he knows there can be a reduction in the force employed there, I shall go with him in endeavoring to effect that reduction.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was not sufficiently acquainted with the business of the old depository, to be able to speak of the clerical force required in the office of assistant treasurer; but I am very certain that before the depository was abolished there was no embarrassment in the transaction of the public business with the force provided for that office, none whatever; at least no such complaint ever came to this House. I have learned, however, that while every avenue is open, by appropriation bill or otherwise, to create offices, it is next to impossible to abolish one; and as a practical measure it is not worth while making the attempt; I never do so with much hope of success. Judging from the appropriations heretofore made for the depository in that city and in other cities, I am quite certain that some of these offices can be dispensed with, and I move to strike out the following words:

For assistant cashier, $1,500.

I believe that that officer can be dispensed with. One cashier is certainly sufficient.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield to my colleague from the Cincinnati district, [Mr. SAYLER,] who has more knowledge on the subject than I have. If those who are acquainted with the business of the office will say that this officer can be dispensed with, I will not oppose the amendment.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. Whatever degree of correctness there may be in the statement of the gentleman from Indiana as to the lack of necessity for this office in Cincinnati, there is certainly no reason for his proposed amendment to strike out one of the cashiers employed in that office. I undertake to say that at present the office has no more force than it needs; and if it is proposed to continue the office at Cincinnati as established under the law, there is certainly, in my judgment, no propriety in striking out this assistant cashier, who is perhaps one of the most useful gentlemen employed in the office. I hope the committee will not agree to the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from the Cincinnati district whether any embarrassment was found in Cincinnati in transacting the business through the depository as it existed in Cincinnati until this spring a year ago?

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. So far as I know there was not.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then a cashier at $2,000, a clerk at a salary of $1,800, two clerks at $2,400, and one clerk at $1,000 a year, performed all the duties.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I desire to state that at that time there was a larger force of clerks employed in the office of the collector of the port.

Mr. HOLMAN. They are there yet; the force has not been reduced.

The question was taken on Mr. HOLMAN's amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 13, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw that amendment, and move to amend by striking out all of the paragraph after the words "for assistant treasurer, $5,000," and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

For cashier $2,000, one clerk at $1,800, two clerks at $2,400, one clerk at $1,000; in all $12,200.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he intends to strike out entirely the messenger, night watchman, and other employés connected with this office?

Mr. HOLMAN. My purpose is to give the office the same force that it had before last year, when it was a depository only. The appropriation for clerks and messengers in the office of the depositary at Cincinnati was then only $5,460, and the effect of my amendment is to limit it to that amount now. I will modify it, however, by inserting one messenger at $700.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I have only a word to say about this amendment. If this office of assistant treasurer at Cincinnati is to be continued, it should be retained with the proper force to run it in such a way as will meet the obligations resting upon the officer.

From the various amendments which the gentleman from Indiana has offered on this occasion, and from the readiness with which he modifies them at all times, it is evident that he is undertaking to legislate about something which he practically knows nothing about, and that he is undertaking to modify and change the employés in an office the nature of the duties of which he has not studied at all.

I do not see why he persists in attempting to cut down the number of employés in this office at Cincinnati. I hope the committee will stand by the bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. The gentleman from Ohio who is on the democratic side of the House [Mr. SAYLER] must know that this office is one of those which have been created by the party in power in this endless growth of the expenditures of this Government; it is a part of the system by which the $34,000,000 of salaries are built up in this country.

The gentleman charges that inasmuch as I modified my amendment from time to time I do not, therefore, understand this proposition. I know what legislation we have had heretofore, and the gentleman will not deny, nor will the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that the appropriation for the office of the depositary at Cincinnati was formerly $5,240, and then every public duty was well and safely performed.

Here is an increased expenditure of over $10,000 without any public reason for it; and I challenge the gentleman from Cincinnati or the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to point out one public reason for the addition of $10,000 to the salaries of the officers in the depository at Cincinnati by converting it into an assistant treasurership. I will yield to any gentleman who will point out one. This propositionin the bill is in accordance with our legislation on the the miscellaneous appropriation bill and the legislative appropriation bill of last session, which increased salaries to the extent of millions of dollars, and yet gentlemen are found on this side of the House who are prepared to excuse it because these appointments are made in their own section of the country. It is in this way that these oppressive loads are laid upon the industries of the country.

Sir, knowing what legislation has been had here before, I had some reason to know what legislation was necessary now to secure the proper performance of the public duties at this office. I do not pretend to know what private motives or what partisan motives there may be for the creation of these offices, but I know there is no public reason for it.

The question was taken upon the amendment; and upon a division—ayes 33, noes not counted—it was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For compensation to designated depositaries at Buffalo, New York; Louisville, Kentucky; and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, for receiving, safely keeping, and paying out public money at the rate of ½ of 1 per cent. on the first $100,000, ¼ of 1 per cent. on the second $100,000, and ⅛ of 1 per cent. on all sums over $200,000; any sum which may have been allowed to such depositaries for rent or any other contingent expenses in respect to the custody of such public money being deducted from such compensation before any payment shall be made therefor: Provided, That no compensation shall be allowed for the above services when the emoluments of the office of which said designated depositary is in commission amounts to the maximum compensation fixed by law; nor shall the amount allowed to any of said designated depositaries for such services, when added to the emoluments of the office of which he is in commission, be more than sufficient to make the maximum compensation fixed by law: And provided further, That the whole allowance to any designated depositary for such service shall not exceed $1,500 per annum, $3,000.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. This seems to be a change of law from last year. Is the amount to be paid more or less than last year?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is less by $5,000. Last year it applied to eight cities, now to but three, Cincinnati and Chicago having been made assistant treasuries instead of depositories, and Oregon City, Olympia, Washington Territory, and Mobile, Alabama, having been discontinued. That leaves but three, and we appropriate $3,000 instead of $8,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the chairman the effect of the word "maximum." It occurs twice in this paragraph. What is the outside limit?

Mr. GARFIELD. The outside limit is $1,500.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

Office of the Director of the Mint:

For Director, $4,500; chief clerk, $2,500; one clerk of class four; one clerk of class two; one translator, $1,200; one copyist, $900; one messenger, and one laborer; making in all the sum of $13,860. And hereafter all salaries under the Director of the Mint at Washington and at the various mints shall be at the rates appropriated for in this act.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to move to amend this paragraph by striking out the words "chief clerk" and inserting "examiner," and to fix his salary at $2,200, instead of at $2,500, as provided by this paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. That changes the law.

Mr. GARFIELD. It does. But the mint law as passed last year left the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the salary. The Committee on Appropriations thought it best to have it fixed, and therefore they report this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For contingent expenses of the United States mints and assay offices, namely: For specimens of coins, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $1,000; for books, balances and weights, and other incidental expenses, $1,500.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to move to amend this paragraph by striking out "$1,000" and inserting "$350," as the appropriation for specimens of coins.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For recoinage of gold coins, to meet the difference between the nominal and bullion value of gold coins now in the Treasury, reduced by natural abrasion below the legal limit, and to be recoined, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $20,000.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a new provision altogether. I suppose it is required by the legislation of Congress.

Mr. GARFIELD. The new coinage law requires the Government to attend to this matter.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read as follows:

Mint at Philadelphia:

For salaries of the superintendent, $4,500; for the assayer, melter and refiner, coiner, and engraver, at $3,000 each; the assistant assayer, assistant melter and refiner, and assistant coiner, at $2,100 each; cashier, $2,500; chief clerk, $2,400; book-keeper, deposit clerk, and weigh clerk, at $2,000 each; and two clerks, at $1,800 each; in all $37,300.

Mr. RANDALL. There is an apparent increase in this appropriation; I suppose from the same cause as the other.

Mr. GARFIELD. Partly from the same cause and partly because there has been an increase of coinage during the last year. About $15,000,000 in British gold has found its way to this country within the last eight months, nearly all of which has been recoined into American coin. The process of recoining is thus steadily going on. The balance of exchange is not now so strongly in our favor as it was a few weeks ago, but still while it was in our favor a very considerable amount of recoinage was made.

Mr. RANDALL. It is due to the House that some explanation should be made of this increase.

Mr. GARFIELD. A demand also comes to us from China and Japan, and from South America also, for trade dollars. They are now using at the mint in San Francisco their entire force in coining trade dollars to meet the demand in Japan and China; and the deficiency bill will ask for an additional appropriation to carry on the work for the present fiscal year.

Mr. MAYNARD. I have seen a statement within the last day or two that these trade dollars, being 3 per cent. more in value than our current dollars, are taken and clipped to that extent for the 3 per cent. profit.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have not noticed that.

Mr. RANDALL. That would be useless, for it would make them unpassable.

Mr. MAYNARD. They could be used as bullion; clip off the 3 per cent. and use the 100 per cent. as bullion.

The Clerk read the following:

Mint at San Francisco, California:

For salaries of superintendent, $4,500; assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, at $3,000 each; chief clerk, $2,500; cashier, $2,500; four clerks, at $1,800 each; in all $25,700.

For wages of workmen and adjusters, $200,000.

Mr. MERRIAM. I move to amend the clause relating to watchmen and adjusters by adding the following:

Provided, That the pay of watchmen and messengers shall not exceed $1,000 per annum.

The pay of messengers is now seven dollars a day, and of watchmen six dollars a day. That price was fixed in 1862.

Mr. GARFIELD. I raise the point of order that the amendment proposes to change the law.

Mr. MERRIAM. That may be the law, and the change should be made.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. WOODFORD.) The point of order is well taken.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move to amend the last paragraph read so as to make the sum appropriated $241,000 instead of $200,000. The committee are satisfied that they have cut down this item too much.

Mr. MERRIAM. I would inquire if there is really any law fixing the compensation of messengers and watchmen?

Mr. GARFIELD. We have for years past paid larger salaries to all classes of employés on the Pacific coast.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is such the law?

Mr. GARFIELD. The salaries are so fixed by law; and it has been the uniform custom in our appropriation bills to make larger appropriations for the Pacific coast.

Mr. RANDALL. Last year the appropriation was only $200,000. Why the increase?

Mr. GARFIELD. Because of the increase of business which has required even a deficiency appropriation for this year—the increase of business on account of the coinage of the "trade dollar."

Mr. HOLMAN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that that mint will be engaged more largely in coinage during the next fiscal year than it is during the current year?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly. The business at that mint is increasing beyond all precedent, partly in consequence of the additional quantity of bullion, but mainly in consequence of the demand for the "trade dollar."

Mr. HOLMAN. But that demand has existed during the whole current year up to this time. The excuse for this increase, if there is any excuse, would be found in the fact that in our trade with China and Japan the "trade dollar" is very valuable. But I submit that we have been carrying on the coinage of the "trade dollar" during the current year. I do not believe in accepting the mere estimate of the Treasury Department.

Mr. GARFIELD. But the gentleman will remember that the coinage of this "trade dollar" was authorized only as late as the close of last session.

Mr. HOLMAN. For the last six months, then, this business has been going on.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman knows that the Treasury Department has not for five years sent an estimate to this House that was not above what was necessary to be appropriated. There is not an estimate in the book that cannot be reduced without interfering with any public interest whatever.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows, under the heading "Mint at San Francisco, California:"

For material and repairs, fuel, lights, chemicals, and other necessaries, $59,545.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend by striking out "$59,545," and inserting "$75,000."

Mr. RANDALL. So we go, from bad to worse!

Mr. GARFIELD. This is for precisely the same reason as the last amendment, in order to increase the efficiency of this mint. Everybody knows, too, that the new mint building is larger and of greater capacity than the old.

Mr. MERRIAM. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair on the amendment offered to the last paragraph. There is no law regulating these salaries. The provision on the subject in the coinage act is as follows:

And to the workmen shall be allowed such wages, to be determined by the superintendent, as may be customary and reasonable according to their respective stations and occupations, and approved by the Director of the Mint.

Several MEMBERS. It is too late to take an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. Technically it is too late for the gentleman to take an appeal. The Chair based his ruling upon the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that there was a law which the amendment proposed to change.

Mr. GARFIELD. It appears by the law which the gentleman has read that the superintendent, with the approval of the Director of the Mint, was authorized to fix these salaries. The rate of pay having been fixed under that authority of law, the gentleman, in proposing to change the pay, proposed to change the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot entertain the appeal except by unanimous consent, because it requires unanimous consent to go back. Is there objection?

Several members objected.

Mr. GARFIELD. I submit for the information of the committee the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT,
March 19, 1874.

SIR: Referring to my verbal statements and the papers sent in explanation of the mint estimates, I beg to submit the following remarks:

The mints and assay offices are manufactories of bars and coin, and the expenses for any year, except as to salaries and the regular force of experts and skilled workmen, which it is necessary to retain at all times, will be in proportion to the amount of work performed.

The business of the mints has been very largely increased since the 1st of April, 1873, the date when the new coinage act took effect, by reason of—

First. The change in the course of bullion, on account of the reduction of the coinage charge from ½ to ⅓ of 1 per cent. and which, with lower rates of foreign exchange than existed for some time previous, induced the entire gold product of the country to go to the mints for coinage.

Before that date nearly half of the gold bullion produced was exported in an unminted condition, the average annual gold coinage of all the mints from 1868 to 1872, inclusive, having been about $20,000,000, against an annual average production of about $40,000,000.

Second. The importation and mintage of about $16,000,000 of foreign gold bullion and coin.

Third. The successful introduction into China of the American trade dollar and a consequent large demand for the coinage thereof.

Fourth. The coinage of gold coin reduced by natural abrasion below the limit of wear as fixed by the principal commercial nations and our own coinage act.

Fifth. An increased coinage of subsidiary silver during the year to supply the demand from Texas and the Central and South American states where those coins circulate at their nominal value.

The foregoing additional business has rendered it necessary to run the three coinage mints and the assay office at New York not only to their full capacity since the 1st of April last but during extra hours for a portion of the time, and I regard the comparatively small sum required in addition to the amount ordinarily appropriated for the support of the mints as proving beyond question that the utmost economy consistent with the prompt and proper execution of the coinage has been observed by the Mint officers generally.

The law places no restriction on the receipt of deposits of bullion at the mints; and, however large they may be, it is our duty to convert them into coin or bars, as the case may be, and meet the consequent expenses until the appropriations for that purpose are exhausted.

As to the question of policy, there cannot, I think, be any doubt that our gold bullion should all be converted into coin, and this for the reason that inasmuch as bullion in the form of bars cannot be profitably retained as a reserve or otherwise by banks and bankers in this country, it must seek a foreign market if for the outturn only unless made into coins, and which will not be exported unless required to adjust foreign balances; and so long as silver coins command a reasonable premium on their intrinsic value for export to other countries, as they have for some time past, commercial policy, and the fact that ours is the largest silver-producing country, require that we should coin as much silver as we can in addition to the required gold and minor coinage.

It is proper to state at this point that we shall no doubt be called upon to execute coinage for other countries under the act approved January 29, 1874, authorizing the same.

I have made the foregoing statements with a view to show the importance of keeping our mints and assay offices in a high state of efficiency, and of making the necessary appropriations for their proper support, the greater portion of which will be returned to the Treasury from the various charges on deposits of bullion; seignorage or gain on silver and minor coinage; sale of by-products, &c., the moneys arising from which are, under the coinage act, payable at least twice a year into the Treasury of the United States.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. R. LINDERMAN,
Director.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. GARFIELD's amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mint at Carson, Nevada:

For salaries of superintendent, $3,000; assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, at $2,500 each; chief clerk, $2,500; cashier and book-keeper, at $2,000 each; weigh-clerk and voucher clerk, at $2,000 each; computing clerk, $2,000; assayer's clerk, $1,600; in all, $24,600.

For wages of workmen and adjusters, $67,000.

For materials and repairs, fuel, light, charcoal, chemicals, and other necessaries $53,200.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I should like to have some explanation from the Committee on Appropriations as to the necessity for this large appropriation for the mint at Carson, Nevada.

Mr. GARFIELD. The reason I gave in reference to the San Francisco mint applies to all these mints west of the mountains. It is because of the increase of business during the year. We have a statement from the Director showing there has been a large increase of business at Carson. They are producing both silver and gold—silver in large quantities.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I move to strike out the last word. I do not think the gentleman's explanation goes far enough.

Mr. GARFIELD. We have been urged to increase the appropriations in the last two paragraphs for wages of workmen and adjusters and for materials and repairs. I wish in general to make this statement. We have the report of the Director of the Mint as to the product of gold and silver during the past year and its relative increase over former years. At Carson a large amount of business is done in the way of separating gold and silver. It is found there in a mixture and the work of separating it is not only valuable but has largely increased, so much so that the committee have been urgently pressed by the Director of the Mint and the Secretary of the Treasury to increase the appropriation, as I have already said, in the two paragraphs for wages of workmen and adjusters, and materials, repairs, fuel, light, charcoal, chemicals, and other necessaries.

The gentleman from Vermont desires information as to the necessity for this appropriation. I have here a tabular statement, which if the gentleman desires, I will have printed in my remarks. In this tabular statement, for instance, I find at Carson, Nevada, the amount of gold coined during the six months ending December 31, 1872, was $2,129,862.76, and of silver $1,532,000; and during the six months ending December 31, 1873, the figures given here are about the same, being, if anything, a small decrease. Both of these years there was a large sum produced, amounting to nearly $4,000,000.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. What I wish to get at from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is the necessity for this increase of appropriation.

Mr. GARFIELD. It arises from the coinage of the trade dollar, and from separating the silver and gold, which is an expensive although necessary process.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I am not prepared to determine how much should be expended for this Carson City mint. I only know, Mr. Chairman, that for the last three or four years this mint has been asking for larger appropriations every year, and now that so large a sum is asked for I thought when the committee proposed to nearly double the appropriation they would be prepared to state some good reason for it. From what has been stated by the chairman of the committee just now it would seem that the amount coined for the six months ending December 31, 1873, is about the same that was coined for the six months ending December 31, 1872; that therefore does not show any increase in the business and can be no good ground for asking any increase of appropriation. When an increase of nearly double of former appropriations is asked for in this bill, it seems to me we ought to have some justification for it put upon the record.

Mr. GARFIELD. The following letter from the superintendent of the mint at Carson, Nevada, together with the accompanying estimate, to the Director of the Mint will show precisely what ground there is for this appropriation:

THE MINT OF THE UNITED STATES AT CARSON,
Superintendent's Office, February 6, 1874.

SIR: I yesterday forwarded you the details of my estimated deficiency in the appropriations for the current fiscal year, caused by the entire change of our business from unparted bars with a limited coinage to fine bars with the increased coinage which the separation of the gold from all the silver deposits gives. This change necessitates the constant working of the refinery, the most expensive branch of the institution, and considerable increase of work in the coining department, the next expensive branch of the business.

Should this continue, or should the Government decide upon putting us upon subsidiary coin, of course this increased cost of running this mint will continue.

The depreciation of silver, it seems likely, will continue to direct our work into fine silver bars and trade dollars, as the most productive shape in which the products of the mines can be exported, whatever may be the course pursued by the Government with respect to subsidiary coins.

I have therefore remodeled my estimates for the appropriations for the support of this mint during the fiscal years of 1874–'75, the figures of which I inclose, based upon our present rates of consumption and expenditure.

By it you will see that in all the leading articles of supply affected by the increased activity in the refinery the cost is doubled, thus: When my first estimate was made we were using one and a half cords of wood. The increased power required for driving purposes and for steam for separating has increased our consumption at the present time to three and one-eighth cords per day. When the largest portion of our work was unparted bars, and the proportion requiring separation small, we consumed about twenty thousand pounds sulphuric acid per month; our consumption now is fifty thousand pounds per month, so that I have doubled the estimate for this branch of expense, except that I have based my estimate on present purchase price, which is less than that stated in my original estimate.

The consumption of charcoal, too, has more than doubled. Hard coal costs fifty dollars instead of forty dollars, as in the original estimate, and for this I have made an allowance. The quantity I think need not be increased. The quantity of copper used is more than doubled, and the consumption of crucibles, chemicals, and other supplies is largely increased.

The estimate for labor I have based upon present cost with the additions of such employés as are necessary in the coiner's department, to enable that department to keep its work up with the melter and refiner's.

These changes in the cost of running this mint, rendered necessary by the changes in the description of work done, call for an increase on my original estimate for the fiscal year of 1874–'75 of $56,617 and make the total amount necessary to be appropriated $233,317, distributed as follows, namely:

Salaries, as per original estimate	$28,600
Wages, as readjusted	88,717
Incidental expenses, as readjusted	116,000
Total	233,317

Very respectfully,

FRANK D. HETRICH,
Superintendent.

Hon. H. R. LINDERMAN,
Director of the Mint.

Supplementary estimate for annual appropriations for the support of the United States mint at Carson, Nevada, during the fiscal year 1874–'75.

Wood, 1,000 cords, at $11	$11,000 00
Less, estimated for	5,500 00
		$5,500 00
Acid, 600,000 pounds, at 6½ cents coin, will be in currency	44,000 00
Less, estimated for 300,000 pounds, at 11 cents	33,000 00
		11,000 00
Charcoal, 24,000 bushels, at 30 cents coin, is in currency	8,000 00
Less, estimated for	3,600 00
		4,400 00
Hard coal, 300 tons, at $45 coin, is in currency	15,000 00
Less, estimated for $40 currency	12,000 00
		3,000 00
Copper, crucible, fluxes, repairs, gloves, aprons, mittens, iron, lumber, bunting, stationery, and other incidental expenses, estimated at $19,000, at same rate will be		19,000 00
Wages:
Appropriation for 1873–'74	$67,000 00
Deficiency on this year	15,576 00
	82,576 00
Estimated for 1874–'75	$75,000 00
	7,576 00
Extra labor required for full working of the mint:
1 cutter and 1 assistant annealer	3,950 00
2 adjusters	2,191 00
		$13,717 00
		56,617 00

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mint at New Orleans, Louisiana:

For salaries of assayer, and melter and refiner, $2,500 each; wages of three workmen, $3,000; for fuel, lights, acids, chemicals, and crucibles, $2,000; and for apparatus necessary to put the mint in condition, $5,000; in all, $15,000.

Mr. SYPHER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment in the nature of a substitute for the lines of the bill commencing with 820 and ending with 826, inclusive, as follows:

Mint at New Orleans, Louisiana:

For repairs of machinery and apparatus and for new machinery required to put the mint in condition for coinage of gold and silver, $30,000; for salaries of assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, $2,500 each, $7,500; wages of workmen $8,000; incidental expenses, $4,500.

The sum total of these items is $50,000, which is $16,700 less than the director of the mint reports as necessary "to make a fair start."

The mint was originally established at New Orleans in the year 1838, and was the second in importance in the country for a period of twenty years, until suspended by the breaking out of the war. Coinage was executed there to upward of seventy millions, about half of which was Mexican silver.

The ground upon which the mint building is located was donated to the United States by the city of New Orleans for the express purpose of erecting and operating a mint. The act of donation provides that whenever the ground shall not be used by the United States Government for purposes of coinage it shall revert to the city. No coinage has been executed at that mint since the war. The Government has occupied a part of the building for the assistant treasurer. The intent of the act donating the site has not been carried out, yet the city of New Orleans has made no demand upon the United States Government for the restoration of the property, believing that the time would come when the interests of the country would again require this property for its former purpose.

Mr. Chairman, that time has in my opinion now arrived. The increased demand for gold and silver coin in our country requires increased facilities for its manufacture.

Under the act of Congress authorizing recoinage of specie below the standard weight prescribed by law much additional labor is imposed upon the mints now in operation in other parts of the country. On this subject the Director of the Mint of the United States, in his annual report to the Secretary of the Treasury, says:

By your direction, the amount believed to be necessary to place the mint at New Orleans in condition for coinage operations, and for its support during the fiscal year, was included in the estimates of appropriations for the mints and assay offices. * * * * * * * *

A gratifying increase of business at the San Francisco and Philadelphia mints, and assay office, New York, took place immediately on and after the coinage act became operative, and which has recently been greatly augmented in consequence of large importations of foreign coin and bullion, and the almost total cessation of bullion exports. * * * * * * * *

Some idea of the increase of operations may be formed when it is stated that the coinage of gold during the month of October approximated in value $14,000,000.

It is well known that much of the gold and silver coin in circulation below the standard weight is in the Southern States, especially in Texas, where "hard money" has never ceased to be the circulating medium. In the course of trade large amounts of this specie finds its way to New Orleans; it is there offered in payment of duties to the Government, and cannot be received except in accordance with the fourteenth section of the coinage act and the regulations of the Treasury Department, requiring a fixed standard. During the past year the Department issued instructions to the collector of that port to receive no gold in payment of duties under the prescribed legal standard. To have carried out these instructions rigidly, would have stopped all importations at that port, there being no gold of the required standard attainable in that market.

Besides the home necessity for reopening this mint at New Orleans, good faith to foreign countries demand it, to enable our Government to comply with the terms of the act passed at the beginning of this session, authorizing our mints to coin for foreign nations, some of whom are already inquiring upon what conditions our Government will afford them these facilities. Under this act it is believed that our Government will be able to offer superior advantages, especially to the countries south of us, Mexico and the Central and South American States; it will be a saving of time and money to these countries to have this Government manufacture their coin, and nations, like individuals, seek trade relations most advantageous to themselves. Then since you have solicited, as it were, the patronage of foreign nations by the enactment of the coinage act, it becomes your duty to furnish the necessary facilities to perform the work.

American merchants have for a century coveted the trade of China and Japan. Now for the first time these countries open wide their ports to our ships, and supersede the Mexican dollar, their standard of value for many years, with our American trade dollar, for which they pay us in gold. Republican Switzerland, a bright example across the Atlantic of our own great Republic, is among the first to avail herself of the advantages offered by our Government to manufacture her coin, of which France has in the past had the exclusive monopoly. In Central America the peso, or dollar, corresponds in value very nearly with our subsidiary silver coin, and circulates largely, so that the adoption of our fractional silver would be only a slight departure from their present circulating medium. The silver dollar is well known among civilized nations, and the demand for it is rapidly on the increase, and no short-sighted policy of mistaken economy should prevent this Government from supplying that demand as well as becoming, as we are destined to be, the bullion depot for the civilized world.

If the interests involved in reorganization and operation of the mint at New Orleans were altogether local or even national, the argument against this appropriation on the ground of economy might apply with some force, but the interests involved are international. Mexico, our nearest neighbor, only three days' sail from New Orleans, sends annually away from our shores in British bottoms twenty-two millions of bullion. Is it wise statesmanship or genuine economy to permit this state of things to continue from year to year without an effort to direct at least a portion of this valuable trade into American ports? I think not. This is a subject to which the popular harangue of the demagogue on "economy and retrenchment" does not apply; true economy and wise policy dictate that this appropriation should be made and made now.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Will the gentleman from Louisiana permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SYPHER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Does not the gentleman think that the appropriation in the bill is enough to save forfeiture of the title?

Mr. SYPHER. I will answer the gentleman's question with pleasure. For twelve years there has been no coinage executed at the New Orleans mint, yet the city has made no effort to have the property restored. The people of my city appreciate the importance and necessity of re-establishing that mint, and while there is a prospect that Congress will appropriate money to meet that public necessity they will not be likely to make such effort. But it is not merely an appropriation to prevent forfeiture of title that we desire or that the public interests demand, without reference to the justice due the generous donors; it is an appropriation sufficient to put that mint in condition to manufacture gold and silver coin; and until that is accomplished I shall not cease my efforts.

It requires no great wisdom to foresee as the result of manufacturing the coin of foreign nations the establishment of amicable commercial relations with nations whose trade will add millions to the wealth of our people. Every consideration of local and national interest demand the re-establishment of this mint, located as it is upon the extreme southern border of our country, at the second exporting city of the Union, the metropolis of the south; at the mouth of the greatest commercial artery of the world, tributary to nineteen States and Territories. If that is not a fit location for such an establishment to manufacture coin for this and foreign nations, then there is none suitable to be found in the Republic.

Mr. GARFIELD. The estimate for this purpose was $70,000. The committee gave a special hearing on the subject, and were impressed with one fact: that under the peculiar tenure by which we hold the property on which the mint now stands it would lapse if it ceased to be occupied as a mint after a certain specified time.

Mr. RANDALL. The dedication was to lapse?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes; the property would go out of the hands of the United States. We were not willing to lay out $70,000 to establish a full force as a mint. But we were willing to give enough to save our title and begin the work. We believe that what we have done is enough, and I hope the gentleman's amendment will be voted down. If it is voted down I am requested by the chairman of the Committee on Coinage to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, which will more fully carry out the law in regard to this matter.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us vote on the one amendment before the other is offered.

Mr. MOREY. I ask that the substitute offered by my colleague [Mr. SYPHER] may be again read.

Mr. SYPHER's amendment was again read.

Mr. SYPHER. Those items are as fixed by the Director of the Mint.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOREY] desire to address the committee?

Mr. MOREY. All I wished was that the amendment might be read, that the committee might vote intelligently as between the two propositions.

The question being taken on Mr. SYPHER's amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now offer the amendment which I have indicated.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "mint at New Orleans, Louisiana," and insert the following: To reopen the branch mint at New Orleans, to be conducted hereafter as a mint, subject to the provisions and restrictions of the coinage act of 1873, the following appropriations are made.

Mr. GARFIELD. This is merely to put it formally under the control of the coinage act.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not object to this amendment, but I wish to ask the genleman from Ohio whether the real intention is to put this mint in operation during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not supposed that it can be put in operation, but we can make repairs on it so as to retain the title.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand the motive; but is it necessary to provide for a large number of salaries, and such high salaries, too, when the only object is to retain control of the property?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is necessary that it shall be conducted as a mint, and if you have the essential officers of a mint, so as to comply with the law, they can be employed in putting the machinery in order, and this appropriation of $15,000 is to enable them to do that.

Mr. SHELDON. I would like to say to the gentleman from Indiana that it is our purpose to have the mint re-established for the purpose of doing business, as it will be a source of great profit to the country, because it lies contiguous to a country that produces both silver and gold, and we expect to be able to coin, as we did before the war. From 1848 to 1860 when gold coinage was established, and from 1838 to 1860 when silver coinage was established, we coined over $70,000,000, and I do not want the House to understand that we do not intend to re-establish that mint for permanent use. That is all I wish to say. I did not want there to be any mistake about the matter.

The question was taken on Mr. GARFIELD's amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move further to amend the paragraph by inserting after the word "apparatus," in line 824, the words "and repairs;" so that it will read—

And for apparatus and repairs necessary to put the mint in condition, $5,000; in all, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assay-office at New York:

For salary of superintendent, $4,500; for assayer, and melter and refiner, $3,000 each; chief clerk, $2,400; three clerks, at $2,000 each; and four clerks, at $1,800 each; for assistants to superintendents in assayer's room and weigh-room, $10,000; in all, $36,100.

Mr. RANDALL. I find that this is a very large increase over the appropriation last year. I think it is as much as $29,900 increase.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is an increase over the appropriation of last year, but it is a very considerable decrease on the estimates. That is the only answer we have to make. A very great pressure was brought to bear on the committee to make the increase much larger than we made it.

Mr. POLAND. I propose to move an increase.

Mr. MERRIAM. For the benefit of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] I will explain that the bullion received and operated upon in the assay office in New York from the 30th of June, 1871, to the 1st of July, 1872, was $11,088,600, whereas during the last year it was over $34,775,000, requiring an increase of force. Evidently with such an increase of business it is necessary that there should be an increase of expenses.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, the appropriation of last year was only $6,000, and the appropriation in this bill is $36,000.

Mr. MERRIAM. They had some unexpended balance before.

Mr. RANDALL. The chairman of the committee does not seem to give us an intelligent answer.

Mr. MERRIAM. I am not chairman of the committee.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out in line 830 "$2,400" and inserting $3,000," so that it will read, "chief clerk, $3,000;" in line 831 by striking out "two" and inserting "three," so that it will read, "three clerks, at $3,000 each;" and in lines 831 and 832, by striking out "$1,800" and inserting "$2,500," so that it will read, "four clerks, at $2,500 each."

This amendment which I offer is merely to place these salaries just where they have been before, and where they are at the present time. The men who are employed in this assay office have most responsible positions. We want men in all these places of the very highest character. These gentlemen are obliged to live in the city of New York, where the expense of living is very great, and it seems to me it is not only unjust, but exceedingly unwise, to undertake to put men occupying those positions and performing those duties upon such meager pay and allowances as the Committee on Appropriations propose. I am not aware of any reason why the pay of these men should be reduced. I know some of the gentlemen personally, and we know that if we have not men in these places who are men of the very highest character for probity and responsibility, we ought to have such men. We certainly ought to have men in these positions that will command the salaries that these gentlemen now have, and to which I propose by this amendment to raise them.

Mr. MELLISH. I desire to corroborate every word uttered by the gentleman from Vermont from my own personal knowledge. I desire to say that the superintendent of the assay office at New York is one of the most scrupulously economical officers that can be found anywhere. He is the man who some years ago placed the police force of the city of New York in such a high condition of discipline and efficiency as to achieve a world-wide fame, but from which it subsequently retrograded when it fell under the control of Tammany politicians.

I would say that during the last year the amount of business performed at the assay office has been about $34,000,000, while during the year before it was only $11,000,000, an increase of a very large percentage. The superintendent gives bonds to an amount of $100,000, and a number of the clerks have to give bonds. There is no office in the country which requires men of more strict integrity or higher character.

I trust that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont will be adopted. The increase of business this year over last is between 200 and 300 per cent., and these officers have been required to work at night during a large portion of the past year. I do not believe it will be economy to try to get cheaper men there. I think that the true policy in this case would be to raise salaries. But all that is asked is that they shall be retained at the same point in regard to salaries as that at which they have heretofore stood—that they shall not be cut down below that point.

Mr. MERRIAM. I ask the chairman of the committee if he has a letter from the Director of the Mint on this subject? If he has I should wish to have it sent to the desk to be read.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. This is the last place, this assay office at New York, where any gentleman should rise and say that the rate of compensation fixed by the committee is meager, and I will show the committee why. The work of the office is important—there is no doubt of that—and so far as the force employed to do that work is concerned, the committee does not propose to change that. It proposes in the next line, line 835, to put the $58,000 there for wages of workmen up to $65,000, which it was last year, so as not to impair the working force of the assay office.

Now in reference to these special favorite clerks, let us see how they stood before. The committee does not cut down a man under the estimates. It is provided that including the chief clerk there shall be eight clerks in this single assay office. These clerks are estimated for, and the gentleman from Vermont moves to amend now so as to make them draw salaries at this rate: The chief clerk and three other clerks, at the rate of $3,000 each; three clerks at $2,200 each; and one clerk at $1,800. Why, Mr. Chairman, there is not a clerk in one of the Departments in Washington, or anywhere else, who gets such pay as this. There is no reason why the New York assay office should be paid above other places of corresponding dignity and importance. Let gentlemen turn back to Philadelphia, and what do we find there? The committee has passed the paragraph relating to the Mint at Philadelphia and no gentleman has risen to talk about meager salaries. The chief clerk there is put at $2,400. That is the figure that is given here, in the New York office. The weighing clerk and bookkeeper and deposit clerks have $2,000 each.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is that an assay office?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It is the mint, which is certainly as important. They are the same grades of office; and they are all left just as the committee has left them in the bill here at $2,000 each.

Does any gentleman here believe that you cannot obtain mere clerks in your assay office at $2,000 a year, which is $200 a year more than is paid to the highest grade of clerks in the Departments here? Sir, there are men in Washington to-day at the head of divisions, with fifty to one hundred men under their charge, who are receiving only $1,800 a year. A gentleman asked me if these parties do not have to give bonds. Does any gentleman believe that there is any difficulty in getting men at these rates, hundreds of dollars a year higher than we pay to the highest grade of clerks here, because they have to give bonds? Why, sir, I guarantee that gentlemen who are so anxious to get these men appointed, if they can get them in, will see to it that they will give bonds.

I do not know a man in the New York assay office. I have nothing to say against the character and efficiency of a single man there. But the truth is that that office has been a favorite place. The committee found that these rates were scaled and raised away above corresponding offices here and elsewhere. All the committee has done or has sought to do is not to impair the force of that office, but to put these men on a fair level. The office stands to-day with the same number of clerks that it had before, only their compensation is scaled to what it should be as compared with other offices.

The workmen who go to make up the efficient force, whose efficiency measures the result of the assay office, are not to be disturbed in their pay to the extent of one dollar. The whole moving machinery in the assay office is not to be impaired an iota. And yet gentlemen stand up here and talk about meager salaries, when the salaries given these men are hundreds of dollars over and above what similar services are paid elsewhere. I for one am free to say that I am tired of this talk of meager salaries whenever somebody or other in whom some member or other is interested is reached by our legislation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has the gentleman observed the fact that since 1866 the amount appropriated for these salaries has been increased $11,100; that in 1866 it was $25,000, and now it is $36,000?

Mr. MERRIAM. I ask the Clerk to read a communication from the Director of the Mint.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT,
March 25, 1874.

DEAR SIR: In further reply to your inquiries respecting the estimates for the assay office at New York, I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter from the superintendent of that office, and exhibits "A," "B," and "C," therein referred to, from which it appears that although the amount of bullion operated upon during the present fiscal year, as compared with the year ending June 30, 1873, is nearly three times as great, the increase in the number of employés, assistants, and workmen has only been seven, and the increase of expenses $40,500, and establishing beyond question the fact that the business of the institution has been conducted with the utmost economy.

The increase in the number of employés consists principally of day and night watchmen, which was indispensably necessary for the proper security of the large amounts of bullion to be transferred from one room to another and its safe custody at night.

I earnestly request that the estimates, as originally transmitted, may be approved by the committee, both as respects the regular and deficiency appropriations.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. R. LINDERMAN,
Director.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. POLAND. I do not intend to get particularly excited over this matter; but I do not like the tone of the remarks of my friend from Maine, [Mr. HALE.] The assay office in New York requires as responsible and intelligent men as are needed in any department of the public service in the whole country; gentlemen who are the peers of the gentleman from Maine in any and every respect. He says they are mere clerks. I do not like the sound of that talk. How would the gentleman like to live in the city of New York upon a salary of $2,000 a year? That is the salary which it is proposed to give to these men, who are entitled to live in every way as respectably as he desires to live.

He says he does not want to hear any of this talk about meager salaries. I do not want to pay anybody in the public service extravagantly. These gentlemen have $3,000 a year now. I say that is a meager salary for the men who occupy the responsible positions these men do—for men of the character which we ought to have in these places.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. It costs more to live in New York than in any other place.

Mr. POLAND. Yes; everybody knows that New York is the most expensive place to live in of the whole country. And when we find proper men to fill these places, I think no one should complain of giving them $3,000 a year. I am ashamed of the gentleman from Maine when he stands up here and says that these gentleman are mere clerks, and that their pay should be cut down from $3,000 to $2,000 a year.

Mr. MELLISH. I want the House to understand one thing in regard to this matter. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] is simply to retain the salaries that have been paid heretofore; it does not propose to raise them one penny. The amount of work done is 300 per cent. more now than it was two or three years ago. The remark is very true that it costs more to live in New York than in any other place on this continent. I have heard gentlemen say that Washington was a dear place to live in. Let them try New York for a while, and they will see the difference.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. One single word. It is not I that have put upon these men what the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] seems to regard as a stigma, that is, the designation of clerk. They appear as clerks in the law; they appear so in this bill; they appear so in the amendment of the gentleman himself. Now, it is easy to say here or elsewhere that men cannot live as they want to live in New York City for $2,000 a year, and that these men are entitled to live as well as I live, and as the gentleman from Vermont lives, upon a salary of $5,000.

But that is the vaguest kind of argumentation, it seems to me, with all respect to the gentleman. He says clerks cannot live in New York under $3,000 a year. How many of the fifteen hundred men employed by the Government in the post-office, in the custom-house, and the other Government offices in the city of New York receive $2,000 a year? How many respectable men does the gentleman from Vermont believe get even $2,000? Yet they are the heads of families, they are his peer and my peer, but they are only able to get, at most, $1,500 a year. I know respectable men there, of collegiate education, of fine natural attainments and fine cultivated powers, with wife and children depending upon them, who are not only not getting that, but who would be glad to have the gentleman or have me get them clerkships in the New York custom-house which would pay them $1,500 a year. They do not ask $2,000, but would be content with $1,500 a year. If they were to get into office everybody would say they were first-class men. Of course, if we are to divide up the revenues of the Government and give everybody, to collectors, to deputy collectors, to superintendents of mints, to assayers, to coiners, to chief clerks, to inspectors, and to everybody else all they want, we will not stop at $2,000, $3,000, or $4,000 a year. I repeat there are thousands of men in New York as clerks to-day who cannot get one-half what the committee give these men.

Mr. MELLISH rose.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I am not done. I do not know how much the gentleman on my left as a respectable man has made, but I believe the gentleman from Vermont himself, an excellent lawyer, and indeed while judge presiding over a high court, never received $2,000 as an annual salary. I wish he had more, but it will be well for him to consider there is a measure of salary over and above what a man wants to live in an expensive way.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, there are one or two considerations which I wish to call to the attention of my friend from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] and to the attention of my friends from New York which I am satisfied they have not thought of in connection with this discussion. The argument has been made here, running through a period of about three months, that the resumption of specie payments would make everything in the country very much cheaper than it has been. That argument has come with great power and great force from many of our friends from New York. If that be true I cannot see any reason in the world why they should not cut down the salaries of the New York office-holders, and especially of these gentlemen who are connected with the assay office in New York, as it seems we are now approaching the specie-paying period. If it be true we are making strides in that direction, I ask my honorable friends from New York to forbear pressing any claims for increase of salaries on the ground that living is so high in that city. It is a measure some of them have advocated so enthusiastically and advocated upon the ground that it would decrease the cost of living. I think, then, it comes with poor grace from them to propose an increase of salaries if the effect of the policy is to decrease the cost of living. Therefore

I respectfully call on my friends not to insist on this increase of salary, and not even to insist it shall go back to where it was. If we are on the down grade and if we are determined and destined at no distant day to strike hard-pan, let us get the benefit of reducing salaries wherever they can be reduced. This does not take effect until the 1st of July next, and I would suggest—and I have no doubt, if the declarations of many of my friends are not mistakes—we will have reached specie payments long before that time.

Mr. TREMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to learn from the statement of our friend from Missouri [Mr. PARKER] that we have approached the era that all honest men desire, a return to specie payment. But I think, sir, Orator Puff has two tones to his voice, one before and one after a veto. This is the first time I have heard any intimation from gentlemen coming from west of the Alleghanies that the glorious era to which all men have looked forward with so much anxiety, the return to specie payment, had dawned on us. If he reads the signs of the times aright, I should be very glad to have the salaries of men in New York reduced from $3,000 to $2,000; but unfortunately, sir, we have as yet only realized the first dews, the incipient indications, of that approaching golden storm which shall refresh the land.

Unfortunately the same commanding majority from the West and the South that have demanded that we should have an expanded currency remain unbroken in this House. And unless that majority can be influenced by the good, sound arguments of our patriotic and honored Chief Magistrate, General Ulysses S. Grant, who has proved himself equal to the emergency, we shall have no return to specie payments, and all we can expect is to hold on to what we have got, an inflated currency, payment in irredeemable greenbacks and irredeemable bank-notes, and a currency based upon moonshine, with that return to gold and silver long hoped for, but not likely to be reached during the present Administration.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, and Mr. CONGER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TREMAIN] has one moment left. The Chair desires, so far as he can in accordance with the rules, to give every gentleman an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask for a vote.

Mr. TREMAIN. I hope these interruptions will not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has the floor, with one minute of his time still left.

Mr. TREMAIN. Sir, if we could have the assurance that the policy of returning to specie payments could be sanctioned by that controlling majority which holds power in this Congress, then, and not till then, would I unite with my friend from Missouri.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a question of order. I am sorry to interrupt so good a speech, with which I agree, but for the sake of the work——

Mr. TREMAIN. I come to the work, and I say that if any gentleman thinks anybody with a family who is worthy to fill the position of a chief clerk in the assay office can live in New York on $2,000 a year, I only wish he would come and stay there four weeks in a hotel or boarding-house.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. We give the chief clerk $2,400.

Mr. TREMAIN. This is simply a return to the old pay. You cannot expect for $2,000 to find a man fit to discharge the duties of this office unless you expect him to steal enough to make up the balance.

Mr. RICE rose.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the last word of the pending amendment for the purpose of making a few remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] yield for a moment to enable the Chair to fulfill a promise to recognize the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICE,] after which the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. RICE. I feel called upon to say something, as my name has been alluded to.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen in front of the Chair will please resume their seats, and the committee will come to order.

Mr. CONGER. I understood that the Chair had recognized me. I wish to be heard, and I do not ask the Chair to cause these gentlemen to retire. They do not embarrass me at all with their presence.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] insists on his right to the floor and will proceed.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to make some few remarks very pertinent to the subject before the committee. I promise my hard-money friend who has charge of this bill [Mr. GARFIELD] that they shall relate in some measure to the payment of salaries. I will try to make my remarks a little more pertinent and a little more logical than my learned and eloquent friend from New York [Mr. TREMAIN] has made his. I learned for the first time while listening to that gentleman that in the use of language and the application of words merely it is the beautiful storm that brings the dew to the land; which is as logical as the arguments of gentlemen have been heretofore to prove that the prostration of all the vital industries of the country and the stagnation of all the business in the land and the eating up of the hoarded savings of the poor laborers of the country will enable them to pay higher taxes and enable the country sooner to produce wealth that shall remove our indebtedness and bring back the era of gold.

Sir, when we speak of paying salaries to you and me and all the tens of thousands of office-holders of the Government in money, whether it be in currency or in gold, we are providing for them for the next coming year a guarantee against inevitable starvation and want.

A MEMBER. Louder.

Mr. CONGER. I would to God my voice could ring throughout this land, until every poor laboring man in the country who depends on the sweat of his brow and the toil of his hands for the daily food of himself, his wife, and his children, to say nothing of the luxuries of life, might hear how the members in this House are proposing to raise the fixed salaries of the officials of the Government and cutting down and destroying every prospect for the laboring classes to procure any means whatever for their own livelihood and support.

Ay, Mr. Chairman, those who may desire to have these things said louder to them will be gratified not many days hence.

Mr. MELLISH. Let it be understood that it is not proposed to raise these salaries, but to keep them as they are.

Mr. CONGER. I tell my mellowish friend from New York, who interrupts me in his not very dulcet tones, that thirty-nine millions of the American people will speak to him and his hard-fisted money-gripping comrades in this land. It may be that he is an inflationist. God knows. We cannot tell from one day to another on what side high men or low men stand nowadays. And we cannot tell either, or I cannot tell, what kind of influences may work around in this land to affect my friend from New York or other men in their action in this matter of currency.

But, sir, to return to the subject—for my time is passing, and I can say but a word in the brief moments which are allotted to me—to return to the subject, I say we are fixing beyond the power of change our own salaries in this Congress, the salaries of the high officers of the Government, the salaries of those who make the gold dollars, and the salaries of those who receive the greenbacks; ay, Mr. Chairman, we are fixing a permanent daily support for the one hundred and fifty or two hundred or three hundred thousand officers of the General Government, and we are determining that the people in their darkness and in their bondage and in their blindness shall grope in poverty and in want beyond any relief that we shall give them and beyond any relief that they can gain for themselves. On this salary question, then, I submit to my democratic-republican chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GARFIELD] whether we had not better take the back track and review our work, and in view of the coming days of distress and of want that loom up before us all over the country whether we had not better say at once that we will fix a comparatively small salary for ourselves and for the two hundred thousand privileged office-holders of the United States, and fix it small, because it will be sure and will carry them and us through those trying times. Let us in considering this bill, and every bill, be careful not to increase salaries and expenditures. Let no man dare to rise and say there shall be added to the salary of any office-holder in the United States money that he does not need to buy his children bread; for many who have neither salary nor work will yet want bread for themselves and their children.

Mr. GARFIELD rose.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman rises, and I trust he rises to assent to my proposition. I trust he will stand here as the advocate of low salaries and small appropriations until the people get bread. I thank the gentleman for his readiness, for his willingness, to accept my humble recommendations and suggestions. I know that he, like myself, commenced his journey through this life among the common people, toiling for his education by the labor of his hands as I did, and battling as he and I both have to gain whatever position in this country our efforts could attain.

I know his sympathies will go with the common people of the United States, and against the great army of moneyed men and office-holders in the land. I yield to him, that he may carry out with his powerful eloquence and his great influence with the House the suggestions which I have been enabled in these two or three moments to throw out, and I pledge myself and I pledge all these western and southern members that we will stand by him in carrying out and perfecting a change in the system of this bill and of all bills that wring money from an afflicted people to make the monopolists and the office-holders of the United States alone prosperous.

Mr. MELLISH. I would ask the gentleman if he was actuated by the same economical principle when he voted for and took his own back pay?

Mr. CONGER. I never voted for the increase of salary; I never voted for back pay; I voted to restore the increase of salary and back pay, and all perquisites, even to the mileage, back to the people.

Mr. MELLISH. Did the gentleman return his own back pay? Gentlemen by my side say that he has never returned it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope now that all these inflation schemes are likely to subside, and that we shall get back to a solid basis, and to the solid question before the committee; which is simply this: Will we increase these salaries 33 per cent. above what is recommended in the bill?

I call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that under the coinage act of last spring the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to fix the salaries at all the mints and assay offices, and there came to us in the Book of Estimates a statement of what rates he had fixed. The committee have put in this bill a proviso that instead of allowing the Secretary hereafter to fix these rates, the rates of salaries shall be such as are determined on in this bill. Whatever, therefore, you now determine as the rate of salaries in this bill, relating to mints and assay offices, becomes the law; and I ask gentlemen to remember that they are enacting the organic law of the force in the mints and assay offices.

Now, when we came to look over the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury, we found that the salaries of the officers in the assay office at New York were fixed by him nearly 30 per cent., on the average, higher than the salaries he had fixed for the officers in the Philadelphia mint. We thought that was unjust, and we have attempted to bring the salaries at the assay office in New York somewhere nearly on a level with similar salaries in the Mint at Philadelphia, and in doing that we have cut down the amount $10,000. I call for a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND.]

Mr. RANDALL. I believe I started the controversy about these salaries upon the aggregate amount involved. I am myself in favor of adequate salaries, and I know that these are responsible positions, and should have adequate salaries, But I cannot deny myself the opportunity of pointing out the distinction between the action proposed by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] with reference to the chief clerk in this assay office, who is provided with a salary of $2,400, which the gentleman proposes by his amendment to make $3,000, and the action of the House the other day in reference to the chief clerk in the First Comptroller's office.

I wish to give a recital of the duties of that officer: Every warrant for the expenditure of public money must be signed by the First Comptroller; no warrants are signed by the Second Comptroller. Every draft paid by the Treasurer, which comprises all the expenditures of the Government except for the Post-Office Department, undergoes an examination in the office of the First Comptroller. Every bond redeemed, every coupon paid throughout the United States, is examined and passed in the same office. Every power of attorney likewise is examined and approved by the First Comptroller.

In addition, the decision of the First Comptroller, in his examination of the accounts of this Government, is paramount upon the Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States, and has been so adjudged by the Supreme Court of the United States; and for the very proper reason that we should have some officer of the Government who will be a check upon the President or the Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, while we have refused to give to the chief clerk of that office an increase of salary as I proposed to $2,500, and have continued him at $2,000, with what show of consistency can we increase the salary here for the chief clerk of the assay office in New York above $2,400? I am willing that he should receive $2,400. Because I cannot have justice done to one officer I am not in favor of doing injustice to another. But it seems to me here is an actual inconsistency on the part of this committee.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to say but a word. Several gentlemen who have spoken in relation to this matter seem to suppose that I am proposing to raise the salary of somebody. The amendment which I have proposed, in reference to the clerks included in this paragraph, is merely to continue to give them what they are now receiving; it does not propose to raise the salary of one of them a single dollar. It simply proposes that their salary shall not be decreased.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says, and I suppose says truly, that these salaries have all been regulated by the Secretary of the Treasury within the past year, and proportioned to the cost of living in these various places. Now no gentleman will need to be told that one of the most important elements, in reference to the compensation which any man should receive for his services, is the cost of supporting himself and his family. I suppose every one knows, certainly every gentleman here from the city of New York will testify, that that is the most expensive place in which to live and keep a family that there is in the United States. There is a manifest propriety and a manifest reason why the salaries of the same class of officers in the city of New York shall be larger than the salaries of similar officers in the city of Philadelphia, because we all know that the expense of living in New York is so much greater.

I do not desire to repeat what I have said, and what everybody knows, in relation to the responsibility of these places, and the necessity of having men of character, men of probity, men who can be trusted without stint and without measure. If we have men of the right character, the men that we ought to have in these places, then I think no gentleman can say in his own conscience that a man of the stamp which the good of the public service requires in such a place can live in the city of New York and support his family with less than $3,000 a year.

The question was then taken upon the amendment moved by Mr. POLAND; and upon a division there were ayes 27.

Before the noes were counted,

Mr. POLAND said: If gentlemen think it wise to put the salary of these men so low that they cannot live without stealing I will not call for a further count.

The amendment was accordingly rejected.

Mr. GARFIELD. At the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] in order to avoid any misconstruction of the language, I move to amend this paragraph so as to read "for assayer, $3,000; for melter and refiner, $3,000."

Mr. RANDALL. They are two officers.

Mr. GARFIELD. There are two officers, and I propose to separate them so that it may not be supposed there are three officers. The assayer is one officer and the melter and refiner is another.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next clause, as follows:

For wages of workmen, $58,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Why, here is a green spot; this is actually a reduction.

A MEMBER. Wait till you hear General GARFIELD's amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to restore the amount appropriated last year, $65,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Ah! I spoke too quickly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. With the indulgence of the committee, the Chair will recur for a moment to his ruling upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRIAM] in regard to the compensation of laborers and watchmen in the mint at San Francisco. The Chair ruled the amendment out of order on the ground that it decreased the salaries as fixed by law. The Chair has since been informed——

Mr. MERRIAM. The Chair was right; my amendment would have reduced their salaries. I would ask whether a committee of eleven men has a greater power to reduce salaries than a committee of this whole House? The Committee on Appropriations propose to reduce the salaries of men in New York from $3,000 to $2,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Any amendment which proposes to increase a salary is in order under the fixed rule of the House. But an amendment which proposes to decrease a salary is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. When the occasion presents itself I shall appeal from such a ruling by the Chair.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Although an amendment decreasing a salary is clearly out of order, an amendment that simply decreases the amount to be appropriated for a salary is not out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment which proposes a fixed and certain decrease of salary is out of order. An amendment which proposes simply to appropriate a less sum, without changing the existing law, is as clearly in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assay-office at Charlotte, North Carolina:

For assayer in charge, $1,800; melter, $1,500; clerk, $1,000; wages of workmen, $600; contingent expenses, $1,500; in all, $6,400.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word, in order to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] what business is transacted now at this mint?

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations is not aware that any business is done at Charlotte. For two successive years the committee left Charlotte out of their appropriation bills when they prepared them, and the House by an overwhelming vote put it in each time. We did not wish to run the risk of so many defeats on Charlotte; we considered ourselves instructed in regard to that lady, and we reported this provision for her in this bill. If the gentleman will move to strike it out I will vote with him every time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. ROBBINS. I hope that will not be done. There has not been much done for North Carolina, and I hope this will be allowed to remain. This is all the speech I have to make.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 56, noes 44; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. ROBBINS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 99, noes 47.

So the motion to strike out was agreed to.

Mr. ROBBINS. I give notice that I will call the yeas and nays on this amendment in the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend by inserting in lieu of what has been just struck out the following:

For care of public buildings at Charlotte, North Carolina, to be expended under the direction of the Director of the Mint, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 71, noes 57.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. WOODFORD reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was presented by Mr. BABCOCK, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 154) for the relief of William Stoddard, late assistant quartermaster United States Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 911) to relinquish title of the United States in certain real estate near Columbia, Tennessee, to Rose Hill Cemetery;

An act (H. R. No. 1003) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to change the name of John Rziha, captain in the Fourth Regiment of Infantry of the United States, on the register, rolls, and records of the Army, to John Laube de Lauberfels;

An act (H. R. No. 2667) to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to gather authentic information as to the condition and importance of the fur trade in the Territory of Alaska; and

An act (H. R. No. 2967) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver certain condemned ordnance to the municipal authorities of Concord, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed, with amendments, to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 350) providing for the payment of the bonds of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 45) tendering the thanks of Congress to Captain Benjamin Gleadell, officers, and crew of the steamship Atlantic, of the White Star line, for saving the brigantine Scotland in mid-ocean; and

An act (H. R. No. 2193) to ratify an agreement with certain Ute Indians in Colorado, and to make an appropriation for carrying out the same.

DISABILITIES OF J. W. BENNETT.

Mr. ARCHER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce and have passed a bill to relieve J. W. Bennett, of Maryland, from all legal and political disabilities, under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution.

The bill was read.

Mr. WALLS. I object.

SAMOA OR THE NAVIGATOR'S ISLANDS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State and an accompanying report upon Samoa or the Navigator's Islands; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and, with the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 45) tendering the thanks of Congress to Captain Benjamin Gleadell, officers, and crew of the steamship Atlantic, of the White Star line, for saving the brigantine Scotland in mid-ocean.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. KELLOGG, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and accompanying papers of Gideon W. Hazen, no action having been had thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MOORE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence till Tuesday next.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BECK: The petition of Robert S. Price, United States store-keeper in Woodford County, Kentucky, for relief, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CAIN: Memorial in relation to the condition of agricultural laborers of the South and West, to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CROUNSE: The remonstrance of sundry citizens of Nebraska, against extending letters patent for the Haines harvester, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. FARWELL: Papers relating to the claim of Theodore S. Loveland for difference of pay between first sergeant and second lieutenant, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HENDEE: The petition of Shepard, Davis & Co. and others, lumber dealers, of Burlington, Vermont, for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 2906) to prevent vexatious and interminable litigation and a multiplicity of suits, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. E. R. HOAR: The petition of George F. Gorham, late of Company B, Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers, for increase of pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOUGHTON: The petition of citizens of Ventura County, California, that the confirmation of the San Buenaventura ex-mission lands be set aside and a new trial had, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, for the repeal of the moiety system in the customs department of the Government and the discontinuance of spies and informers, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana: The petition of 58 citizens of Ohio County, West Virginia, for the passage of a law authorizing the manufacture of patent-right articles by others than the owners of patent-rights upon payment of a reasonable royalty thereon, to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Defiance County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 43 citizens of Lafayette County, Mississippi, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 49 citizens of Crawford County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Tioga County, New York, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Carroll County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 52 citizens of Harrison County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 25 citizens of Clay County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 12 citizens of Dorsey County, Arkansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 30 citizens of Fremont County, Colorado, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Morris County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Anglaize County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 26 citizens of Randolph County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Johnson County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Pottawatomie County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 12 citizens of Daviess County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Putnam County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Mississippi County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Jackson County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 9 citizens of Williams County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 19 citizens of Orangeburgh County, South Carolina, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 11 citizens of Osborn County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 26 citizens of Dane County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of DeKalb County, Georgia, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 27 citizens of Montgomery County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 13 citizens of Jackson County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Linn County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 46 citizens of Atchison County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Freeborn County, Minnesota, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Saint Francis County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Clay County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Shelby County, Alabama, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 13 citizens of Branch County, Michigan, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Nodaway County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 29 citizens of Saline County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of White County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Franklin County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Allen County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 13 citizens of Wilson County, Tennessee, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Douglas County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Clermont County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Fillmore County, Nebraska, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Buchanan County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 29 citizens of Seneca County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Huntington County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 16 citizens of Wells County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Franklin County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 18 citizens of Todd County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 30 citizens of Howard County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Knox County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Shelby County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Dearborn County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition 18 citizens of Wayne County, New York, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Grant County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 27 citizens of Noble County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 10 citizens of Branch County, Michigan, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 26 citizens of Huntington County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Eaton County, Michigan, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 18 citizens of Delaware County, Pennsylvania, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Henry County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Cherokee County, Alabama, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 26 citizens of Simpson County, Mississippi, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 25 citizens of Eaton County, Michigan, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 16 citizens of Lake County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 12 citizens of Columbia County, Pennsylvania, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Niagara County, New York, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Orleans County, New York, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Hawkins County, Tennessee, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Ballard County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Spencer County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 9 citizens of Harrison County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 11 citizens of Owen County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 26 citizens of Mercer County, Kentucky, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 19 citizens of Buncombe County, North Carolina, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Talladega County, Alabama, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Lyon County, Iowa, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Edwards County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 22 citizens of Saint Joseph County, Michigan, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Newton County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Jasper County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 8 citizens of Delaware County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Jay County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Ripley County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 30 citizens of Miami County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Clinton County, Pennsylvania, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Wayne County, Illinois, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 54 citizens of Pike County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 80 citizens of Sedgwick County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Vermillion County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Riley County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 20 citizens of Greene County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of La Crosse County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 24 citizens of Franklin County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 17 citizens of Cass County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 41 citizens of Lynn County, Missouri, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 21 citizens of Giles County, Tennessee, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 26 citizens of Grant County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 27 citizens of Jefferson County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 15 citizens of Osage County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 32 citizens of Clinton County, Indiana, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 29 citizens of Ross County, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio: The petition of Herman J. Korff, of Cincinnati, Ohio, for pay for services and other relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of Hattie Boraff, of Camp Dennison, Ohio, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of George William Allen and other leading citizens of Ohio, asking pecuniary assistance for the widow and children of Captain Charles F. Hall, late commander of the Polaris expedition, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SCUDDER, of New York: The memorial of assistant engineers in the revenue-marine service, asking that they may be regularly commissioned, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. VANCE: The petition of J. W. Reeves, B. P. Mull, and 80 other citizens of Madison County, North Carolina, for modifications of the internal-revenue laws, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WOLFE: The petition of Francis Curran, late of Company E, Thirteenth Indiana Volunteers, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 23, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LEWIS presented a petition of a large number of citizens of the city of Washington, praying for the erection of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAMLIN. I present a memorial, largely signed by merchants, ship-owners, and ship-masters of Ellsworth, Maine; another signed by the same class of persons in Harrington, Maine; and still another signed by a large number of the same class of persons of Calais, Maine, all asking for the abolition of compulsory pilotage. I move their reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, presented the petition of Joseph Farwell and other citizens of Rockland, Maine, praying the abolition of compulsory pilotage; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SCOTT presented the petition of Nathan Kunkle, late private of Company H, Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, praying the removal of the charge of desertion and also praying to be allowed back pay and bounty; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Sarah M. Smead, of Carlisle, Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, widow of Raphael C. Smead, late captain in the Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, praying an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM presented the petition of Miss Adrianah Banks, of Bridgeport, Connecticut, praying the passage of a law enabling her to make such a contract as she may see fit for necessary services in obtaining her pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2270) making an appropriation to pay Emanuel Small and James Tate, of Atchison County, Missouri, for carrying the mails, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2552) for the relief of John W. Massey, late consul at Paso del Norte, Mexico, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 526) for the relief of James De Long, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 139) for the relief of James De Long, late United States consul at Aux Cayes, Hayti, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 537) for the extension of the patent known as Reynolds's patent brake for power-looms, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 544) to enable Ann Jennette Hathaway, executrix of the last will and testament of Joshua Hathaway, deceased, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters-patent for improved device for converting reciprocating into rotary motion, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 620) authorizing the extension of the patent granted to John Haseltine for a new and useful water-wheel, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DENNIS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Maryland, praying for the establishment of a light-house on Bishop's Head Shoal, reported adversely thereon, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2668) granting a pension to William J. Uhler, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2215) granting a pension to Elizabeth Brady, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of New Ulm, Brown County, Minnesota, praying that a pension may be allowed to Jacob Nix, a citizen of that State, who was wounded while commanding the militia called out to resist the hostile incursions of the Sioux Indians in August, 1862, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1843) granting a pension to Lucinda Jones, widow of Thompson M. Jones, late a private in Company G, Twenty-second Illinois Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS. A majority of the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2680) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane Dulaney, have instructed me to report it adversely. I do not concur in that report, believing the bill to be meritorious. I ask that it go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3091) to release J. W. Bennett from political disabilities; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REPORT ON TELEGRAPHIC CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print a thousand extra copies of the report of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads on telegraphic correspondence, have instructed me to report it back with an amendment, and to ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment of the Committe on Printing is to make the resolution read as follows:

Resolved, That five hundred additional copies of the report of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads on the bill (S. No. 651) to provide for the transmission of correspondence by telegraph, with the accompanying papers, be printed for the use of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution as amended.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senate has indicated repeatedly its indisposition to print any documents for popular distribution; and as this resolution contemplated that, the Committee on Printing have amended it so as to reduce the number and provide for its distribution by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads which thinks that it is desirable.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask leave to introduce a bill, and beg to occupy a very few moments in an explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to make an explanation in regard to a bill about to be introduced by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVIS. It is a bill to reduce the tax on the circulation of State banks to an amount equal to that now paid by national banks.

Mr. President, the tax now on the circulation of national banks is 1 per cent. a year and that on the circulation of State banks is 10 per cent., which practically excludes any State bank from having circulation of any kind. I see no just reason why the national banks should have an advantage over the State banks of ten to one in this respect. It excludes entirely any State-bank circulation under any circumstances, though that circulation would have to be redeemed in legal-tenders, which are greenbacks. This enormous tax on State circulation was adopted as a war measure; and now that the war is over, I see no necessity for continuing it.

My friend from California [Mr. SARGENT] suggests that it was adopted as a prohibition measure. It was done during the war, and I took it that probably it was done under the war power which some gentlemen here talk so much of, but I am glad to be corrected. This measure of mine, if adopted, will probably relieve the wants of some of the Southern and Western States to a considerable extent by allowing them a local circulation. It is true it could not go far from home and would not enter into general circulation far from home; but any Senator can see that, in the South particularly, it would be a great local advantage. I hope the bill will be considered at an early day by the Finance Committee.

I made a statement during the debate on the currency question as to the effect of transferring certain amounts of national-bank circulation from the East to the South and West. I then believed and now believe that such a transfer would be just and equitable. A portion of that circulation belongs to the South and West under the act of July 12, 1870; and I now give notice that if no other Senator should call up the bill providing for that transfer I will do so at the proper time, as I believe it to be a just measure. I see that the President in his veto message says that the increased circulation of greenbacks and bank currency by the bill passed by the Senate is $100,000,000. My understanding is that that is an error. Ninety million dollars is the amount; $44,000,000 of greenbacks and $46,000,000 of national-bank notes. Mr. President, I ask leave to introduce the bill which I hold in my hand.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 731) to reduce the tax on the circulation of the State banks to an amount equal to that paid by national banks; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SCOTT (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 732) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes;" which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 655) to enable the Mennonites from Russia to effect permanent settlement on the public lands of the United States.

Mr. MERRIMON. I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion. I desire to submit a matter of importance to some parties, which it will take but a minute to dispose of. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 669) referring the petition and papers in the case of Robert M. and Stephen A. Douglas, in so far as the same relates to cotton seized, to the Court of Claims. I think there will be no objection to that. The Committee on Claims were unanimous in their report.

Mr. WINDOM. I withdraw my motion for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 669.

Mr. CAMERON. That is a very important bill, and I think we had better have more time to consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The question being put, there were on division—ayes 25, noes 11; no quorum voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is satisfied that a quorum is present, and the Chair will submit the question once more to the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This bill will undoubtedly lead to debate. The morning hour we have attempted hitherto to keep somewhat intact for the ordinary progress of the Calendar, and I think that is very desirable; but if gentlemen are to feel at liberty to call up propositions out of their order, we may as well abandon the rule entirely. We have made very good proficiency with the Calendar, and by and by we shall find that a class of measures will be in very great danger of going over to the next session simply because we allow bills which really do not belong in the morning hour to occupy the attention of the Senate during that hour. I hope, therefore, the Senate will be slow to take up any bill in the morning hour out of its order, and that we shall adhere to the Calendar. I wish to say to my honorable friend from Minnesota who got up the Mennonite bill out of its order, it having consumed now, I believe, two or three mornings in the morning hour, that he ought to be content, it seems to me, to take up that bill at some other time.

Mr. WINDOM. I have consumed very little time myself on that bill; perhaps not five minutes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Still the bill itself, which my honorable friend is pressing, has consumed a great deal of time.

Mr. WINDOM. What I desire is that the Senate shall decide the question either affirmatively or negatively. It is important that it be decided at once. If the Senate do not desire to consider it, a vote will settle that question, and I will not press it any further.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think there is great force in the remarks made by the Senator from Maine. I think that the morning hour ought to be devoted to the Calendar. The excuse that the Senator from Minnesota makes, that he has not consumed much time himself on this bill, is like the excuse which the drummer made in Æsop when he was taken by the enemy and plead that he ought to be at liberty because he did not fight himself. He was told, "But you make everybody else fight." So my friend from Minnesota gets up a bill; he does not talk about it himself, but everybody else does; and it is a bill that ought to be discussed.

Mr. WINDOM. It is everybody else's fault, then; not mine.

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly; but I do not wish everybody else to be accommodated; I would like to accommodate my friend from Minnesota. I do not think the bill has been discussed improperly. There has been no factious opposition to, and no improper advocacy of, it; but I think the few minutes we have every day of the morning hour after routine business ought to be devoted to the unobjected cases on the Calendar; and therefore, although without any prejudice to either of these bills, I shall vote against taking up either of them.

Mr. WINDOM. I should like to have a test vote on this question if I can, and if the Senate will vote to-day to take up the Mennonite bill or against it, I will consider that as expressive of the sense of the Senate, and will not again move it in the morning hour but await its turn on the Calendar if the motion is rejected. I think, however, rejecting it now defeats the object of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to make a single remark. This is the claim of the sons of the late Senator Douglas. They had a large property in the State of Mississippi where a large amount of cotton was stored during the war. The cotton, they allege, was seized by the Government. If they lose this claim they have, I may say, nothing. The Committee on Claims, looking into their petition and the affidavits filed in support of it, entertained a very strong conviction that it was well founded; but there were peculiar circumstances that induced them to think it ought properly go to the Court of Claims, and therefore they reported this bill referring the claim, so far as relates to the matter of cotton, to the Court of Claims. By passing the bill there is nothing decided against the Government; it only gives them an opportunity to assert their rights in a court where the Government as well as themselves can be heard; and they are anxious to take this measure of relief. They have been applying here now for three or four years, and I see no reason why relief, to this extent at least, should not be granted at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 23, noes 24.

MENNONITE SETTLERS ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. WINDOM. I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 655. I want to say that I will accept the decision of the Senate on this vote, and if it be against taking up the bill I will not again trouble the Senate during the morning hour with this question. I want it taken up. I think not to take it up now is substantially to defeat the object of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 26, noes 16.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 655) to enable the Mennonites from Russia to effect permanent settlement on the public lands of the United States, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. STEWART to the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands as modified by him yesterday.

Mr. STEWART. I want to have the amendment read as modified.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Whenever a body of such persons, being heads of families or single persons over twenty-one years of age, shall, through a duly constituted and accredited agent, file with the Secretary of the Interior an application for permission to locate a portion of the public lands of the United States, accompanying such application with a list of the persons composing such body and the quantity desired by each, the Secretary may authorize such location to be made in any land district of the United States by giving such agent the proper certificate in writing, under seal of his office, stating that such application has been filed, and reciting the number of persons so applying and the number of acres which they may include in their claim; upon the filing of the certificate in the local land office, designating the land desired, the land so designated not exceeding the amount in the certificate shall be reserved for the period of two years for the purposes of this act, provided it be vacant land, not mineral, nor sold or reserved, nor appropriated by homestead or pre-emption settlers.

SEC. 2. That any person named in the application and petition on file with the Secretary of the Interior shall have the exclusive right of entry for the period of two years from the date of filing as aforesaid upon complying with the laws of the United States existing at the date of entry.

SEC. 3. That at the expiration of the period of two years as aforesaid, all lands not entered by the parties entitled under the foregoing provisions shall be subject to the entry of any other person under the laws applicable to the same as other public lands of the United States.

SEC. 4. That no reservation shall be made under the provisions of this act of more than one township of thirty-six sections in a body, nor shall the aggregate of lands reserved and unoccupied at any one time exceed three hundred thousand acres.

SEC. 5. That the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall have power to make all needful rules and regulations to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the friends of the bill will adopt my amendment, for I am very confident it is better in every respect. It is cheaper for the applicants. It will cost them nothing to have the reservation made on which they can go. It does not tie up the land by having it entered by an agent. It accomplishes every purpose, without all the expense of having each individual section entered by an agent and fees paid. The fees for entering this land will amount to many thousand dollars, and the parties may never come. This simply provides a reservation for them to go upon if they do come, and then they can enter under the laws of the United States the same as anybody else. Certainly it dispenses with a great deal of cumbersome and expensive machinery, and accomplishes everything desired by the original bill.

Mr. THURMAN. If I understand the amendment of the Senator from Nevada it only makes this bill general, by providing that any body of men, at any time in the future, may acquire a pre-emption right in the manner provided in the bill. The original bill secures a pre-emption in favor of a certain sect of people, or a portion of that sect who now reside in Russia. The amendment of the Senator from Nevada, if I comprehend it correctly from its reading, extends that provision to all sects and all persons.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator is mistaken in his construction of the amendment of the Senator from Nevada; but that Senator can answer more appropriately than I can.

Mr. THURMAN. If I am mistaken in that, and if the amendment of the Senator from Nevada relates only to these same Mennonites, I did not comprehend it correctly when it was read. I heard it imperfectly.

Mr. STEWART. The preamble refers to them.

Mr. THURMAN. It reads, "Whenever a body of such persons." Then it is confined to the Mennonites, is it?

Mr. STEWART. "Such persons" refers to the Mennonites spoken of in the preamble. I do not strike out the preamble.

Mr. THURMAN. I misapprehended it. I thought it extended the principle of this bill to all persons, whether they were Mennonites or whether they were members of the Greek Church, or whether they were Mohammedans, or communists, or what not. But it seems the amendment of the Senator from Nevada only goes to details and does not touch the main object of the bill itself.

Now, Mr. President, what is this bill? It proposes a new kind of pre-emption that never yet has existed in this country I believe. It is very true that in the history of this country there have been some particular tracts of land set apart for the benefit of immigrants. In my own State there was a tract of land known as the Moravian reservation at Gnadenhutten, and another known as the French grant; but I think in all cases there was no such principle of pre-emption as this; but the land was ascertained by act of Congress and set apart, in the case of the French grant to the refugees from France during the time of the French revolution, and in the case of the Gnadenhutten reservation to certain very worthy people called Moravians, who were making special efforts to Christianize and civilize the Indian tribes. But here is a proposition that if adopted sets a precedent for the adoption of similar propositions whenever any body of men may desire to procure a pre-emption of the public lands and a pre-emption of the very worst form, the pre-emption of large tracts lying in a compact body.

Mr. President, it has been said, and I have no doubt truly, that the Mennonites are a very worthy set of people; but is that a reason why we should change the whole land policy of the Government from the time we inaugurated a policy at all on the subject? And if we pass this bill because these are worthy people, can we refuse to pass similar bills whenever other worthy people ask us to do so? In other words, are we not inaugurating a policy by the passage of this bill that may cover the whole country with pre-emptions of the lands in large tracts, tracts amounting, as this bill allows, to one hundred thousand acres, and in the aggregate to three hundred thousand or five hundred thousand acres?

Something was said by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. PRATT] about the large amount of land that belongs to this country. Let me tell the Senator that the amount of good agricultural land belonging to the United States, and not covered by pre-emption or homestead applications or granted away to railroads, is very small indeed.

Mr. STEWART. Not exceeding two hundred and fifty million acres. I have figured a good deal on that.

Mr. THURMAN. It is very small indeed. When the Senator counts up the immense amount of land which belongs to the United States, and which has not become private property or to which no pre-emption or homestead right has accrued, he counts up the whole American desert, he counts up that whole body of land reaching from the British dominions down to Mexico, a large portion of which is uninhabitable and ever will be uninhabited, unless God shall change the climate of the country. But not only that; in the number of acres that are included—I do not know whether in the estimate by the Senator from Indiana, but in the estimate that I have often seen paraded as to the amount of land that yet belongs to the United States are included the whole of the Russian dominions called Alaska, which we purchased, and which extend from the British possessions to the north pole.

Mr. President, the truth about it is, that with the enormous grants to railroads, with the land that has been occupied by homestead settlers and by pre-emptors, (and here I observe that no one is more in favor of the homestead policy than I am)—but with them in operation there is very little good land left; and it does seem to me, wholly irrespective of the merits of these Mennonite people, that it would be very bad policy in us to open the door to the absorption and monopoly of these lands in the manner that I fear would follow from the passage of this bill. No, sir; that is not the way to do it. These lands are being appropriated now, since we have ceased to give them to railroads, in the best way they can be, by homestead settlers. Let them do it. That is an open field enough for them; but do not let somebody coming in here professing to be an agent, to-day of the Mennonites, to-morrow of some other sect, the third day of another sect, go around and monopolize in large tracts and take out of the market vast bodies of land to the extent of one hundred thousand, two hundred thousand, or five hundred thousand acres. That is not the way to keep the lands for the people. That is not the way of "giving land to the landless." That is not the way of providing for the people of this country out of the public domain. At least it so seems to me.

I think that I can see that if this policy be adopted it will open a door to the most outrageous frauds. I think it is very easy, if this thing is to be done, for sharp and designing men, when it is once found that Congress will pass such laws, to come here representing themselves as entitled to represent large bodies of immigrants coming to this country and asking the passage of precisely similar bills; and how are you to refuse them? Are you going to refuse them upon the ground that their sect of religion is not as good as the Mennonites, or that you do not quite agree with their sentiments in morals or politics or something else? Are we to have an investigation into the character and opinions of the immigrants? Are we to have a religious or a moral or a philosophical or an economical test set up whenever such grants are asked for? If so, I think we shall have a task upon our hands that will be quite too large for our execution. No; the land policy of this Government since we have quit giving the lands to corporations is the right policy. The homestead policy is the right policy. It is that policy which enables the settler to acquire a home for himself and his children, and to acquire it honestly by discharging those duties which the statute imposes on him in order to acquire that title; and I think that any policy which tends to monopolize those lands in large tracts is not advantageous to the people of the country, nor to the immigrants to the country, and is against the best interests of the Government.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada, with a modification which I would like to suggest in it to him, seems to me very much better than the bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands. I would like to suggest to my friend from Nevada that after the words "United States," on line 7 of the first section of his amendment, he insert the words "not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres to any one person;" so that it will read:

An application for permission to locate a portion of the public lands of the United States, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, to any one person, accompanying such application with a list of the persons composing such body and the quantity desired by each.

Mr. STEWART. I think that would be the effect of it; but to make it certain I will accept the modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. HOWE. I would suggest "any one such person." The persons before alluded to are the persons who shall make the application.

Mr. SARGENT. I see the point of the suggestion, and I accept the word "such."

Mr. President, I am opposed to all this legislation. I agree fully with the ideas expressed by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] but I wish to say in addition to the reasons which he has advanced against legislation of this character, that we are encouraging within our borders for the first time in our history colonies of persons in a degree separated from the rest of our people, with their own customs, their own religion, their own ways of life brought from their native countries, and isolated in our midst like islands in the ocean.

Our policy has been heretofore to invite the people of all countries desiring a home into our midst, and our laws have been sufficiently liberal for their acquisition of homes anywhere throughout our broad domain where the Government of the United States had land to give them or to sell at low prices. By means of that system there was a general distribution of these people; they separated up into families scattered into different communities, had many points of contact with our customs and our language. They had an opportunity, by isolation from each other and by combination with our people, to learn readily our language, to understand gradually our institutions; and the result has been that, if not in the first generation—though it was often so in the first—in the second generation they were thoroughly Americanized; and it has been a most valuable life-blood infused into the body-politic.

But, sir, if you reverse this and put colonies of twenty or thirty thousand people in a single place, occupying two or three hundred thousand acres in a community, they have not this opportunity either for intermarriage—they marry among themselves for natural preferences—or to learn our language, because they converse among themselves in their own language; or to learn our customs, for they do not lose their own. They get no intelligent idea of our institutions, because they have not that contact with the general body of the public which is necessary insensibly to infuse into their minds the knowledge and the spirit of the American form of government.

I think that this is an unwise departure from a system which has worked well heretofore, and to my mind it is the principal objection to this bill. There is an objection to the aggregation of three or four hundred thousand acres of land in the hands of any body of men to be held even as is proposed under the features of this bill. There is an objection to dedicating so large a portion of the small remaining amount of agricultural public lands which are attractive to settlers and attractive to immigrants; and a principal reason is that these persons are aggregated together, are set down in communities by themselves; they are not American citizens, they will not become American citizens in the true sense of the term. They are Mennonites, or if they were of some other nation they would be Irish, they would be Germans; they would not be Americans. I shall vote against the bill.

I prefer the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada because I think the machinery is much more simple, and if these persons are coming they will be less oppressed under the amendment than they will be under the features of the original bill. I think that if we are to invite them to come, and upon these terms, we had better make it as easy for them as we can, and that the amendment will work easier for them than the original bill. I would not invite them and deceive their hopes; but I should prefer that these people, flying from what they believe to be an oppressive change in the laws of Russia, shall come as individuals, as other immigrants come, and I believe that many of them will come, that they will avail themselves of this freer form of government, and that they will make valuable citizens if they will come in this form. I had an opportunity to meet some of them a few months ago, and talk with them. I found that these persons, who probably were selected from the whole body of the company, were men of very high intelligence, and they seemed to speak the English language with considerable purity, and I have no doubt that if they are anything near representatives of the class of people that sent them here, it will be a valuable acquisition to the Republic to have them come among us, but not to have them come as a community isolated from the rest of the body-politic.

Mr. TIPTON. Mr. President, it seems to me remarkably strange that a committee of the Senate with ordinary intelligence and ordinary good intentions should have made so gross a mistake as is supposed to have occurred in regard to this measure. The members of the Committee on Public Lands, of whom I have the honor to be one, did not doubt for one single moment that the honorable President of the Senate who differs with us so essentially and the honorable Senator from Ohio and the honorable Senator from California are just as honest in regard to this matter as we are; but it is a matter of astonishment that we see the subject in such different lights.

Now, sir, as a resident of a land State, as a pre-emptor myself, I profess to have as much interest in this question and no more than other men who come from the States that are being settled up, and as much intelligence on the subject as they can have. I would not for one single moment do anything that would be at war with our now accepted doctrine of homesteads. Every Mennonite in Russia to-day is entitled to a homestead beside any citizen of the United States the moment he lands here and declares his intention to become an American citizen; and no American ever has taken a homestead, or ever will take a homestead, that will make a more worthy citizen than this Mennonite will after he has been acclimated among us. But why have we asked this special privilege, you inquire, for him? The idea is this: Everybody settles in colonies now. Cassatt, of Ohio, has just taken his Ohio colony on the line of the Pacific road in the State of Nebraska. We have our German settlement in my county. I have just what every other western man has on this floor, his German settlements right at his own door. He has his Irish settlements; and one of the very best settlements in the State of Nebraska to-day is the Illinois settlement. We have all these different settlements, and why? Because it is more convenient; because it is more desirable on account of sympathy, and association, and education, and religion, and all those things, for persons to settle together as they have been occupying homes together in other States. But what is the influence? It has been asserted here that these people will not become American citizens. I deny it.

It is not true that we suppose these people are likely to settle in any large bodies at all. They show us by their maps that in Russia already they occupy more than one hundred different locations, as I see it stated in some of the papers. They do not contemplate taking up counties. They propose taking the range and run of our land offices and locating in small numbers wherever they find advantages to suit them. If one hundred can be accommodated in one place and have the kind of land and the kind of accommodations that they seek, another hundred will make their way to another land office in another district and settle among us, just as our Germans settle and just as other foreigners settle, and in no other way. They never have contemplated and never have desired anything else; and we have been in the fullest communication with their representatives from Germany, intelligent, devoted, patriotic people. We have been in communication with them until we came to understand them perfectly, and think they understand us.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have you any communication in writing or in print on the subject?

Mr. TIPTON. Nothing. They come here as every set of immigrants have the right and privilege to come, and I will speak of this special grant in a moment. They come to scatter over our country as others come; and the reason they are coming in such large bodies at a particular time is set forth, and the Senate understands it very well. They feel it necessary to make their migration within six years. If they offer to throw all their lands on the market of Russia within any one or two years so as to get here within three or four, you understand perfectly well that there becomes a glut in the market in the vicinity where they offer their lands, and they have not such facility for receiving the value of their property and bringing it with them to the United States that they will have if we give them a little time in which to come. The father precedes the family, takes the homestead, erects the house, and prepares for their reception, and within twelve or fifteen, and not more than twenty-four months at the farthest, they will have sold the property and followed him here. They are not ordinary immigrants. They come here with thousands and with millions of money to add to the capital of this country. We have a community of them at Sutton, in Nebraska, at the present time, and all who know anything about them speak in unbounded terms of their honesty, of their ability, and of their skill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How were they able to settle without a special law?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the bill (S. No. 446) to restore the rights of the State of Louisiana, on which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will allow the Senator from Nebraska to conclude his remarks.

Mr. MERRIMON. Very well.

Mr. TIPTON. As to how they settled without any special law I will tell you. Any day in any week in the year a hundred emigrant wagons can drive up before a land office in Nebraska, and a hundred men can enter their homesteads, a hundred homesteads, and by night they are a colony. These people say they cannot get there the first day together; they say they want a little privilege. We ask them where the rest of the train is, and they say the rest of the train is a good piece in the rear, and it may take them twelve or fifteen or twenty-four months to come up; and therefore they say they would like to have the privilege of making a few selections for their neighbors and go on and improve for their neighbors until they do arrive. The train is in motion; the train is on the way; and if they could buy land at the same hour they could take any county we have in Nebraska unoccupied, and to-morrow they can be what you call a monopoly; any unoccupied county in Nebraska to-morrow, if they were there, they could take up, and there would be a Mennonite colony under your laws without any qualification or amendment to suit them at all.

When they become located you say they will not become American citizens. They swear they will become American citizens and file their declaration in order to enter their lands and get their homesteads. When they have their homesteads, what then? They vote under your laws for the purpose of establishing their townships, their school districts, their counties. They, under your laws, during the next year are levying their taxes to build their own court-houses, to put up their public works. At the end of the year they hand over the balance of the money they have collected to your State treasurer; and thus they support your State government. They are citizens in every respect. But on some day they simply worship God according to the dictates of their conscience in the Mennonite form and manner and according to their doctrines, which are simply German Quakerism. I suppose you guarantee to every man the right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of his conscience in this country. As it is, they propose to come, and where they see a little body of land they will go on it just as other individuals go and settle in communities; and then what happens? Is there any dangerous monopoly? Just as soon as they take a township, for instance, we know what immigration does. It sends there frugal men, and then the immigrants coming to the land office sweep right around them and hedge them in to-morrow, and they are surrounded by other settlers, by American citizens. What happens after that? Their children will be coming of age, and after they are there a year the young men who came in at twenty will be twenty-one and they will want a homestead. What do they do? They go outside of this belt of American citizens and American settlers that have girded in and circled around the old family homestead; they take their homesteads off among us, and thus we diffuse and thus we spread them abroad; and only the first day's locations are the locations that you look upon as a monopoly and a concentrated influence. All that afterward enter lands have to take them where they can get them. All the young men as they become of age have to go out and take their homesteads among the other settlers. It is a mixing and a commingling of the very best foreign element that ever landed on these shores with our people of every kind and of every description.

I see no necessity of saying anything further on the subject. So far as sustaining the Government is concerned, have you any complaint? Who would not take to-morrow forty-five thousand Pennsylvania Quakers and locate them all over our western territory? Have you any law by which you could banish Pennsylvania Quakers? Have they not done their duty in sustaining this Government? What did they do when they could not go to war themselves according to their conscience? We did not all go ourselves; it never will be necessary that the whole people go to war; and, in God's name, have we not enough of the fighting element in America? Look to Arkansas to-day, where the people are never happy unless they are in a fight, [laughter,] never doing well unless in a fight. A funeral is the concomitant of a fight, of course. Our people are a peculiar people; and if there is any portion of the world that can send us a few advocates of peace, in God's name let us bid them welcome. We want settlers of that kind.

I say that the English Quakers of this country have done for us just what and nothing more than these German Quakers will do. They have furnished their substitutes and sent them to the battle-field; they have paid their taxes; they have given of their means gratuitously; they have been the laborers in your hospitals; and they have organized and sent as much as any other association of people have the instrumentalities for the purpose of relieving the suffering on the battle-fields all over the country. It is gammon, therefore, for men to doubt in regard to these people that they will become patriotic, devoted, and self-sacrificing citizens. I have said all that is necessary to say. I would say much more if I thought there was any propriety in it, but I leave the question to others.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to give notice that at the proper time I will submit an additional section as an amendment to the bill, for I presume the proposition of the Senator from Nevada will not prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I merely ask to have the amendment which I have sent to the desk read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

SEC. —. That any sale or assignment of land reserved under the provisions of this act to any person within five years of the day of reservation, who is not known as an immigrant from Russia belonging to the sect which is commonly called the Mennonites, shall be absolutely void and of no effect; and any such land so sold or assigned shall be open to pre-emption or sale in the same manner as any other public land.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will merely add that that is to prevent any jobs under this bill. I do not see why, as the bill now stands, it may not be possible for any parties to have this amount of land reserved and sold to other persons than those that are intended by the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I did not distinctly understand the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, and ask to have it read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk again read the amendment submitted by Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont.

Mr. WINDOM. I am not authorized by the committee to accept that amendment, but I shall not oppose it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is now before the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. I would only submit to the Senate the propriety of finishing this Mennonite bill to-day, if we can with the consent of the Senator from North Carolina. I should be glad to complete it and dispose of it one way or the other if the Senator from North Carolina is not anxious to proceed with his speech.

Mr. MERRIMON. I am not very anxious to speak to-day, although I am prepared to do so. If it shall be understood that I shall occupy the floor when the Louisiana bill is resumed after to-day I am content to yield now. I suppose this bill will take the greater portion of the day, and I would not want to speak late in the evening.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think we ought to dispose of the Louisiana question. I think we had better go on with that bill. It is certainly quite as important as this, and involves a colony who are in trouble, or think they are, much more extensive than this one. It appears to me the public business will be best subserved by standing by the order of the Senate and proceeding with the Louisiana business every day until we dispose of it one way or another.

Mr. MERRIMON. This Mennonite bill seems to be in the way of everything else. I am very anxious myself to see it out of the way, and therefore am willing to yield if the Senate desires me to do so.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the joint resolution (H. R. No. 45) tendering the thanks of Congress to Captain Benjamin Gleadell, officers, and crew of the steamship Atlantic, of the White Star line, for saving the brigantine Scotland in mid-ocean; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his Secretary, announced that the following acts, having been received by the President April 9, 1874, and not having been returned to the Senate, wherein they originated, within ten days, Sundays excepted, as prescribed by the Constitution, had become laws without his approval:

An act (S. No. 317) for the relief of Henry C. Smith, of Indianapolis, Indiana; and

An act (S. No. 366) for the relief of Oliver Powers.

STATE OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say that if the postponement of the Louisiana bill will end it, I am for the postponement of it; and I have risen now for the purpose of saying to the Senate that after the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] shall have concluded, or certainly at a very early time thereafter, if I can get the floor I shall ask the sense of the Senate on this subject by a motion to lay the whole question on the table.

Mr. MERRIMON. I trust the honorable Senator will allow us to have free debate. It is a very important question.

Mr. HAMLIN. "Free debate" is a general term, and that would apply to every member of this body and allow him to speak as often and as long as he chose. I have an opinion; other Senators have theirs. I think the matter has been amply debated; others may think differently, and would of course vote differently. But I have given this notice for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to the matter so that it shall be understood. If there are but a limited number of speeches to be made, and we can have them within a reasonable time, I should be very glad to postpone the motion I propose to make for that time; but we know that Tuesday next has been assigned for calling up the veto message of the President on an important question, and there are other questions which I think demand a portion of our consideration as well as the question which has been so long debated. I do not believe there are any suggestions to be made in connection with it by any Senators, however able, which may not be pretty well comprehended by this body. Entertaining these views, I shall at a very early time ask the opinion of the Senate upon the motion I have indicated.

Mr. HOWE. I do not know precisely what question is before the Senate now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] has asked unanimous consent that the Louisiana bill be laid aside for the purpose of proceeding with the bill which was under discussion at the close of the morning hour.

Mr. HOWE. I was going to say one word in reference to the notice which has just been served on the Senate by my honorable friend from Maine. Of course it is the right of any Senator to move to lay any subject on the table at any time he pleases, and the Senator will avail himself of that right whenever he thinks best; but I hope he will postpone that motion for the present.

The questions involved in the Louisiana bill are quite numerous, all of them important, and many of them very delicate; many of them are anomalous; and it is not strange that it has elicited a great deal of debate. The Senator from Maine may be entirely right in supposing that further debate will not enlighten the Senate. I am not entirely sure, however, that that is so. At all events, in a case of this kind, as long as there are Senators on the floor who desire to be heard on the question and who have not been heard, I hope the opportunity will be given them to speak. If the debate should assume at any time such a phase as seems to be consuming time for the mere purpose of the consumption of time, of course we must try to cut that off. If we are pressed for time we can meet that demand, I think, by either meeting earlier in the day, or sitting later in the day, or sitting more days in the week. Up to this time I have seen no disposition on the part of any one in the Senate to hurry business of any kind, and if we are to commence on this bill I hope we shall not commence very suddenly on it. I would rather commence on some other bill.

Mr. CARPENTER. I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate, after as many Senators have spoken on the subject as choose to do so, to reply especially to the remarks of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] for about one hour, and I trust the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] and every other Senator will give me that privilege before a motion is made to lay the bill on the table. When reasonable debate is exhausted the question may as well be settled by a motion to lay it on the table as in any other way. I do not care what form it assumes; but I take it, on a subject of this importance, the Senate will not choke it off until we have within reasonable limits debated the measure as fully as we desire. I shall ask that indulgence of the Senate, after other Senators have spoken, to speak one hour in reply.

Mr. WINDOM. I should be very glad indeed to complete the bill which was under discussion during the morning hour; but I think I will confine myself to asking unanimous consent, because I am very anxious to have a little time to-morrow to present the report of the select committee of which I am chairman, and I am a little afraid that if I crowd the Louisiana bill over till to-morrow I shall fail to get that opportunity. So I will not make the motion. I ask unanimous consent, however.

Mr. THURMAN. Before my friend from North Carolina proceeds, I wish to say one word on this important though irregular debate which has taken place on the notice given by the Senator from Maine. I have not occupied a moment's time of the Senate this session upon the Louisiana question, and I do not know that I shall be able to do so; not that I do not wish to express some views which I have upon it; but I am by no means certain that I shall be able, with the onerous committee duty that has been imposed upon me by the Senate, to find time to prepare my views in such form as to make them worthy of the attention of the Senate. But this we all must admit: that no more important or far-reaching question in respect to the structure and powers of our Government and the liberties and rights of the people has ever been mooted in the Congress of the United States than this. Other questions have been from time to time considered that touched particular rights, particular privileges, particular claims, but this bill brings into review, I may say, the entire relations between the Federal Government and the State governments. Nothing could be more fundamental, and let it be decided one way or the other more far-reaching in its effects, than the decision of the constitutional question presented by this bill. I do therefore hope that my friend from Maine will not seek to limit debate upon a question so important and far-reaching as this. I have heard not one word by any Senator spoken on this subject that seemed to be uttered merely for the purpose of hearing himself speak, or for any sinister purpose whatsoever. I appeal to Senators if the debate upon this subject has not been in the main, apart from some little sparring now and then between the debaters, worthy of the question and worthy of the occasion. And so long as that shall continue to be the case, so long as no one shall manifest a disposition merely to waste time—and there can be no such purpose in this case—I hope the Senator will not feel it his duty to stop debate on a question like this.

Mr. HAMLIN. I concur in every word which has been uttered by the Senator from Ohio in relation to the importance of this debate. It is broad in its application, and there are principles which have never been as fully discussed as many which have sprung up in the consideration of this question. It is equally true that it has had a long, not to say a tedious, discussion. I concur in what the Senator has also said that the debate has been strictly legitimate, and with the exception of a little episode now and then it has been perfectly proper. I agree to all that. The Senator says no man has spoken for the purpose of hearing himself speak. Well, I do not know how nearly I can agree with the Senator in that, when I witness day in and day out a Senator rise to address the Senate to these empty desks and he has but few to listen to his voice save his own ears. [Laughter.] I think that when a debate has gone to that point as to drive almost every Senator from his seat, it is nearly time to stop. I have listened to speeches here myself, when there were but seven others sitting in the seats to listen with me. When a debate has gone to that point, I do not think the speeches are calculated to enlighten this body very much; but it is a discussion that has dragged to that length which does not ask or justify us in extending it further. I want full and free discussion, but I said a moment ago that there is a limit to that. If we would adopt the language literally used by the Senator, we never would get to the question if we should sit here until every Senator should speak who might choose to do so.

We have three modes of getting rid of a question: physical endurance, and sitting it out here quietly; perhaps those are the only two legitimate modes; a third is however, I believe, by way of agreement. I would say a little more than I did say at first with the views which I have. I did not mean to apply them very strictly, but I did mean to call the attention of the Senate to what I intend to do if it drags its length much longer; and I hoped the suggestion I made might perhaps bring us to one of the modes of closing this debate which I have suggested, of fixing a day, and in fixing that day I should say the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER,] who introduced the bill and who has been foremost in its advocacy, under every rule of parliamentary law is entitled to close the debate; and certainly, unless it were under very strange circumstances, I should be unwilling myself to vote to dispose of the question so as to exclude him, while I would exclude others.

These are my views, and I do think we ought to come to a close of this question within a reasonable time. We sit here and hear one speech a day. I think there is a responsibility resting upon this body, and that responsibility is expressed in a few words: less talk and more deliberation; less talk and more action. I cannot for my life think the speeches which are listened to by nobody here but by the galleries, and sometimes I think are delivered for nobody but the galleries and to empty benches, are called for.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will my friend allow me a suggestion? Is it not possible that those Senators that leave, leave for the purpose of reflection?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes, sir; I think they do; and I think their reflections run something about in this wise: "That speaker is doling out what I heard half a dozen times; and what I have heard half a dozen times it is not worth while to listen to again." I think their reflections run precisely in that channel. It is the most reasonable thing in the world upon any great question that certain prominent ideas shall suggest themselves to every Senator. How does it happen, and how comes all this repetition in this body? Precisely in this way: while the friends go out for reflection others stay here and make speeches upon important points; and the men who go out to reflect never hear them or read them, and they come back and make them over again, [laughter;] and there is only just this difference: the words, the language, the dress used by one Senator are of one character, and those by another of another character. No two men would present precisely the same idea in the same precise words, and yet the common mind, the ordinary mind, minds such as ought to be in this Senate, would comprehend the point presented, whether presented by the one Senator or the other.

Now, the scope of what I say has this intent, no more: that I hope we shall close this debate within a very short time. It has been suggested to me within a very few moments that it would be desirable from very proper considerations not to commence a discussion upon the veto on Tuesday next; and if an arrangement should be made for the postponement of that for a day or two, then I hope those who are extremely desirous of addressing the body on the Louisiana bill will have the opportunity in a limited time, and we shall be rid of this question. I do think I will try the sense of the Senate after a reasonable time from this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to lay aside the pending measure informally.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator withdrew that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator withdrew his motion, but said he would ask unanimons consent. Does the Senator object?

Mr. MERRIMON. I understand the Senator from Minnesota has withdrawn his motion

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator withdrew his motion to postpone, and asked unanimous consent to lay aside the bill informally. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir; I object. I think the true way for the Senate to do its business is to stick to the Louisiana question until it is disposed of, to-day, or to-morrow, or whatever day, as the regular order of business of the Senate, and then take up the other bill, if the Senate wishes to consider it next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made; and the regular order is before the Senate.

Mr. STEVENSON. May I inquire of the Chair, if we do not take up the Louisiana question, what is the effect of granting the request proposed by the Senator from Minnesota?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the request of the Senator from Minnesota had been granted, this bill would have been laid aside informally, and could have been called up at the demand of any Senator at any time; but if it had been postponed, then it would have had to take its chance, and it would not come up again until by order of the Senate. Objection is made to its being laid aside informally.

Mr. STEVENSON. I understand the regular order is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is now before the Senate.

Mr. STEVENSON. And that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] is entitled to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MERRIMON proceeded to address the Senate. Having spoken two hours and a quarter,

Mr. RANSOM. Will my colleague give way, as he must be considerably exhausted, for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. MERRIMON. I am content to do so.

[Mr. MERRIMON's speech in full will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at three o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 23, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

NATIONAL-BANK CURRENCY.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Whereas by the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the redemption of the 3 per cent. temporary-loan certificates and for an increase of the national-bank notes," approved July 12, 1870, $25,000,000 of national-bank notes were authorized and required to be withdrawn in accordance with the provisions of said act by the Comptroller of the Currency, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, from those States having a circulation exceeding that provided for by the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for a national banking currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof,' approved March 3, 1865, and to distribute the amount so withdrawn among the States and Territories having less than their proportion so as to equalize the same;" and whereas no part of said sum of $25,000,000 has yet been so withdrawn and distributed, as appears by the annual report of the Comptroller of the Currency, dated November 28, 1873: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be directed to inquire into and report to this House at an early day the reasons why the said $25,000,000 have not been withdrawn and distributed under the provisions of the act aforesaid, and what further legislation, if any, is necessary to secure that result.

Mr. MAYNARD. I have no objection to the resolution being referred. I desire to say that the committee already have the subject under consideration.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There was no objection.

TAXATION OF STATE AND NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. HEREFORD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3092) to equalize the tax upon State and national banks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

J. W. BENNETT.

Mr. MACDOUGALL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3093) to relieve J. W. Bennett from political disabilities; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It relieves J. W. Bennett, of Carroll County, Maryland, from all disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution by reason of participation in the late rebellion.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I ask that this bill be put on its passage at once.

The SPEAKER. Does a petition from the party to be relieved accompany the bill?

Mr. MACDOUGALL. Yes, sir.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. MACDOUGALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL-BANK CURRENCY.

Mr. BECK. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to inform this House, at as early a day as practicable, how much, if any, of the $54,000,000 authorized to be furnished to banking associations in States and Territories then having less than their proportion of currency, by the act approved July 12, 1870, entitled "An act to provide for the redemption of the 3 per cent. temporary-loan certificates and for an increase of national-bank notes," has not been applied for; if all of it has been, to state why it has not all been issued; and further, to inform the House how many applications for said currency have been made by parties who have failed to obtain it, stating the amount they applied for and the reasons why they failed to obtain it; and that he further state how many applications for currency are now pending, giving the amounts asked for and the reasons why the requests for it have not been granted.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I ask that the resolution may be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I do not understand why it should go to that committee. It is not business before that committee.

Mr. MERRIAM. The question is already before the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. KELLOGG. Allow me to say a word. I have objected to these resolutions hitherto because I find there are from one hundred to one hundred and twenty clerks in the Treasury Department employed in answering these calls for information from one or another member of the House or Senate, and we cannot provide for any reduction of the clerical force there unless we put a stop to these continuous calls upon the Departments. I do not object to this resolution, although I believe it should be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency before final action is taken upon it.

Mr. BECK. I wish to know why that currency is not out.

Mr. MERRIAM. I should like to say to the House that I introduced a resolution before the Committee on Banking and Currency calling for this information. It will be before us to-day; and to-morrow morning that committee will act upon it and bring in something to the House and ask the action of the House on it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I object to any action this morning.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I understand this subject is already before the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I therefore object unless that reference be made.

Mr. BECK. I did not know that, and will myself move the resolution be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The motion was agreed to.

AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP.

Mr. GARFIELD. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business being called for, the House resumes the consideration of the substitute reported by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. E. R. HOAR,] from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to the bill (H. R. No. 2129) to carry into execution the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution concerning citizenship, and to define certain rights of citizens of the United States in foreign countries, and certain duties of diplomatic and consular officers, and for other purposes.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH,] chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. ORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am aware the House intimated on yesterday a desire to consider the pending bill by paragraphs, and hence I hope it will indulge me for a few minutes, notwithstanding the order of yesterday, while I shall address myself to the consideration of the general principles of the bill as well as some of its details. Especially do I desire this in view of what might be termed the ungenerous attack of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] yesterday on this bill.

He was pleased to inform the House that "this bill detracts from the value of American citizenship," "that it discouraged immigration;" and, thirdly, "that it sought to ingraft upon our statute-books principles of the feudal system." I need hardly stop to inform this House that if a single provision of this bill was amenable to the objections thus raised by the gentleman from New York, not a single member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs would have consented for one moment to entertain, much less report it, to the House and ask its passage at their hands.

This bill, sir, has its origin in a necessity created by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, which the members of this House will remember provides "that all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside," to which is attached the clause providing that Congress shall enforce its provisions by appropriate legislation. The language of that fourteenth amendment is general, and hence it becomes necessary for Congress, in order to meet cases of inevitable exceptions, to define to some extent at least the status of American citizenship both here and abroad. In the bill now before us, in attempting to define that status, we have not sought to restrict, and I am justified in saying we do not restrict in any particular, the rights and privileges so dear to every American citizen, whether native or naturalized.

And this brings me to a cursory examination of the various provisions of the bill. The first section defines the term "domicile" and "reside," and construes them as "implying a fixed residence at a particular place, with direct or presumptive proof of the intent to remain indefinitely." This definition must be borne in mind and applied while considering the remaining sections of the bill, that when we use the word "domicile" or "reside," we mean it in the sense defined here, to be a fixed residence, with intent to remain indefinitely.

Now, then, we come to the second section. But here allow me to say, by way of parentheses, that throughout this entire bill there is not any distinction made between any classes of American citizens, whether native born or naturalized; none whatever. This bill is in strict conformity with the well-recognized doctrine of American legislation upon the subject of natural allegiance. I need not stop to discuss that question before this House. Our Government was the first to antagonize and break down the old feudal doctrine that allegiance was perpetual; that the duty which a man owed to the government in which he was born could not be abrogated or alienated except by the consent of that government. By that antagonism, running through a period of many years, we have at length secured what we claim by treaties. And hence to-day in no enlightened nation of the earth is the doctrine of perpetual allegiance, as understood in feudal times and as understood in later times in England, recognized and enforced as against American citizens. The second section then provides:

That in order to assure to all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof the full enjoyment of the right to be citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside, it is hereby declared—

For the purpose of securing the full rights of American citizenship this bill declares—

First, that all persons shall be regarded as entitled to the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, and as subject to the duties imposed upon such citizens, who may have been born and are residing within the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

Affirming in the very language of the fourteenth article of amendment to the Constitution the right of every person born upon our soil to American citizenship.

But, Mr. Speaker, it will be readily perceived that the right so generally expressed in the Constitution must of necessity be subject to exceptions; and it is for the purpose of declaring what those exceptions are that this bill is brought at this time to the attention of the House. What, then, are the exceptions? We first say that all persons born under our jurisdiction and residing here are citizens. Then we say:

And also all married women—

Referring as a matter of course to alien women—

And also all married women whose husbands may be such citizens, as against all powers, except the power within whose jurisdiction an alien woman married to a citizen of the United States may have been born and shall continue to reside.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I should like to ask him a question in that connection. Why does the committee believe it necessary to make an exception as to married women with regard to the power under whose jurisdiction they were born?

Mr. ORTH. It is for this reason, I will say in answer to the gentleman from Missouri: that we concede to foreign nations precisely what we claim for ourselves. Take the case, for instance, of an American citizen residing in Paris who marries a French woman. So long as she reside in France and is subject to the jurisdiction of the power within whose jurisdiction she was born she does not become an American citizen by the mere act of marriage; but when she leaves that jurisdiction and comes to reside here, or when she and her husband change their domicile from France to Germany or Italy, then she becomes an American citizen by virtue of her marriage with an American citizen, and is entitled to our protection.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I understand the effect of the first part of that provision to be, that when a foreign woman marries an American citizen that act of marriage is presumed by the committee to be evidence of her intention to become a citizen of the United States. Now, if that be true in reference to all powers except the power controlling the land of her birth, I am unable to see why the same rule should not be made to apply to the power under which she was born.

Mr. ORTH. I will answer the suggestion of the gentleman. An American citizen goes to Paris, resides there without changing his citizenship, marries a French woman, who as such is entitled to all the rights and privileges of French citizens, and she continues to reside there to the time of her husband's death; she remains a French citizen, and as such is entitled to all the rights of person and property guaranteed by the French law. In other words, she does not denationalize herself by the fact of marrying an American citizen.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I am informed that there is an omission in the printed copy of the bill which I have.

Mr. ORTH. I will state for the benefit of the members generally—and I see now what has raised the doubt in the mind of the gentleman from Missouri—that the printed bill has been amended by the committee, by adding after the word "born," in the fourteenth line, these words, "and shall continue to reside." This obviates, as a matter of course, the objection stated by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. Take the case of a married woman who may be temporarily passing through the country where she was born; or suppose she does reside there, but after marriage or before marriage has resided in the United States also; then does she by this bill cease to have the protection of the United States because she resides after marriage in the country where she was born?

Mr. ORTH. If I understand the gentleman correctly he supposes the case of a woman born in France migrating to this country and marrying here?

Mr. CONGER. Marrying here or marrying there, or continuing after marriage to reside in the country where she was born. I will suppose the case where a person born in France comes to this country in her infancy, resides here all her life, but after marriage returns to the country where she was born and resides there.

Mr. ORTH. Married to an American citizen?

Mr. CONGER. Married to anybody; but I will say to an American citizen.

Mr. ORTH. will state to the gentleman that the act of 1855, passed in relation to that subject, meets the very case he has suggested. It provides—

That any woman who might lawfully be naturalized under the existing laws, married, or who shall be married, to a citizen of the United States, shall be deemed and taken to be a citizen.

Of course, being born in France and a French citizen, if she marries a Frenchman she does not become an American citizen. Now, then, I have stated to the House two classes of persons who under this bill and by virtue of the fourteenth amendment are citizens of the United States. The bill provides that "a child born within the United States of parents who are not citizens, and who do not reside within the United States, and who are not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, shall not be regarded as citizens thereof." Without some such legislative provision as this, under the fourteenth amendment, a French gentleman and his lady traveling in this country and while thus traveling having a child born to them, the child would become ipse facto an American citizen, whether that child remained in this country one month or one year or any other period. Hence we provide, to meet complications that might arise out of that state of facts, that the child thus born shall not become an American citizen unless that child shall, within six months after coming of age, file in the Department of State a written declaration of its intention thus to become a citizen. We give to that child this advantage over and above that given to persons ordinarily coming here and becoming citizens, who cannot comply (as a prerequisite) without our present naturalization laws, the filing of a declaration of intention, and the waiting afterward the prescribed time before full citizenship can be conferred by the courts. This provides that where a child is born in this country of foreign parents who may be temporarily here, that child may, if it shall so elect, within six months after arriving at the age of twenty-one years, become an American citizen by simply filing a declaration to that effect.

The House will observe right here that the entire object and scope of this bill is to fix more definitely and to define more accurately than heretofore the status of American citizenship, and instead of being a bill in derogation of that citizenship it is a bill to strengthen and make more marked and emphatic the fact of American citizenship.

The bill provides secondly that "a child born abroad, whose father may be a citizen of the United States, residing in and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States"—it is well known to the members of this House and to the country that hundreds, yes, thousands of American citizens are constantly traveling abroad, remaining there for years; some engaged in business and others in the pursuit of pleasure. A child born abroad under these circumstances we claim shall be an American citizen and entitled to the protection of our laws, and, in the language of the bill, "shall be regarded as a citizen of the United States at the time of birth, and shall follow and have the domicile and citizenship of the father during minority."

Now the fact of the child being born abroad of American parents temporarily residing there should not denationalize that child, but the child thus born should be invested with the privileges and immunities of American citizenship.

Mr. MAYNARD. How does the gentleman understand the law to be now on that subject?

Mr. ORTH. Well, we understand the law to be as it is in this bill, and yet there have been doubts expressed about it.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is within my own knowledge, personal in some respect to myself, that a child born abroad of American parents was charged at the port of New York head-money as a foreigner.

Mr. ORTH. That may be very true; but who made the decision? The men interested in collecting the head-money.

Mr. MAYNARD. The decision was made by the authorities at the port of New York.

Mr. ORTH. They may have been interested in collecting the head-money, and that may have warped their judgment.

Mr. MAYNARD. I asked the question with a view of obtaining from the gentleman a statement of what he regards as the law at this time.

Mr. ORTH. Precisely so. I think the law now is as we propose by this bill to make it; but this bill will prevent just such acts as those to which the gentleman from Tennessee refers. It will be a guide to our authorities, State and national, with reference to what constitutes American citizenship.

Now, thirdly, there is another class of persons who are citizens for the time being; but under certain circumstances such citizenship is lost or suspended. Among them are, "first, born or naturalized citizens of the United States, who become naturalized as citizens or subjects of another State." I need not stop to discuss the propriety of the adoption of that provision. It is in the line of American thought and action on this subject. It is an acknowledgment of the right of expatriation. Any citizen, either born here or becoming such by naturalization, may change his nationality as he pleases without let or hinderance on our part. Another class is those "who enter into the civil, naval, or military service of any foreign prince or state, or of any colony, district, or people foreign to the United States."

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I desire to ask the gentleman another question right at this point.

Mr. ORTH. I will hear it.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. What is the legal construction of the words "enter into the civil, naval, or military service of any foreign prince," &c? Is the legal construction of it a voluntary entrance?

Mr. ORTH. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Does it not cover the case where a person is pressed into such service?

Mr. ORTH. Not at all; the entrance into such service must undoubtedly be voluntary, as for instance the case of officers of American citizenship who are now in the service of the Khedive of Egypt.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. If my colleague will allow me, I will suggest to him that under the order of the House we are to take up the bill, as soon as one or two gentlemen have spoken on its general features, section by section; it would conduce to the dispatch of business if questions to be asked on particular points should be reserved until then.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Very well; I will reserve my questions until then.

Mr. ORTH. That is true; but some things might be forgotten, and I have no objection whatever to be thus interrogated as I proceed in my remarks.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. ORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE, of New York. It is whether there is any order or understanding that this bill shall be read by sections for amendment?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. That is the understanding.

Mr. ORTH. When an American citizen accepts service under a foreign power, he loses for the time being his American citizenship. There is a propriety that he should do so, for while in that foreign service the country he is serving might become entangled in a war with his own country, and he would be liable to be punished for treason if he continued in that service. Hence we say that when an American citizen enters the civil, military, or naval service of a foreign power or state, he shall, during his continuance in that service, forfeit the rights and privileges of American citizenship.

Mr. CONGER. Allow me to ask a question?

Mr. ORTH. Very well.

Mr. CONGER. There are many cases of American citizens and others colonizing the wild lands or mining lands within the jurisdiction of other countries. I can refer, for instance, to the Red River country, and to the mining regions in Australia also. While in those regions those American citizens may take part in the exercise of civil duties connected with the government of the mines in their particular district. I submit that this clause of the bill, "or who enter into civil, naval, or military service of any foreign prince or state, or of any colony, district," &c., would deprive them of their rights of American citizenship, although their residence there might be temporary.

Mr. ORTH. It does not interfere with them at all.

Mr. CONGER. They are residents of foreign countries and may be in the civil service of a colony foreign to the United States.

Mr. ORTH. As a matter of course, when they go beyond the jurisdiction of the United States they cannot carry with them the Constitution and laws of this country.

Mr. CONGER. If an American citizen goes to Australia, to the mining regions, and takes any part in the civil management of his district as practiced by the miners there, by virtue of this clause or provision he would cease to have the rights of American citizenship.

Mr. ORTH. If an American goes to London and becomes a civil magistrate there, he cannot of course claim the rights of an American citizen.

Mr. CONGER. Another provision of this bill is, that if an American citizen resides or is domiciled for two years in a foreign country, he loses the rights of American citizenship, except as otherwise provided.

Mr. ORTH. I will come to that in due time.

Mr. MELLISH. With the permission of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] I desire to make an inquiry; and in order to make the matter clear, I will state the circumstances of the case that came within my own knowledge. By the laws of the State of New York a patrolman of the police force in the city of New York must be a citizen of the United States. A man applied for appointment, who, it was found, was born of American parents in the Island of Cuba; that while an infant his parents and the child came to the United States, where they all thereafter resided. The applicant for appointment had been in the habit of voting for United States and State officers, &c., at elections. Would such a man under the laws of the land be regarded as a citizen of the United States?

Mr. ORTH. Under this bill he would undoubtedly be so regarded.

Mr. MELLISH. How under the present law?

Mr. ORTH. That would have to be decided by your own courts. The second clause is this: "Citizens of the United States who may be domiciled abroad, unless registered as hereinafter provided," shall lose their citizenship. I am aware that at first blush this may be regarded as probably a harsh or an unfavorable provision of the bill. But I am satisfied that, upon reflection, it will be seen that it is in the interest of American citizenship. In this connection I may as well state a fact which has been brought to the knowledge of most of the members of this House, that men from other nations come here and seek the benefits of our naturalization laws, and then leave with no intention of returning to this country; but constantly seeking, if they get into any trouble with the foreign government where they reside, the protection of American citizenship. They are beyond the jurisdiction of our nation; they render no duty whatever as an American citizen.

The doctrine of allegiance, as is well understood by the lawyers of this House, is regarded as reciprocal with the duty of protection. The citizen owes allegiance to his government, because he demands the protection of that government. When he demands that protection he is likewise compelled to render service or duty in time of war by serving as a soldier, in time of peace or war by the payment of taxes. Yet to-day there are persons from almost every civilized nation in the world who have come here, obtained the benefits of our naturalization laws, have left this country, and are now engaged in trade in foreign countries. By virtue of the cloak of American citizenship they escape all duty to the government where they reside, and they also escape any duty to this country by being absent, but are very quick to claim the protection of our Government when they may get into any trouble.

This bill provides that an American citizen shall, once in two years, go before an American official, a diplomatic or consular officer, and there simply declare, "I am an American citizen." Now, is that a hardship? Think of it for one moment. A man claims the protection of this great Government of ours. This Government says "Yes; we will grant you protection, although you are beyond our jurisdiction; you were born in this country, or were naturalized under our laws; hence we recognize you as a citizen, and if any other nation lays its hands upon you we will interfere to the extent of the entire military and naval force of this Republic to secure your rights."

Now, we propose to enact that this class of persons shall inform the Government, at least once in every two years, that they still claim to be citizens. This is a most reasonable and beneficial requirement, and entirely in the interest of the citizen; for by such act he informs both governments—the one in which he is domiciled as well as our own—that he is still an American citizen.

Why should it be considered an odious or oppressive requirement that, in return for the protection of this Government, the citizen residing abroad shall once in two years go before some recognized officer of the Government and say, "I am an American citizen?"

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. Will the gentleman state whether any civilized nation within his knowledge has ever passed such a law as this?

Mr. ORTH. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. I say not.

Mr. ORTH. That may be the fact, but would not furnish an argument against this provision.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. We have in all our large cities a large class of foreign residents—English, French, German—who never become naturalized, but scout the idea of being American citizens; and the continuance of their foreign citizenship is recognized by their governments without their being subjected to any such requirement as this bill proposes.

Mr. ORTH. That may be the fact, Mr. Speaker, but it is no reason against the enactment of this law. I hold that this requirement is in the interest of the citizen abroad. Take, for instance, a case that was before this House during the last Congress, that of Dr. Houard. I was not here at that time, and I do not recollect all the particular facts connected with the case; but Dr. Houard was a gentlemen who, born I believe in Philadelphia, resided for years in Cuba, and was recognized to all intents and purposes as a native Cuban. Becoming involved in some difficulty, he claimed the protection of our Government, and his case occupied for some time the attention of the State Department and of Congress. Now, suppose there had been enforced at that time such a law as this; suppose Dr. Houard had once in every two years gone before the consul in Havana and simply proclaimed what a man should be proud to state, "I am an American citizen," there would have been no trouble in determining the nationality to which he belonged.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The gentleman will allow me to state that in the case he refers to the reason of the delay of many months on the part of our Government in extending to Dr. Houard its protection was that, though his friends alleged he was an American citizen, there was no decisive evidence that he had desired to remain an American citizen; and he was actually carried across the Atlantic as a prisoner before his case could be put in such a shape as to justify the interposition of our Government.

Mr. MYERS. Permit me to say that in the case of Dr. Houard the State Department did not declined to interfere, but its good offices failed, and Congress was called upon to act. We did interpose in his behalf, because we held him to be an American citizen, no matter how long he had resided in Cuba.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. Allow me to say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] that there have been a great many instances—three or four from my own State—where engineers employed on sugar plantations have been killed in Cuba, and their bodies thrown into the sea, when it was known that they had only arrived from the United States within four or five months. I think there are now in the State Department evidences of such facts.

Mr. ORTH. Well, that was unfortunate for the gentleman's constituents, but men's lives are always more or less exposed in times of internal trouble and war in any nation.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to state a fact in connection with Dr. Houard's case?

Mr. ORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. In that case the State Department, as I consider, was not up to the mark; and such was the judgment of this House, which by a decided vote finally awakened that Department. It was under the instruction of the House that the State Department made application on Dr. Houard's behalf to the Spanish government, which, upon the presentation of the case, yielded and released him from his imprisonment.

Mr. ORTH. Precisely so. In alluding to the Houard case I did not desire to bring my Philadelphia friend upon the floor in vindication of the action taken in that matter. I simply wished to illustrate what would be the operation of this bill in such a case as that. Had Dr. Houard registered himself every two years, as this bill proposes to require, there would have been in the State Department evidence that would have justified this Government in promptly raising its strong arm; and I have no doubt it would have done so.

Mr. RANDALL. I admit that such a provision would have prevented any trouble about Dr. Houard's case.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to say that one of the strong features in Dr. Houard's case that induced Congress to interpose was that he had registered himself two successive years at the American consulate. True he had resided in Cuba for eighteen years before; but he was an American by birth and had always upheld his nationality. We decided that he had never denuded himself of his American citizenship.

Mr. ORTH. The State Department should not be called to account for not interposing without proper evidence furnished of his citizenship, and this case furnishes a strong argument for the passage of this bill.

I now come to another class of naturalized citizens. I propose now to refer to that clause of this bill which seems to have met the particular objection of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] yesterday, though it struck me at the time (I do not wish to be uncharitable to the gentleman, particularly in his absence) that his object was rather to "fire the German heart" than to illustrate the operation of this bill and seek to amend it where it may be wrong. I am aware that a portion of the German press of this country has commented very severely upon this clause of the bill. Hence I shall ask indulgence for a few minutes to remove, as I think I shall be able abundantly to do, any suspicion even that this measure is in derogation of the rights of any portion of our naturalized citizens, much less the German-speaking portion.

What is this third clause of the bill?

Naturalized citizens of the United States who may by the terms of any treaty be regarded as having assumed their original nationality.

No one takes exception to that. A man comes here from Norway, Sweden, Denmark, or Germany, and becomes naturalized. After a while he desires to change his nationality—to go back to his fatherland, and in the loving language of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] "to kiss his kith and kin once more." He goes there, and nobody objects to his going as nobody objected to his coming. But when, by virtue of treaty regulations between this Government and the country to which he returns, he by returning denationalizes himself as an American citizen, it is a voluntary act of his, and by this bill he can no longer claim the protection of the Government.

Here are the lines to which my colleague on the committee from New York [Mr. COX] has taken special exception, and to which the editorials in the German press referred. These three lines read thus: "or who, on returning to their native country, may be convicted of offenses against the laws of that country committed prior to their arrival in the United States." I am aware whence arises the objection to this provision. It is not with regard to offenses which are classed generally as malum in se or mala prohibita, but these military offenses which are so odious to the German citizen in this country—that is the duty which he owes under the laws of his native land to render military service.

Now I will state, especially for the benefit of my friend from New York, that this portion of the bill is but a transcript, a copy of every treaty existing to-day between this country and the German nations of Europe. You will find it in the treaty with Austria, Baden, Bavaria, Belgium, Hesse, and the North German Union, and Sweden and Norway.

Now, sir, I can make myself much better understood by reading one or two clauses from these treaties. I will read first from the treaty with Austria. You will then see that there is no real foundation for our German friends objecting to this clause in the bill, because it is the very language found in treaties made with the nations of their birth, and no act of Congress can abrogate or change a treaty stipulation. What is the clause in the treaty with Austria?

ART. 2. A naturalized citizen of the one party, on return to the territory of the other party, remains liable to trial and punishment for an action punishable by the laws of his original country committed before his emigration, saving always the limitation established by the laws of his original country and any other remission of liability to punishment.

In particular, a former citizen of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy who, under the first article, is to be held as an American citizen, is liable to trial and punishment, according to the laws of Austro-Hungary, for non-fulfillment of military duty: 1. If he has emigrated, after having been drafted at the time of conscription, and thus having become enrolled as a recruit for service in the standing army; 2. If he has emigrated while he stood in service under the flag, or have a leave of absence only for a limited time; 3. If having a leave of absence for an unlimited time, or belonging to the reserve or to the militia, he has emigrated after having received a call into service or after a public proclamation requiring his appearance, or after war has broken out. On the other hand, a former citizen of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy naturalized in the United States who, by or after his emigration, has transgressed the legal provisions on military duty by any acts or omissions other than those above enumerated in the clauses numbered 1, 2, and 3, can, on his return to his original country, neither be held subsequently to military service nor remain liable to trial and punishment for the non-fulfillment of his military duty.

Apply that to an American citizen here on our own soil, a native born. After he has been conscripted in the Army, and deserts and flees to a foreign country, and then returns to this country, is it unreasonable we should punish him for the crime of desertion? That provision runs through some four or five of these treaties.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ORTH. Certainly.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I understand the gentleman to say a provision equivalent to this is contained in every treaty concerning naturalization between this and foreign countries.

Mr. ORTH. No, sir.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I understood the gentleman to say it is included in every one. It is not included in the convention with Great Britain, in reference to which we have the greatest number of cases.

Mr. ORTH. I am aware of that.

Mr. BLAND. I should like to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether it would not be better to leave this clause out of the bill, and allow the whole matter to remain as now, subject to treaty provision?

Mr. ORTH. The suggestion of the gentleman is a good one, because this bill is as perfect without that clause as with it. But I was speaking in regard to the reasonableness of this provision in this bill and the several treaties to which I have referred. What is it?

Or who, on returning to their native country, may be convicted of offenses against the laws of that country committed prior to their arrival in the United States.

Suppose an American citizen in the city of Detroit, guilty of murder or robbery, flees into Canada, and becomes a naturalized citizen of the British dominions, and years afterward returns to this country, shall it be said he shall go unpunished? Shall he be permitted to plead his naturalization in another country as an exemption from punishment for a crime committed before such naturalization? Clearly not.

Mr. CONGER. As the gentleman has made allusion to the case of a citizen of Michigan, permit me to make this remark. There are a great many of those men who are guilty of offenses against the laws of their native country, the guilt of which, in our eyes, was a virtue; guilty of resisting oppression, guilty of resisting tyranny, guilty of resisting the enforcement of odious laws which we all condemned. There was an immigration to this country in 1848 of some of the brightest names of Europe who were guilty of precisely this kind of violation of the law of their native lands.

Mr. ORTH. I did not yield for a speech, although I have yielded for a question.

Mr. CONGER. I thought the gentleman yielded for a remark or two, but I do not wish to interrupt him. But perhaps he considers what I said dangerous to his argument, and I will take my seat.

Mr. ORTH. O, no. I know what the gentleman refers to. He refers to what is known as political crimes. I yield to him, however, if he wishes to make further statement.

Mr. CONGER. I thank the gentleman for allowing me to proceed. So few gentlemen grant this courtesy I wish to recognize it.

I say there are many revolutions in Europe among the old feudal nations in which men have been guilty of offenses against the laws of their native lands of which every American citizen approves, and whom he deems not guilty but virtuous. This would take them from under the protection of our Government if they should travel back to the Old World. It would subject to the laws of their citizenship some of the brightest ornaments of our land. I do not know but the gentleman himself may be one of them. Many at all events whom we honor and respect among our citizens—many gentlemen now in public service in this country—would be convicted of these offenses if they returned to Germany or Spain. Now, for myself, I protest against any change of law which would take away their right of citizenship whenever they go back or wherever they go back.

Mr. ORTH. And I join with the gentleman from Michigan in his protest. There is no such intention, no such effort, no such purpose here. And while we may differ with other nations in regard to their internal regulations, yet the fact stares us in the face that such is their domestic policy, and as such is beyond our control; and the right way for these hundreds and thousands of gentlemen who have fled from the oppressions and tyrannies of the Old World to seek refuge here is to remain here. We cannot by legislative enactment, we cannot by treaty—because it takes two to make a treaty—suffer or permit, or attempt to permit, a naturalized citizen to go back to his native land where he is liable to be arrested and punished for crimes—political crimes, I grant you—with any promise on our part that we can afford him protection against punishment either by treaty or otherwise.

Mr. CONGER. Political offenses, not crimes.

Mr. ORTH. Offenses, undoubtedly. I say political offenses or crimes. And hence the objection which has been urged against this section has no reason in it. But if these three lines be stricken from this bill we fall back simply to where we stand now. We fall back on the various treaties which my friend will find in this book. And the only object or purpose of putting it in this bill is simply a notification to naturalized citizens that when they do go abroad they render themselves amenable to the laws of their native country, and that we cannot protect them.

Now, then, I think I have gone through all the clauses of this bill to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has made objection, or to which any objection has been suggested by any other member. And unless the gentleman from Michigan or any other gentleman desires to ask me a question I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. E. R. HOAR.]

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman [Mr. ORTH] a question on another section of the bills, section 4.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I must ask my colleague not to yield for an irregular examination of the sections. It is understood that they will be considered hereafter in their order.

Mr. CONGER. Then I will wait till that section is reached.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I had supposed that the hour of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. E. R. HOAR] had expired. Is the bill now open for debate?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. When I made the suggestion to the House yesterday, in regard to proceeding to the consideration of the bill by sections, I was not aware that more than two or three gentlemen desired to speak on the subject of the bill. I learn that the gentleman from New York on my left [Mr. WOOD] desires to be heard on the general subject.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I supposed that the gentleman did not propose to shut off debate, and I therefore rose to claim the floor.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Does the gentleman object to the House now proceeding to consider the bill by sections?

Mr. HALE, of New York. I hope that that motion will not be made, or if made that it will not be sustained. I do not think the House is ready to order the previous question on the bill. I for one am desirous of discussing it.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I am willing that any reasonable time for general debate shall be allowed.

Mr. WOOD. If my colleague [Mr. HALE] does not desire to speak just now, I would like to say a few words.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I shall not interfere with my colleague proceeding.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. In relation to a remark made by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I desire to state that I was not mistaken yesterday in the answer I made to my colleague [Mr. COX] in relation to the direct laws of the German Empire in reference to emigration. But the authorities do in every way attempt to prevent emigration. So far as the railroads under their control in Germany can be managed, they are managed against emigration. Norway and Sweden have passed laws and have laws now against emigration; but Germany prevents it only indirectly.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 200) for the relief of settlers on the Cherokee strip in Kansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 668) relative to private contracts or agreements made with Indians prior to May 21, 1872;

A bill (H. R. No. 1039) for the relief of John B. Weber, late colonel Eighteenth Regiment Corps d'Afrique;

A bill (H. R. No. 1381) for the relief of John S. Wright, administrator of the estate of John T. Wright, deceased; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1755) for the relief of Richard H. Swift.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 32) to obviate the necessity of issuing bonds for certain private land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 253) to authorize the county commissioners of Thurston County, in Washington Territory, to issue bonds for the purpose of constructing a railroad from Budd's Inlet, Puget Sound, to intersect the Northern Pacific Railroad at or near Lenino;

A bill (S. No. 375) for the benefit of the Kentucky Agricultural and Mechanical Association;

A bill (S. No. 560) for the relief of William N. Denny, major of the Fifty-fifth Indiana Volunteer Infantry;

A bill (S. No. 561) for the relief of Charles H. Moseley; and

A bill (S. No. 563) for the relief of John M. McPike.

CITIZENSHIP—FOREIGN RESIDENCE.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill in relation to citizenship and foreign residence.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, until yesterday I had no opportunity to examine the bill reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which is now under consideration. Therefore I did not anticipate participating in the debate. I was not conversant with the extent to which the bill went, or with the nature of its provisions, so as to be able to make that careful examination of the subject which would enable me to speak on the bill with any degree of intelligence. And I regret, sir, that I am now compelled to enter into this discussion without any preparation whatever, so far as authorities are concerned, or so far as I may be able to present general principles which are applicable to the principles involved in the bill itself.

Probably, Mr. Speaker, few questions have greater importance to the American people than those which affect naturalization and citizenship, the question before the House; citizenship as such, whether operative within the United States or out of the United States. I think that the American people may well be interested in this whole question, in view of the fact that we are either ourselves emigrants or the descendants of emigrants. We stand to-day the only nationality of which that can be said to any considerable extent. And permit me to say, in connection with this question, that in my judgment the greatness of the American people is derived from the fact that they are as a people originally of all nationalities, the result of diverse though antagonistic races.

We are of no one nation of the globe. We are derived from no one nation of the globe. It is by the crossing of the internationalities, it is by the intermingling of the races of Southern Europe with those of Northern Europe and Middle Europe that we have been able to build up and produce a race on this continent, a strong and vigorous race, superior in all physical and intellectual power and strength to any other in the world. The law of interbreeding, applicable to the humblest animals, has been well illustrated in the power of the American people deriving its inherent strength from opposites.

Now, this bill ostensibly and in fact is to enforce citizenship as directed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which gives to Congress the power to carry into execution all the rights derived under that amendment. It is not only our duty under the Constitution to regulate this, but it is of material national consequence in our international diplomacy and in our intercourse with foreign nations that it should be finally determined what constitutes an American citizen abroad, how far the American Government will protect him, what his rights are, and when he shall lose those rights.

Sir, those of us who are familiar with the diplomatic history of this country know the repeated embarrassments and complications that have arisen from the want of a settled policy, by treaty or statute law, which shall be uniform and general in its application. We all know that the nicest points have arisen on this question, and have led us into serious complications and misunderstandings with other nations. This nation of all others, with its large population of those who are not native born and who are constantly traveling for business or pleasure or permanent residence abroad, needs a settled doctrine on this subject, for we are being continually led into misunderstandings which we should endeavor to avoid.

It is our duty, therefore, under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution to provide by law a final settlement of this question so as to govern the executive department in its negotiations with nations abroad. It is our duty, also, if we wish to live at peace and in comity with all the world, to endeavor to regulate by statute precisely the limitations on this question, so that every American, be he native born or adopted, whenever he goes into a foreign country, either for the purpose of pleasure, or the purpose of business, or for the purpose of acquiring a permanent domicile, shall know and be advised what the laws of his country are on the subject if he desires to maintain his allegiance to this country. I think, therefore, that the bill is in the right direction. It starts out with a desire to do that which it is incumbent upon Congress to do, and the sooner we reach a conclusion on this question the better.

But in saying this, Mr. Speaker, I want it distinctly understood that I do not commit myself to the details of this bill. I understand that an opportunity will be afforded us to amend the bill, and when the House shall be brought to a consideration of its details it can be modified and amended. It is not my purpose at this time to refer to several of the details of the bill which in my mind may be materially benefited; but I do not see in the bill itself anything that is not capable of modification and amendment, so as to avoid the objection which my colleague [Mr. COX] yesterday saw to it, that it is in the line of restriction upon immigration, and to that extent is objectional.

Now, sir, in connection with this whole subject and as directly pertinent to it, I desire to refer to naturalization. We have two bills before this House proposing to restrict naturalization; proposing to adopt certain general provisions of law by which obstructions shall be thrown in the way of any immigrant from abroad who desires to become a citizen of the United States. I have something to say on this subject, not only with reference to the bill under consideration, but with reference to the naturalization laws and the propositions now before the Judiciary Committee of the House for their amendment. I shall as preliminary to a discussion of these bills make some historical references which may be interesting to the House, and may not be impertinent to this discussion. The policy of this country in reference to naturalization is not derived, as is generally supposed, from the laws of England. The naturalization laws of this country were originally founded on antagonism to the principles ingrafted in the English constitution and in English practice. The system arose out of the necessities of the Colonies. We were then a new people; our ports were open to people from every part of the globe, and, unlike England, the whole tendency and policy of our legislation originally, before we adopted the Constitution of the United States, was to throw open the doors to the widest latitude for the admission of all who chose to come here, giving them very soon equal privileges with ourselves. This was the origin and foundation of the naturalization laws of this country.

At the period when the Colonies were founded the policy of England for more than a century had been hostile to conferring political privileges upon foreigners; and so illiberal was its course in this respect through the whole period of our colonial history that one of the acts of tyranny charged upon George III in the Declaration of Independence was that he had endeavored to prevent the population of the States by obstructing the laws for the naturalization of foreigners, and by refusing to pass others to encourage their immigration hither. The only mode by which a foreigner in England could obtain naturalization investing him with all the rights of a subject was by act of Parliament; and letters of denizâtion could only be obtained by the King's special license, which was granted with certain restrictions.

The rights of foreigners settled in the Colonies were, therefore, in a very precarious state. By the law of England they could neither hold nor transmit real property, nor exercise any political rights; and by the navigation act, unless they were naturalized or made free denizens by the King's letters-patent, they were forbidden to exercise in any of the Colonies the occupation of a merchant or a factor. To remedy this state of things and to encourage immigration, the colonial Legislatures exercised the right of passing naturalization laws. Maryland was the first Colony that took this course. This was in 1666. The other Colonies imitated this example, and continued to do so in spite of the protests of England, which looked upon the exercise of this power by the Colonies as an encroachment upon the royal prerogatives or the rights of Parliament.

The difficulties growing out of the subject continued to increase until the separation of the two countries.

During the Revolution, and until the adoption of the Federal Constitution, the power of naturalizing aliens was exercised by the States. When the Federal Constitution was framed, in 1787, a provision was inserted without debate conferring upon Congress the power of establishing one uniform rule of naturalization throughout the States; and at the second session of the First Congress after the adoption of the Constitution, on March 26, 1790, an act of the most liberal character was passed, authorizing the naturalization of any free white alien after a residence of two years under the jurisdiction of the United States and of one year in the State where he applied for admission. From that to the present time numerous acts have been passed upon the subject. In 1795 the period of residence was increased to five years, and a previous declaration on oath by the alien of his intention to become a citizen was required to be made before a court of one of the States, at least three years before the applicant's admission. In 1798 the residence was increased to fourteen years, with five years' previous declaration of intention. In 1802 the residence was reduced again to five years, and the declaration of intention to three years, and in 1824 the declaration of intention was further reduced to two years.

These provisions have remained in force ever since.

This brief, though incomplete, review sufficiently demonstrates that the history of this country is indissolubly connected with the history of immigration, and that the present greatness and power of the United States are the direct result of the liberal policy that was pursued toward immigrants. Every immigrant adds to the aggregate productive power of the country, and Congress should therefore remain intent upon encouraging, facilitating, and protecting immigration at all times. Unnecessary safeguards in naturalization should therefore be avoided, because they operate as unnecessary obstacles, and the period of residence and of the declaration of intention should be reduced. Steam and the telegraph have worked great revolutions within the last fifty years, and a residence of two years under the jurisdiction of the United States and of one year in the State where the application for admission is made, as demanded by the act in 1790, should be amply sufficient. Upon this question we have literally stood still since 1802, although almost all other civilized countries have been busy to modify the rigor of their laws and to become quite liberal. Thus, in 1860, a residence of two years was all that was required in Mexico; Brazil required one of three years; Peru one year; Venezuela one year, and in the case of resident owners of real estate of one thousand pesos none at all; and New Granada and Ecuador in many cases none at all.

Even European countries have made great progress in this direction. Portugal requires a residence of two years, Greece three years, and Denmark one year. In Belgium and Holland no previous residence is necessary. In Russia, by the fundamental law of the empire, as embodied in the last revision of the code in 1857, all foreigners except Jews may be naturalized upon taking the oath of allegiance, which is the only condition required to effect naturalization. Within nine months after the oath is taken the foreigner is bound to enter into one of the existing classes of the empire, and thereupon he enjoys all the rights and privileges of the class to which he belongs and all the rights of a native of Russia.

Even in Russia, which is usually esteemed to be the most despotic, tyrannical, and exclusive nation of the world, inducements and encouragement are under a wise policy held out for the purpose of enlarging the population, to a greater extent the largest empire in the world. Every obstruction to attaining citizenship under the laws of Russia has been removed.

And, sir, when this subject comes up in this House, in which an attempt is to be made in this great free Republic of ours to throw yet greater barriers between the immigrant and the right of citizenship in this country—when these bills shall come up for discussion—I should like to see their advocates imitate Russian despotism.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The gentleman certainly does not intimate that there is anything of that kind in this bill.

Mr. WOOD. I have said that this bill refers to a kindred subject, the status of an American citizen abroad. It does not affect directly the question of naturalization, but naturalization is a kindred question to this.

In Würtemberg citizenship is obtained by acquiring landed property in or near the city or commune where the foreigner has established his residence, and it confers all the privileges and subjects him to all the obligations of a native. In Prussia, by a law of 1842, the superior administrative authorities are empowered to naturalize, with a few exceptions, any stranger who satisfies them of his good conduct. Other instances might be cited. Many European governments have shown also in other matters, as for instance by the abolition of the passport system, that it is wise to make concessions to the liberal tendency and the commercial spirit of the age.

The statute-books of the several States of the Union also demonstrate that the existing naturalization laws have become too illiberal. Though no State can confer upon any alien all the rights and privileges of a citizen of the United States, it may grant him any civil or political privileges within its own jurisdiction not inconsistent with the laws of the United States. Under this residuary power many of the Western States have passed statutes which allow aliens to hold land, to exercise the elective franchise, and to enjoy many of the privileges of citizens; a liberal policy which has contributed greatly to the rapid settlement of these States and to their increase in wealth and prosperity.

At the close of the late war four millions of negroes were at once invested with the rights of citizenship, and the constitutional and legislative changes by which this result was procured should have been followed up by a modification of the naturalization laws in the direction indicated. But it was not done. On the contrary, in the year 1869 a strong attempt was made to deprive the State courts of all power in the premises. A bill to this effect was introduced into the Senate by Senator FRELINGHUYSEN. Its introduction alarmed the adopted citizens. In the city of New York the German county organizations of both political parties immediatley joined hands and arranged and held a mass meeting to protest against the passage of the bill. The meeting was attended by thousands, without distinction of party, and presided over by General Franz Sigel. It took strong ground against the proposed bill, and the resolutions adopted by it were transmitted to Congress. The agitation soon spread over the Western States, where the German element, without distinction of party and with perfect unanimity, indorsed the action taken by the New York meeting. The result was that the bill failed to become a law.

Another bill of even a worse character, looking in the same direction, was introduced by my colleague [Mr. LAWSON] at this session, and is now before the Committee on the Judiciary. That bill appears to have for its object to accomplish indirectly what Senator FRELINGHUYSEN's bill failed to accomplish directly. Under the plea of guarding the purity of the ballot-box, the bill empowers the chief supervisor named therein to be present and witness all proceedings for the naturalization of aliens; to examine and cross-examine all witnesses and applicants; and to examine all naturalization records and papers thereto belonging that may be filed in any court within his district, or may have been filed in any such court since the colonial times; and to make, or cause to be made, abstracts or copies therefrom to be filed away in his own office. It also provides that any officer of any such court, or any person acting under any authority or pretended authority, from any such officer, who shall hinder, interfere with, or prevent the said chief supervisor in the performance of any of the powers and duties referred to, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction, be punished by imprisoment for not less than six months nor more than one year, or by a fine not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Under the fourth section the offending judge may be instantly arres'ed without process. It therefore becomes a serious question whether, in case of the passage of the bill in its present form, any State court could, consistently with its own dignity and self-respect, continue to naturalize. The mode of examining and cross-examining a witness is always to a very great extent in the discretion of the court. The ablest counsel are not only bound to submit, but they do cheerfully submit, to the ruling of the court in this respect. But any such ruling, if made against the chief supervisor, who is not required to be a lawyer, and perhaps does not understand the rules of examination, would, under the language of the said act, constitute an interference, and as such it is punishable by instant arrest without process, and subsequent fine and imprisonment. What judge, fit to be a judge, would consent to such an arbitrary and irresponsible supervision and censorship? Although State courts have a constitutional and competent power to naturalize as long as the power is not expressly taken away by act of Congress, they are not bound to exercise it. In admitting aliens to citizenship they act as courts of the United States, and not as State courts. This jurisdiction they are at liberty to decline to exercise, and the act referred to seems to have for its object either to insure the complete subjection of the State courts in matters of naturalization to the will and wishes of the administration in power, or to provoke them to a refusal to naturalize.

There are other objections to the bill that need no elaboration. As all the duties that can legitimately arise in connection with the naturalization of aliens can be and always have been performed by courts regularly constituted and having a seal as such, the creation of a separate bureau which is to watch over both Federal and State courts, which is to have its own secret archives, and which is to have for its head an irresponsible executive officer, whose tenure of office depends wholly upon the will of a political faction, and whose compensation in the shape of fees is made to depend solely and exclusively upon the amount of mischief he may do, should be looked upon with great solicitude.

The whole bill is just the reverse of the policy that, as has been shown, should be pursued toward aliens. If in the judgment of Congress the existing laws are insufficient for the prevention of frauds and the detection and punishment of offenders, let additional safeguards be enacted. No objection can or will be made to a requirement that the depositions of the applicant and the witness shall show all the places at which they respectively resided during the period of the applicant's probation or any other period that may be reasonably fixed. No objection can or will be made to the most strict regulations that may be adopted concerning the filing and the preservation of the records, and the issuance of certificates, or duplicates thereof, or their form. All such requirements the State courts would cheerfully and scrupulously obey. But they should never be asked to submit to the supervision of a mere Federal office-holder. So, as they have full power and control over their own records, no valid reason can be assigned why the application for the revocation of a certificate of naturalization on the ground of its improper procurement should not be directed to be made to the court from which it emanated.

The bills referred to, as a whole, appear not to have for their immediate object the correction of abuses in the prevailing system of naturalization, but seems to be part of a deeply laid scheme to effect a concentration of power for political purposes.

But enough for to-day on the subject of naturalization. I am not without hope that the committee having in charge these bills will omit to report favorably upon them, and we shall then be saved from the humiliating spectacle of being obliged to defend American labor from the assaults of an American Congress.

Within our day, Mr. Speaker, since you first went to Europe, they have abolished entirely the passport system; so that an American citizen can now travel throughout Europe, as an Italian or German can travel now throughout America, without being stopped by an officer to demand the production of his evidence of citizenship. This is in the line of liberalism; it is for the purpose of throwing off those feudal restrictions which were adopted in ages past for purposes which, in my judgment, were not wise, but which were then esteemed wise. In this liberal age, this age of steam, of the telegraph, of intelligence, Christianity, and education, mankind have arisen to individual and personal freedom, so that so long as a man violates no law against person or property he is at liberty to go where he may see fit.

Without pursuing this argument further, permit me to say that in this bill there are certain objectionable items; and before taking my seat I beg leave to refer to them. Among those who are to be regarded as not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States are "naturalized citizens of the United States who may, by the terms of any treaty, be regarded as having resumed their original nationality, or who, on returning to their native country, may be convicted of offenses against the laws of that country committed prior to their arrival in the United States." Now, let us look at that a moment. This bill proposes to declare what persons shall be regarded as deprived of the right of citizenship within the intent of the meaning of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. It is not a proposition to impose or to grant a privilege, but to take away a natural right. I hold that there is nothing in this bill, nothing in the laws of this country or the Constitution of this country, that deprives any man of the right of citizenship if he be to the manner born and has not forfeited by crime or by self-expatriation, as he has a right to do, the right of an American citizen.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The gentleman perhaps is not aware that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. ORTH] gave notice that he would propose to strike out that provision of this bill, as it does not affect existing laws or treaties.

Mr. WOOD. I was not aware of that. I will therefore not criticise what does not exist. If it is not to be left in the bill, then I will not further refer to it. I will now refer to the provision in reference to registration. In my judgment the bill in that particular is not to be censured, because it proposes to make a regulation by which this Government, if it is to protect its citizens abroad, shall hereafter possess some record or some fact showing the nature of that citizenship.

The case of Dr. Houard has been referred to. I am familiar with that case, for I was a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs when that question agitated this Government and nearly led us into a war. I do not think that case was an apt illustration for the chairman of the committee. Dr. Houard's father went to Cuba many, many years before Dr. Houard was born. He held an office under the Cuban government as commissioner of police. He took an oath to support the Spanish constitution. On a visit to his friends, he returned temporarily to Philadelphia, where Dr. Houard was born. In early infancy Dr. Houard went to Cuba, and though he subsequently spent a short time in Philadelphia, he returned to Cuba, the residence of his father, where he remained, and at his majority entered into the profession of medicine, which he practiced in Cuba for years. It appears he was a homeopathic doctor; and during the rebellion in Cuba one of his boxes of medicine found its way into the insurgent camp. It was discovered there by the Spanish authorities, with Dr. Houard's name upon it. Upon the proof of that single fact Dr. Houard was arrested at his home, at the dead hour of night, and plunged into a Cuban dungeon, where, to the shame of our Government be it said, he remained one whole year before the Government of the United States made any direct or positive effort for his release. The result was that, by the bold action of this House in passing a resolution demanding the interference of our Government, his release was effected after the Spanish government had sent him to a penal colony in the Mediterranean Sea, notwithstanding the remonstrance of our Secretary of State.

My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. E. R. HOAR] would say that if Dr. Houard under such a bill as this had registered himself with the American consul at the place of his residence, simply asserting his American citizenship, that fact would have protected him from insult and outrage. I say, sir, that in my judgment very little respect is paid in Cuba to the rights of Americans, whether adopted or native citizens; that no respect for our national character will, without some positive interference on the part of our Government, prevent such outrages from being perpetrated wherever it may be deemed necessary by the Spanish authorities.

But returning to the bill, it requires a registry. That opens the whole question (a very important one in connection with this measure) how far the Government is bound to interest itself in behalf of an American citizen after he has left this country and taken perhaps the oath of allegiance to another—expatriated himself voluntarily from all duty to this country, making himself no longer amenable to our laws of conscription in case of war. In a case of this kind where one of our citizens not only removes from the country permanently, but goes further and takes an oath of allegiance to a foreign power—the Queen of Great Britain, if you please—a very interesting question is presented and one exceedingly important for this Government to determine. Sir, our international difficulties have largely arisen in consequence of our naturalized citizens returning to the country of their nativity, never expecting to return, committing some offense against the municipal or local law, and then when getting into trouble claiming American citizenship and demanding the protection of the United States Government. This has been a source of very serious trouble between this nation and other nations. It is well, therefore, that we should determine the question so that the public authorities may know precisely where the line is drawn. Whether this bill properly draws the line is the question.

I am not myself in favor of that feature of the bill which specifies two years as the time after which citizenship shall be considered as forfeited if not reasserted. I am not in favor of withdrawing from the American citizen, whether native or adopted, the protection of the Government if within two years he does not register himself as an American citizen. I would extend the time many, many years beyond that, unless the person took some oath of allegiance to a foreign power and declared that he released himself entirely from duty to this Government. For, sir, citizenship implies mutual obligation. There can be no obligation on the part of the Government of the United States to protect any man unless there is an obligation on that man to obey the laws of the United States and protect the national honor. The obligation is reciprocal. Made up as our population is so largely of emigrants from abroad, some of them of doubtful character—the Italian prisons having been in one case emptied upon our shores; paupers and convicts having been sent here at the expense of their home governments—I say we should guard well our policy upon this subject. While we should be liberal in granting the great privilege of citizenship to all who may desire it, we should at the same time hold it as a sacred right. Where a man voluntarily leaves his country, turns his back upon it, refuses to do military duty, refuses to pay taxes and goes so far as to take an oath of allegiance to a foreign country, I have some doubt whether in such a case this Government is bound to extend its protection. I hold that a man, whether he be here or abroad, if he wants our protection, must do something to recognize our rights over him at all times and under all circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, reserving to myself the right to comment upon or criticise any details of this bill when we come to consider the several sections, I have no further remarks to make at this time.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Permit me to say, before yielding to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE,] that two years is the time fixed by treaty.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that an amendment be printed which I propose to offer to this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 4, line 8, after the words "United States" insert as follows:

Provided, That this provision shall not be so construed as to affect navigation or other similar laws relating to ownership of ships or vessels, or to their enrollment or registration or license.

There was no objection, and the amendment was ordered to be printed.

DAVID A. TELFAIR.

Mr. SMITH, of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3093) removing all the legal and political disabilities of David A. Telfair, of Johnston County, North Carolina; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that all the legal and political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States shall be removed from David A. Telfair, of Johnston County, North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Has there been a petition filed in this case?

Mr. SMITH, of North Carolina. Yes, sir.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. SMITH, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MYERS. I object to the bill concerning citizenship going over to be taken up to-morrow. To-morrow is for private bills, and is objection day in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. GARFIELD. I insist on my motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I will give way to-morrow if necessary. I think the bill had better keep its place, and I will give way to whatever may be most desirable to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The postponement can be made to-morrow morning as well as now. The bill goes over until to-morrow, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] will be entitled to the floor.

STATE TAXATION ON RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. HERNDON. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on the Public Lands, with the recommendation that it do pass, a bill (H. R. No. 3026) declaring the lands heretofore granted to railroad companies subject to State taxation, and to move that it be printed and recommitted to that committee. I furthermore move that the bill be made a special order for Tuesday three weeks hence.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman to except appropriation bills.

Mr. HERNDON. I am willing to make that exception.

I move that the bill be made the special order on that day to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I must object, unless the business from the Committee on Ways and Means is also excepted.

Mr. HERNDON. I also except that business.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Does the bill come from any committee?

Mr. HERNDON. Yes, sir; it is the unanimous report of the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I hope the gentleman will also except reports from the Committee on Elections.

Mr. HERNDON. I do; but I believe they are excepted under the rules.

Mr. COBURN. And the Army bill also.

Mr. HERNDON. I also agree to that exception. There is hardly any bill, except the appropriation bills, which can be brought before the House which is of greater interest to the House and the people than the bill I now propose to submit. The railroads whose lands this bill proposes to tax pass through Nebraska, Nevada, and Colorado; and the people there are greatly interested in the question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object to debate.

Mr. KILLINGER. I suggest that the gentleman from Texas move to make the bill the special order not only on the day he has indicated, but from day to day until disposed of, or otherwise he may be cut off.

Mr. HERNDON. I move that it be made a special order for Tuesday three weeks from Tuesday next, at the hour of half-past one o'clock, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

The SPEAKER. It will be Tuesday, May the 12th. The gentleman moves to make it the special order at the hour of half-past one on that day and from day to day until disposed of to the exclusion of all other business, except reports from the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Elections, and of the Army appropriation bill. The Chair hears no objection to the proposition, but he feels bound in candor to say it will not give a brilliant prospect of reaching the bill during this session.

Mr. CROUNSE. I suggest to the gentleman he give notice that he will move to suspend the rules on Monday next and pass the bill.

Mr. CLYMER. The gentleman can move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Public Lands and then enter a motion to reconsider, which can be called up at any time.

Mr. HOLMAN. The better course perhaps would be to have the matter called up on Monday next under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HERNDON. As there seems to be some doubt in reference to the bill coming up at the time I have indicated I will withdraw it for the present and give notice that I will bring it forward on Monday next under a suspension of the rules.

RECESS.

Mr. RANDALL. Before going into the committee I suggest, as the House has ordered an evening session for this evening, that we agree at the hour of half-past four to take a recess until half-past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. GARFIELD. I agree to that.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the motion agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WOODFORD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Colorado:

For salaries of governor and superintendent of Indian affairs, chief justice and two associate judges, and secretary, $15,000.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I move to strike out "and superintendent of Indian affairs."

The title "superintendent of Indian affairs" is an old form which I think it is unnecessary to retain in the bill. I move to strike it out.

Mr. GARFIELD. As the gentleman has said, that is the old form in which the office is described in the law. It really confers no power. We placed it in the bill because that is the title which the law gives the governor. But as I do not suppose that it can affect the status of the officer, I have no objection to striking it out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Dakota:

For salaries of governor and superintendent of Indian affairs, chief justice and two associate judges, and secretary, $15,000.

For legislative expenses, namely: For per diem and mileage of members of council and house of representatives, and other officers, clerks, and employés, and extra compensation to the president of the council and to speaker of the house, and for postage for secretary's office, $16,090.

For stationery and printing, and for paper for printing laws and journals for the Assembly, and for miscellaneous printing for the secretary's office and executive department, $5,000. For candles, lamps, and oil, fuel, rent, storage of Government property, repairs of furniture, and incidental expenses, $2,975. For contingent expenses, to be expended by the governor, $1,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask that the same amendment may be made here as in the previous paragraph, and in all other cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to strike out the words "and superintendent of Indian affairs."

Mr. LOWE. I must object to that unless some gentleman will say that they have examined the question, and that those officers are not also superintendents of Indian affairs.

Mr. GARFIELD. They are not. We have now regular superintendents of Indian affairs under the law. When these territorial governments were created the governors were ex officio superintendents of Indian affairs. Since then separate offices have been created, and the governors have no duties to perform in connection with that title. My only doubt about the amendment was that since the law gave the governors this title, it might perhaps be necessary to give it to them in the bill that there might be no question about their salaries.

Mr. LOWE. If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is satisfied, I will not object.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I offer the following amendment to the pending paragraph:

In line 882 strike out the words "and journals."

The amount of money that is expended in printing the journals of the territorial Legislatures I have always regarded as well-nigh thrown away. Not all the States in the Union print their legislative journals; only a very few States print them. It seems to me entirely unnecessary to expend this large amount of money in printing these legislative journals in these Territories. In striking out this provision I think a large sum of money might be saved.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the gentleman, if he will consider the matter, will see there is a special propriety in leaving that in it. All the laws passed by the Territories are subject to the revision of Congress. Unless Congress by its silence assents to their passage they do not become law. It becomes necessary frequently that Congress shall revise the legislation of these Territories, and in order that it may do this intelligently it is necessary to be in possession of the journals as well as to have copies of the laws, that Congress may know not only what the territorial Legislatures have done, but also how they do it—their methods of doing business. I should regard it as seriously interfering with our means of dealing with the laws of the Territories and being in a position properly to revise them if the policy should be changed, which has always been followed, of printing their legislative journals.

The question being taken on Mr. DUNNELL's amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the District of Columbia:

For salaries of the governor, $3,000; secretary, $2,000; four members of the Board of Public Works, at $2,500 each; five members of the Board of Health, at $2,000 each; president and members of the council, $2,880; in all, $27,880.

Mr. BROWN. I move to strike out the paragraph which has been read.

I am in favor of economy and retrenchment. As my State has paid as internal taxes upon her industries during the last ten years over $50,000,000 to support the Government, I desire to see the revenues properly and economically applied to meet the expenditures. I hope in the remarks I propose to submit to be allowed the same latitude which was extended a few days ago to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. STARKWEATHER] when, in discussing this bill, he fired a shot at the speech made by me in February last on the civil-rights bill, and as I conceive grossly misrepresented my sentiments as uttered in that speech, attributing to me such as I have never spoken on this floor and have never entertained. The gentleman took occasion also to incorporate into that speech remarks that were not uttered by him on the floor, and he was allowed to have read a letter written by me as far back as 1861, a letter which long ago was scattered by thousands throughout my district; which has been published all over the State of Kentucky repeatedly; which was read many times here in the Fortieth Congress, and was the cause of my exclusion from that Congress, to which I had been elected by a majority of over five thousand votes.

Since the gentleman wishes to go back into the past, into that character of literature, I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read a letter which emanated from him.

Mr. GARFIELD. I really must make the point of order that this is a dicussion entirely outside of what is properly before the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. The other was also.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. STARKWEATHER] were present I might not object.

Mr. BROWN. The gentleman from Connecticut was in the House when I took the floor.

Mr. GARFIELD. I observe that the gentleman is here, and I withdraw the objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Confidential.]

FORTY-FIRST CONGRESS,
UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 13, 1871.

MY DEAR SIR: On Friday, before leaving Washington, I called at your banking-house, but learned you were detained by illness from business. I hope you may soon be well. Allow me to make a suggestion, not to embarrass you in the least. As you are aware, I have been nominated for Congress, and our election is three weeks from to-day. My opponents are making a vigorous effort to defeat me, but all my friends say my election is sure. I know it is, but I shall be compelled to spend more money than I am able. Could my friends aid me without giving publicity to it, it would put me under renewed obligations to you. I wish this entirely confidential. And in either case, I am, as ever, yours truly,

H. H. STARKWEATHER.

WILLIAM S. HUNTINGTON.

Mr. BROWN. It seems that the author of that letter is blessed with a thrifty patriotism, and keeps an eye always on the main chance. In the course of his speech, in referring to the one I had made, he used the following language:

MR. BROWN, in a speech reeking with abuse of the President and the republican party, that had just voted complete amnesty to him and all his companions in the rebellion, insults the memory and the patriotism of our dead Union soldiers, and for nearly two hours commends the spirit which inaugurated the rebellion.

Not one personally disrespectful word fell from my lips concerning the President of the United States. I alluded to his political acts as Chief Magistrate in such terms as I conceived to be my right, and make no apology therefor. I indulged in what I deemed was legitimate criticism of the action of the republican party for years past; but in the estimation of the gentleman from Connecticut, it seems that those men who have accepted amnesty at the hands of Congress must have done it at the price of their honor and silence. Sir, are they to sit here dumb and indulge in no comments upon legislation, or upon politicians, or upon measures, simply from the fact that they have received amnesty at the hands of the United States Government? Is it treason to speak upon this floor the sentiments that a member honestly entertains; to criticise the President, or denounce the misrule of the republican party? Would the gentleman bring on us the iron rule of the time of Edward IV of England, when a citizen was executed for having wished, when his favorite buck was killed by his sovereign, the buck, horns and all, in the body of the king; would he inaugurate such a spirit and law as that in America? He seemed shocked that I dared criticise the President and denounce the republican party.

Not one word fell from my lips disrespectful of dead Union soldiers. I have always honored the heroism that they displayed upon the field, as well as I have had sympathy for and have honored the courage and manhood exhibited on the other side. The gentleman further said:

I would not have brought this speech to the notice of the House at this time except for the fact that it has been announced in the public journals that it was made for distribution in Connecticut during the pending canvass, and is now being circulated there.

It is an insult to the patriotism of the country, and should be rebuked. When the purpose of this speech is understood, I am confident that the people of Connecticut will see that such teachings are unworthy of support, and that the leaders of the democratic party are still wedded to the "pestilent heresy of secession."

In the whole course of my remarks not an allusion was made to the doctrine of secession. I spoke of the wrongs and misfortunes of the South; of the fortitude with which they had borne them. I alluded to the policy of the party in power for the last twelve years; but there is not a sentiment in the speech, not a word, that could be tortured into disrespect of any Union soldier that ever followed the flag of his country.

I am told upon authority that much incorporated in this speech by the gentleman from Connecticut was never uttered upon this floor, and therefore he shows a disposition to indulge in libel and slander by stealth, and I want the people of my district and State to understand that the man who has misrepresented my sentiments and arraigned me in the American Congress is the author of the letter which has been read. I do not know which excels most in him, the insolence of the Dogberry or the canting morality of the Pecksniff.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I suppose that what has been said by the gentleman from Kentucky is not very appropriate to the matter under discussion in this bill. As the gentleman has taken four or five weeks to frame a reply or an attack upon me, I hope I shall be indulged by the committee for a few moments. The speech he complains of was made on the 10th of March and printed within a day or two afterward, the same as other speeches made on the same day. My colleague [Mr. KELLOGG] made a speech on the same day, and both were in the RECORD a few days afterward. It has taken the gentleman from Kentucky nearly six weeks to find out that he has been misrepresented and to frame an attack in response to anything that was said in my speech.

Mr. Chairman, I will say this in regard to anything said in that speech that affected the gentleman from Kentucky, or any other gentleman, that I was not attacking his integrity, but was simply replying to the spirit of his speech. I have not that speech now before me, but I had it before me then. In that speech we find some things, Mr. Chairman, which I think we have a right to complain of, and to that my remarks were directed. I cannot quote from his speech, because I have not it here; but the party in power, the Executive, Congress, and the judges appointed by this Administration were accused of judicial murder. Further than that, the gentleman went on to eulogize the man who was the Vice-President at the opening of the rebellion, a man who left these Halls, violated his oath to support the Constitution before his State went out of the Union, for it never did go out. The gentleman eulogized him at the expense of Union men. I do not undertake to quote his exact language, but it will be found in his speech as it was printed. He said substantially that the portrait of this man who violated his oath to support the Constitution and went into the rebellion even when his State had not seceded ought to be placed in the national centennial hall in preference to Union men.

I give the letter of the gentleman with my comments on the same:

And here in this House, a few days since, as I have before stated, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] his colleague, [Mr. BROWN,] in a speech reeking with abuse of the President and the republican party, that had just voted complete amnesty to him and all his companions in the rebellion, insults the memory and the patriotism of our dead Union soldiers, and for nearly two hours commends the spirit which inaugurated the rebellion. The whole tone and temper of his speech has the direct tendency to bring on again civil war and rebellion, in which he would doubtless, as before, advise that every Union soldier that should go to the defense of the Government "should be shot before he leaves the State."

This letter gives a better idea of his speech than any comments that can be made, and shall be its own interpretation. It is as follows:

ELIZABETHTOWN, April 18, 1861.

Editors Louisville Courier:

My attention has been called to the following paragraph which appeared in your paper of this date.

"JOHN YOUNG BROWN'S POSITION.—This gentleman, in reply to some searching interrogatories put to him by Governor Helm, said, in reference to the call of the President for four regiments of volunteers to march against the South, 'I would not send one solitary man to aid the Government; and those who volunteer should be shot down in their tracks.'"

This ambiguous report of my remarks has, I find, been misunderstood by some who have read it, who construe my language to apply to the government of the Confederate States. What I did say was this:

"Not one man or one dollar will Kentucky furnish Lincoln to aid him in his unholy war against the South. If this northern Army shall attempt to cross our borders, we will resist it until death; and if one man shall be found in our Commonwealth to volunteer to join them, he ought, and I believe will, be shot down before he leaves the State."

This was not said in reply to any question propounded by ex-Governor Helm, as you have stated, and is no more than I frequently uttered publicly and privately prior to my debate with him.

Respectfully,

JOHN YOUNG BROWN.

And this is put forth here as the true spirit of democracy in that most reliable democratic State, Kentucky. This speech is the best version and exponent of democratic principles.

What does all this mean? Does it not mean that that man who went back on his oath even when his own State had not seceded, who left the second highest place in the national Government to go into secession and rebellion, is to be eulogized here in preference to Union men? It is not true that I printed in my speech what I did not say here. There is not an allusion in my printed speech that was not made on this floor as far as the gentleman is concerned, not one, wherever he got his information that I incorporated in my speech something different from what I said. The most severe thing I said in my speech of the gentleman is the gentleman's own letter, in which, when this Government was sought to be destroyed in his own State, which then held allegiance to the Union, he said that any man that joined the Union Army to support this Government and maintain its flag, "ought, and I believe will be, shot down before he leaves the State."

I said nothing so severe as the gentleman himself said. Yet I sent that record to the country. Does the gentleman complain of me for doing that? If he does, then let him complain of himself still more for having made that record. That is a stain which he can never wipe out. It is the act of a man pretending to wear the Union blue, going around the camp of the Union to betray its cause, asserting publicly by day and night, in a State that still owed allegiance to the Government, that the few men who were disposed to join the Union Army ought to be shot before they were allowed to leave the State. I leave that part of the case. Let the gentleman take care of his letter. The spirit of that letter pervades almost every line of his speech against the Union cause.

I now come to another matter in which I am more personally interested; the letter which I wrote and to which I ask the particular attention of the members of this House. The gentleman has had read a letter which I wrote to Mr. Huntington. The circumstances under which I wrote the letter and the reason for writing it are these: Mr. Huntington was a personal acquaintance; I knew him to be an ardent republican. I met him a few days before this letter was written, in March, 1871, in the streets of Washington. Governor Jewell, of my own State, who was making the canvass then, and who had been recently nominated, was here. The State was supposed to be close. Mr. Huntington said to me one day, "I shall go around among my friends," referring to members of Congress, I supposed at the time, because occasional collections had been made from members of Congress to contribute to the expenses of elections in the different States. I had myself on three different occasions subscribed small sums of money to go into a fund known as the congressional fund, and which was intended to help States or districts about to have an election. I suppose this is not new to any member here. Once I myself raised $1,000 among leading republican members of Congress which I sent home to my State, every dollar of which was used, so far as I know, to employ speakers, print speeches, and get voters to the polls.

Mr. Huntington said that he was going to do something to aid in the election in my State. He knew that I had been or was about to be renominated for Congress. He said to me, "Can't I raise some money for you?" I told him that my own district was generally safe enough; that I did not wish anything for my district, but if he could do anything for the State ticket I would be glad to have him do it. I supposed that he might raise a few hundred dollars to aid in the State election. Just before I went home I called at his place of business to see if he had done anything for the State.

When I got home I found this state of facts: It was my third time of being nominated, and for thirty years no man had ever had more than two nominations in that district—that is four years in Congress. In my absence my friends had taken me up and nominated me for the third term contrary to the rule, and it had made some little division. I was nominated by a two-thirds vote, and finally the nomination was made unanimous, without any effort on my part to get a renomination. That made a little division in the party, and I found that a few republicans hesitated to support me upon the ground that I had obtained a third nomination. Apparently for that reason the district was a little close. After looking about a little some of my friends said, "The election will be close; you have spent more money than you ought." I had taken $1,000 from the bank, which was one-tenth of all I was worth then and what I am worth now, and had placed it in the hands of my friends to aid in the election—to aid in getting out a full vote. That was the only money I had put in the election, and probably was not one-quarter the money used against me.

I then wrote to Mr. Huntington that I had spent what money I could spare, and supposing that he might raise from members of Congress and others five hundred or a thousand dollars, I asked him to send it to me, just as it is in the letter. I wrote that I would be glad to have him do so. That is all there is of it.

Now, as to that having any connection whatever with the board of public works or with the District investigation, it had not the remotest connection. The District government had not then been organized. I did not know a single member of the board of public works. Mr. Huntington had no connection with it, because the District government, as I said before, had not been organized. I will state another thing as to the act organizing the District government: the entire delegation from my State had voted against it. So that I could not have gone to Mr. Huntington for the purpose of getting money, in view of having supported the District government.

The District government had not been organized; Mr. Huntington had no connection with it; and I did not know a single member of the board of public works up to the time when I was appointed a member of the District Committee, more than six months afterward.

Now, sir, as to the money for which application was made to Mr. Huntington. On account of his sickness or from some other cause, he did not send me a dollar; no one ever sent me a dollar. I challenge investigation of the world when I say that no man connected with the District government, or any one else, ever sent me a single cent of money to be used in my election or in any other way.

A few days ago I heard from a gentleman who is a member of this House that the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] in the absence of his colleague, [Mr. BROWN,] felt that he had some reason to complain of something that I said, and that he was going to make some response. I replied that I had not the least objection. I knew that this letter was to be published in the newspapers before it first appeared. A gentleman connected with the press came to me and said, "They are going to publish your Huntington letter." I replied, "I have no objection." I suppose that if I had been inclined to go to the man that had charge of it, who had sneaked into the back door of a dead man's house and purloined it from his papers—I suppose that if I had handed over fifty dollars the man who did this contemptible thing might have been silenced. But I am glad the letter has been published. It has given me an opportunity to state the facts, and I challenge the world to say a word in contradiction of the statement that I never received the first dollar from any one in Washington; I never made, while connected with the District Committee, an application for the appointment of any man to a clerkship or any other position, though I had hundreds of applications; I never asked a contract. There does not live a friend of mine who has ever had a contract under the District government, or has been interested in one in any manner while I was connected with the District Committee or since I have been in Congress.

Yesterday, hearing that this thing was to be revamped and that the investigation into the District affairs was about to close—supposing that, though there had not been a syllable of evidence so far as I knew offered against me, somebody might go in as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] has done and try to make something out of that letter—I went over to the room of the investigating committee. It was the first time I had been there. I was not afraid to go and I was not afraid to be put on oath. I was not afraid to have any man living be put under oath and to state all his knowledge in connection with this matter. As soon as this investigating committee was appointed I said to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON,] the chairman on the part of the House, "If any member of the committee, if any one of the counsel connected with the investigation, if any man who is entitled to the least credit says that I have done anything that is not justified in connection with the District Committee or with my duties as a member of Congress—if I am implicated to the extent of a hair's breadth in anything that may appear or anything that shall be charged, I am ready to answer upon five minutes' notice." That was the declaration I made to the gentleman from Indiana, who will confirm what I say. But yesterday, learning that the investigation was about to close, and supposing that somebody, through the newspapers or in some other way, might attempt to arraign me, I went before the investigating committee and said substantially to the committee what I had said previously to the gentleman from Indiana: "You are about to close your investigation; no man has appeared to make any charges against me. Now, if any member of this committee or any member of the bar connected with the investigation says that I am in the least to blame, I am here to answer." That statement was taken down by the short-hand reporter of the committee, and is in print this morning. Where are the charges against me? If there is any man here to-day who has any charge to make—if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] who makes this arraignment will rise in his place and say that I have done anything which affects my integrity as a member of Congress, I will at once demand an investigation and I will take the judgment of this House upon the question. If the gentleman from Kentucky has any charges to make against my integrity as a member, let him rise and make such charge rather than read a letter which has not the remotest connection with the subject; because it was written at a time when the District government was not organized, and when therefore Mr. Huntington could have had nothing to do with that government. As a matter of fact I voted against the organization of that government, as did every member from Connecticut. I so voted, not because I had anything against the District of Columbia, but I thought that in one or two respects the organization of the District government might have been better. I was probably mistaken; but it was an honest mistake, and it was one against the government of the District.

I send to the Clerk to be read what was said by me yesterday before the investigating committee, and taken down by the reporter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STARKWEATHER, a member of Congress, appeared before the committee, and stated as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word to the committee. This is the first time I have been in the room. I have been engaged very busily on the Appropriation Committee of the House. I have read but little of the testimony taken by this committee. I have been too busy to do so. The most of it I have glanced at. Before the investigation commenced, in one or two papers there was something said in disparagement of the former District Committee. I said to the chairman of the committee on the part of the House [Mr. WILSON, of Indiana] as soon as the committee was appointed, and I have said to other members of the committee, that if there was one word of testimony here offered by anybody, or a claim by any counsel for the prosecution affecting my conduct as a member of Congress, or with the former District Committee—if there was a claim of anything that affected my integrity, I wanted the privilege of being here, and I would be ready to answer it in five minutes. Now, I have not had the chance to read this testimony. This is what I have said to the chairman on the part of the House, and what I say to Mr. Christy now, the first time I have met him, if any member of the prosecution, either the counsel or any member of this committee, find one syllable in the testimony implicating my conduct, I am ready to answer it at any time in a minute, and would thank the committee to give me that opportunity. Of course I do not want to take your time unless that claim is made.

Mr. WILSON. There has not been a syllable of testimony reflecting upon you, Mr. STARKWEATHER.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. If the claim is made, whether it is offered in testimony or in any way, I would like to be informed of it.

The CHAIRMAN. I will say to you, Mr. STARKWEATHER, that so far as this committee has any knowledge, no evidence affecting you has been given, and I have heard no intimation from any counsel for memorialists or any gentleman connected with the investigation that you were in any way involved in our investigation.

Mr. MERRICK. The counsel for the memorialists have no concern with Mr. STARKWEATHER at all.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I did not know, as I had not read the testimony, what claim would be made after the case was through.

Mr. WILSON. If there had been anything of the kind, I should have given you notice, Mr. STARKWEATHER.

Mr. MERRICK. There has been nothing, certainly, from counsel for memorialists, that would justify any such suggestion.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I simply make the suggestion, because when the testimony has closed, not having a chance to read it day by day, I did not know but some claim might be made.

Mr. CHRISTY. I understand from Mr. STARKWEATHER that he did not know the direction this inquiry has taken, nor could he ascertain without reading this volume, [indicating volume of testimony taken before this committee,] which I would not ask that he should do, because we can advise him that no allusion whatever has been made to him.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. One word further. Mr. Huntington was a member and the treasurer of the national republican committee at the very time, I believe, when my letter was written. But my idea was not that he would draw funds from the national republican committee, but that as an active man, working in the interest of the republican party, he would collect, as I had done for others, a small sum for the purposes of that election.

Only one word further. If the gentleman from Kentucky thinks there is anything impeaching my integrity, I am willing to go with him this very minute before the investigating committee now in session. If he will rise in his place and say that there is anything bringing in question my integrity as a member of Congress in connection with that letter, or in connection with my duties as a member of the District Committee of the House, I will go with him instantly before the investigating committee and have it investigated from top to bottom. I ask no favors of any man living. I have not been anxious to be rich; I am not rich. I have some faults; but the fault of getting money that does not belong to me never was laid to my charge successfully, and never can be.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, I have but a word to say in reply to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. STARKWEATHER.] I felt it was not only my right but my duty to respond to the unwarranted assault which he had made upon me in his late speech delivered during my absence from this city. In his speech he put sentiments into my mouth which I had never uttered. He was guilty of wholesale misrepresentation of all that I had said, and I did not wish that misrepresentation to go to the country, and particularly to my people at home, without reply. As he had gone out of the track of legitimate debate and left the discussion of the bill under consideration by the House to go back thirteen years and trump up an old letter of mine, I felt it was but fair on my part to allude to the epistolary essays of the gentleman, which I have done.

Now, the gentleman from Connecticut boasts that his skirts are clear; that no smell of fire is upon his garments; that he has been before this committee and demanded an investigation. I am not here as his accuser further than he has accused and implicated himself. A hundred times, ay, a thousand-fold would I rather be the author of my letter read by the gentleman than stand in the American Congress and look into the mirror to see myself reflected as he is this day.

He says, Mr. Chairman, that he received no money. He boasts his innocence, his ignorance of the fact there was anything wrong in his asking that such a corruption fund should be furnished him. In his letter he solicited money; and I hold in my hand the defense made by the gentleman of this transaction to the editor of the Norwich Bulletin a few days after its first publication, and he does not there deny that he got it.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I should like to have the gentleman from Kentucky read that part of the letter which shows any corrupt intent on the part of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. BROWN. All of it shows such intent. I will read it again:

On Friday, before leaving Washington, I called at your banking-house, but learned that you were detained by illness from business. I hope you may soon be well. Allow me to make a suggestion not to embarrass you in the least. As you are aware I have been renominated for Congress, and our election is three weeks from to-day. My opponents are making vigorous efforts to defeat me, but all my friends say my election is sure. I know it is, but I shall be compelled to spend more money than I am able. Could my friends aid me without giving publicity to it, it would put me under renewed obligations to you.

The arrangement must be entirely confidential; no publicity must be given to it; and he would be placed under "renewed obligations"—to whom? Sir, to Mr. Huntington, who, as the facts were developed, was afterward connected with contracts under this District "ring," and whose proportion of profits was rumored to be over $130,000; and what is said in this letter is supplemented by the fact that the gentleman from Connecticut afterward became the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia which investigated that matter. Why did he seek money unless it was with the intent to buy his way into Congress; and why with such repeated injunctions of secrecy? He said of my letter, "This letter better gives an idea of his speech than any comments which can be made, and shall be its own interpretation." I respond, in his own language, that his letter, and his after official position as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, give a better comment on and interpretation of his position and intention than any remarks I could make on the subject.

He says that I called the execution of a woman in this city judicial murder. I stand in the midst of the American Congress and repeat it now, that it was then so accepted and pronounced, and is to-day, by the best legal minds on this continent and throughout the civilized world, regarded a revolting murder, whose horrors will haunt all the participants in it.

Moreover, I said that the Attorney-General of the United States within the last five months had quoted that trial as a precedent altogether fit to be followed. He did it in his opinion in the Modoc case. In giving his opinion that we had authority to execute Captain Jack and his associates, he referred to the Surratt trial as a precedent entirely fit to be followed. Within a few weeks after the publication of that opinion he was nominated by the President of the United States as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, but, thank God! was not confirmed by the Senate of the United States.

He attacks General Breckinridge, and complains that I complimented him in my late speech. I have no apologies to make here or elsewhere for what I said of that loved, unstained gentleman, soldier, and statesman; the pride of my Commonwealth, "the rose and expectancy of the fair State," but now outlawed by this Government. Sent to the American Congress in his young manhood, he proved himself worthy of all the honors which clustered around him, filling to the full measure the high hopes of his friends, and——

Mr. BURROWS. I rise to a question of order. I do not propose to sit here and listen to such eulogies pronounced upon such men on the question of striking out this section of the bill.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will be permitted to proceed. That is just what we want for the next campaign.

Mr. RANDALL. You want a little integrity.

Mr. BROWN. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PARKER] expects to use the Surratt trial and this defense of General Breckinridge when denounced for the next campaign, let him make the most of it.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. WOODFORD.) The gentleman from Kentucky will desist, and the committee will come to order.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I hope the gentlemen will be allowed to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan insist on the point of order?

Mr. BURROWS. I do.

Mr. CROOKE. If no one else objects I will. If everybody but myself should say go on, I would not sit here to listen to this disgusting thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being insisted on——

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to say one word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot at this time entertain further debate on the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. The gentleman desires to withdraw his objection and to explain the reason why he does so.

Mr. BURROWS. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. RICE. I renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to rule that the eulogy pronounced by the gentleman from Kentucky upon a former Vice-President is not pertinent to the discussion of the motion to strike out the paragraph relating to the District of Columbia. The gentleman from Kentucky, by consent of the committee, will proceed in order.

Mr. CROOKE. Has a member of this House any right to insist on stopping this line of speech?

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the Chair is compelled to rule that debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us have a vote.

Mr. CROOKE. If I have a right to stop this line of speech I insist upon my right; and when talking is ended I am ready for anything else.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made, and more than ten minutes having been used in the debate, the Chair is compelled to rule that debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. STARKWEATHER rose.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I move that the committee rise, that the House may give the gentleman full liberty to proceed. For my own part I desire to hear him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. STARKWEATHER] had been recognized before the gentleman from Virginia rose.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I insist on my motion that the committee rise for the purpose of extending the time of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut rose, as the Chair understood, for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry, and had been recognized before the gentleman from Virginia rose. When the Chair has heard the gentleman from Connecticut he will then recognize the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I was about to move a formal amendment and to yield my time to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BROWN,] that he might have an opportunity of finishing anything he has to say that is pertinent to this matter. I move to amend the amendment by striking out any word, and yield my time to the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PLATT] insist on his motion that the committee rise?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I do not, if the gentleman from Kentucky is permitted to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to proceed by the courtesy of the gentleman from Connecticut, who has yielded to him his time.

Mr. RICE. Then I insist that he shall proceed in connection with the subject-matter that is before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will see that the rules are enforced. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] will proceed in order.

Mr. BROWN. As the gentleman from Connecticut was allowed to go on without interruption in his remarks, until he had concluded, I think the same courtesy ought to have been extended to me when I was making my speech, but I was cut off in the midst of my vindication of an eminent man who had been sneered at and denounced.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I am entirely willing that the gentleman should proceed, and have yielded him my time for that purpose.

Mr. BROWN. There are gentlemen in the committee who undertake to dictate to me the line which I shall pursue. The Chairman has ruled that any further reference to the gentleman of whom I was speaking is not in order. I decline any such courtesy. "Let the galled jade wince."

Mr. HOSKINS. I desire to make a suggestion to the committee. The time is rapidly passing; if by unanimous consent three minutes should be given to each of those gentlemen to dispose of their matter, it occurs to me that that would be the readiest way to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] is entitled to the floor to use the five minutes given him by the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. For the purpose of taking away from the gentleman from Kentucky any possible opportunity of saying that the majority of the House desired to stop his remarks, I renew my motion that the committee rise, that the House may by a majority, if it so desires, permit the gentleman to proceed.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, it was not agreed to.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. As the majority of the votes cast against the motion are from the democratic side, I am perfectly satisfied.

Mr. STORM. The statement that the majority is from the democratic side of the House is false.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Kentucky has declined to use it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire the floor?

Mr. BROWN. I will say just a word. I have been baited and badgered here during the last half-hour, and constantly interrupted in the midst of my speech. The House sat silent while it listened to an assault made on General Breckinridge, to which I felt it my duty to reply, and I was replying in my own terms when this interruption and confusion occurred.

Mr. RICE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BROWN. Again I hear objection made, and will say no more, as I feel assured that I will not be permitted to proceed without constant objections from the other side. I decline a courtesy so grudgingly tendered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will suspend.

Mr. RICE. I insist that the gentleman is not speaking with regard to the appropriation bill and to the paragraph that is now before the committee, and that he has no right to go on.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is again made, and the Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair presumed that the gentleman from Kentucky intended to connect his remarks in some way with the pending paragraph or motion so as to bring them in order.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] wishes to make no further observations I do not. All I wish is that my letter and his may be published side by side. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment, and request that both letters may be published.

Mr. BROWN. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say something pertinent to the paragraph under consideration. I find here a secretary of the District provided for at a salary of $2,000. I want to direct the attention of the committee to a few facts in connection with the District government, which perhaps may account for the liberality of the citizens and office-holders of this District toward members of Congress from the various States. There seems to be a system of dual, if not of triple, office-holding in this District. I find that the same gentleman, I believe—the Delegate from the District can correct me if I am in error—holds the office of secretary of this District and is also the assistant district attorney. We provide for him a salary of $2,000 as secretary of the District, while there is awarded to him out of the fees of the office of the district attorney $2,500, which would otherwise go into the Treasury of the United States, except for this dual system of holding office.

Again, I find that the Committee on Appropriations have struck out the proviso which was found necessary to be inserted in the appropriation bill of last year, which was in these words:

> That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid to any member of such board who shall hold any other Federal office.

While no one was there mentioned, it was well understood that that proviso affected but a single person, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury. I find, however, that we did not quite reach the object we had in view in inserting that proviso. That officer receives, I believe, under the provisions of this bill a salary of $4,500, and I find by the reports of the disbursements of the District that on the 20th of March, 1873—seventeen days after the passage of the bill containing the proviso which was intended to prevent any member of the board of public works or of the board of health of this District from holding two offices—there was paid to Mr. Mullett out of the treasury of this District, as chief and consulting engineer, $5,125. Thus, sir, so far as we were concerned, we were jumping out of the frying-pan into the fire. These are facts which I thought worth calling the attention of the committee to; they can go for what they are worth. I hope, before long, some general system of legislation will rid the people of this District of all such encroachments and such wrongs as I have alluded to.

I now offer the following, to come in at the end of the paragraph:

> Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid to any member of such board who shall hold any other office under the authority of the United States or the authority of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no objection to that proviso so far as I am concerned. We put it in the bill of last year because there was a case which required it.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; and there is one now.

Mr. GARFIELD. We did not know of any such case now.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he modify his amendment so as to exclude from its operation persons who hold offices which are merely honorary.

Mr. RANDALL. This gentleman to whom I have referred holds an office paid by fees out of the district attorney's office; and the gentleman will observe that those fees, if not paid to him, would go into the Treasury of the United States. I object to any man holding two offices.

Mr. HALE, of New York. But there may be officers provided for in this bill who hold purely honorary offices under the Federal Government, as, for instance, Regents of the Smithsonian Institution. I presume the gentleman would not wish to cut them off from receiving pay for performing the duties of other offices.

Mr. GARFIELD. The governor of the District is ex officio a regent of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from New York can offer any amendment to my amendment he pleases. I have so drawn it up as to reach the case I had in view.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I move then to add after the word "office" the words "to which salary, compensation, or perquisites are attached."

Mr. CHIPMAN. I desire to say a word in explanation. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is in error in supposing that there is such an office as assistant district attorney. There is no such office known to the law. The present incumbent of the office of secretary of the District is employed by the United States district attorney to assist him in the prosecution of United States cases and in defending suits where the United States are defendants. But the office itself of assistant district attorney, I believe, is not known to the law. He is employed, as any lawyer may be employed, by the United States district attorney, and is so paid.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. There is a statute specially requiring that a person appearing for the United States must in all cases be so appointed.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I have no doubt he is appointed.

Mr. RANDALL. Here is the statute.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I am aware that the persons who thus assist the United States attorneys are assistants. But what I mean to say is that there is no such office, for you cannot find in the Blue Book, nor does it exist, the office of assistant United States district attorney. It is true that he is a United States servant, and in that regard acts as an officer.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. He takes the oath of office.

Mr. CHIPMAN. That may be; I do not know how that is. If he is an officer, then the law of Congress would apply which forbids any person from holding two offices and receiving two salaries at the same time. But the truth is the United States district attorney ought to be permitted to select his own counsel and to make his own choice of persons to aid him in his office. If in making that choice he finds that the Government can be best served by his taking the secretary of this District, then I think he should have the right to select him. The secretary of the District gets as such $2,000 per annum; as assistant United States district attorney he gets $2,500; making in all $4,500. I think no gentleman on this floor will say that that is too much for a man who is capable of filling those two offices. Enough on that point.

As to the retiring member of the board, the present Supervising Architect of the Treasury, I have no knowledge of the statements made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] But I will venture this assertion, that if the present Supervising Architect has received from the board of public works any money it has been for services rendered. I do not know any architect in this country more capable of rendering valuable services.

Mr. RANDALL. We pay him sufficient to require his entire time for our service.

Mr. CHIPMAN. That is for you to determine. If you wish to compel him to remain in his office all the time and do only the work of the United States, then let it be so. But I want to say in defense of Mr. Mullett that he never charges for services he does not render; and I think as an architect he can do more in ten minutes than an average architect can in an hour. The amendment which seeks to reach the case of the secretary of the District goes further, and reaches the case of the treasurer of the board of public works.

Mr. RANDALL. That is obviated by the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. CHIPMAN. I wish to further amend the amendment by striking out the words "or the authority of the District of Columbia."

Mr. RANDALL. I cannot consent to that.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I think that what is permitted in regard to the Territories should also be permitted in regard to this District. In all the Territories, or nearly all of them, the Legislatures are permitted to supplement the salaries given by the United States to officers in the Territory wherever they think it proper to do so. I think nearly all the judiciary of the Territories have their salaries increased by the territorial Legislature. Now in this District, recognizing the responsibility of the treasurer of the board of public works, Colonel Magruder, who has disbursed over $11,000,000 without the loss of one penny, the District Legislature voted him an additional salary, I do not remember how much. While we have the right to express our own opinion, we want the right to say what we shall do with our own money. The Legislature has said that he should have more than the United States give him.

Mr. RANDALL. I beg the gentleman's pardon; you give part of our money as well.

Mr. CHIPMAN. We are not appropriating your money to pay this additional salary to the treasurer of the board of public works. If you propose to have a free government here, let it be free. We have but the shadow, the semblance of it now; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is trying to take even that from us. He has sent to the investigating committee a proposition to suspend the functions of the local Legislature, where is the only semblance of self-government in this District.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe that meets with the concurrence of the board of public works.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I think not.

Mr. RANDALL. I inferred so from what Governor Shepherd said before the committee. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL, as modified, was read, as follows:

Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid to any member of such board who shall hold any other office to which salary, compensation, or perquisites are attached under the authority of the United States or the authority of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I move to amend the amendment as modified by striking out the words "or the authority of the District of Columbia."

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Those words should not be stricken out. I understand that the Committee on Appropriations are satisfied with the amendment as modified.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Delegate from this District [Mr. CHIPMAN] has just suggested to me that the treasurer of the board of public works is paid by the District. I do not know whether that is a necessary arrangement at all. If the salary which we pay is not sufficient to require his whole time, and the District finds it necessary to supplement that with an addition, I do not know but we should permit them to do so. That is the only question that arises in my mind about the matter.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. If the District of Columbia proposes to employ an officer here to do any work for it and to pay him for such work, there can be no objection at all; but the District government should not by any means be authorized to pay to an officer of this Government appointed by the United States a salary in addition to that allowed to him by us. In other words, there should not be two salaries for such an officer, one provided by the United States and the other by the District of Columbia.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Let me remind the gentleman from Vermont that there has been appropriated by Congress and disbursed through this officer only about $3,500,000, while the District has appropriated about $11,000,000, which has been disbursed by him. Now, we think that the District, imposing upon this officer the duty of supervising the disbursement of so much money, for the proper disbursement of which he has to give a large bond, ought to have the right to pay him an additional salary for his services.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I have already said I have no objection to the District having any officer it may please, and paying him any salary that may be thought proper. But these double salaries should not be paid to any officer. The pay should be entirely from one authority or entirely from the other. If the salary allowed to this treasurer is not enough, let it be made larger here in Congress; if it is enough, then let some one else perform the duties, if the present incumbent is not willing to discharge them for that amount of pay. My objection is to this mixed system of payment, partly by Congress and partly by the District of Columbia; and I think this is a manifest opportunity to show that we desire a divorce in this matter; that officers of this class shall be paid in whole by the United States or entirely by the District.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CHIPMAN, it was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. RANDALL, it was agreed to.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I am very sorry to detain the committee even for a moment as it is passing rapidly over this bill; but I think it my duty not to permit the appropriation for this District government to go by without renewing my protest against this most unconstitutional, unwise, unrepublican condition of things which we have established in the District of Columbia.

In the enumeration of the legislative powers granted to Congress in the Constitution, one of the most conspicuous is that Congress shall "exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such district" "as may" "become the seat of the Government of the United States." If we have a right to delegate this power of exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever to this mongrel composite organization in the District, we have the right to delegate to a public board every other power of government with which we have been clothed by the Constitution of the United States. No distinction can be suggested between the power of legislating for the District of Columbia and the power of providing and maintaining a navy, the power of regulating commerce, or of borrowing money, or of laying and collecting taxes, or of making all laws necessary and proper to carry into execution the powers conferred upon Congress. All these powers stand on the same plane in the same instrument; and they are high legislative powers, incapable, by their very nature, of delegation.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That objection goes to the validity of all the legislation by the District authorities.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Yet we have undertaken in the last Congress to establish a board, partly elected by the people and partly appointed by the President, and under the practice, as it seems, partly paid from the national Treasury and partly paid by the people of the District of Columbia, to whom we have undertaken to depute the legislative power which provides for the descent and transmission of property, the punishment of crimes, the definition of even capital offenses, and the execution of persons convicted.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Has not the Supreme Court of the United States decided that we have the right to delegate municipal powers to this District?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. No, sir. It is true that minor municipal regulations, called in the language of the common law "by-laws," (the word "by" meaning local, as in "by-lane," those regulations which, according to the custom of free governments, cities and towns have been permitted to make for themselves, may be made by the corporation of the city of Washington.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. POLAND. I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] makes any proposition upon this subject, or that there is any question before us to be acted upon. I merely desire to say that I believe every writer in this country upon the Constitution has laid down an entirely different doctrine from that stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now let us have a vote.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I wish to say that I have investigated this question with great care, and the distinction to which I have alluded is the one which all the writers on the Constitution have taken. A "by-law" is a mere corporate law, a law which a corporation, municipal, territorial, local, or for business purposes, such as a bank or railroad company, may make for the government of its members or the persons coming within its jurisdiction. The practice of all Saxon communities from the earliest times (and it has come to us in this country from the English guild) has been to allow municipal authorities to make the minor regulations, such as those which govern the crossing of bridges or the management of streets. But no respectable writer on the Constitution has ever declared that the legislative power to establish the law on which the transmission and inheritance of property, on which indeed life or death may depend, is capable of delegation by the American Congress.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Can the gentleman from Massachusetts suggest any practical mode of exercising the power which, with reference to this District, is exclusively vested in Congress by the Constitution?

Mr. POLAND. I do not desire to argue the question, for it is my practice never to argue any question not before the House for action. I understand all the writers on the Constitution of the United States have laid this down, not in the limited terms stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts, that we had the same power to set up a government for the District of Columbia and delegate to them the same power we have in relation to these governments we establish in the Territories.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. That is a very different power in the Constitution.

Mr. POLAND. I was not speaking of the Constitution. I was speaking of the doctrine laid down by Judge Story, and every other writer on the Constitution of the country; and the doctrine they laid down is, that we have the same power in relation to authorizing a government or Legislature for this District that we have over the Territories of the United States.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now I hope the gentleman will allow us to go on with the bill.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I withdraw my amendment and ask for a vote on the motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us have a vote.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. The gentleman from Massachusetts moved to strike out the last word; and there is nothing to vote on, as that has been withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is exhausted. Does the gentleman insist on a vote?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I withdraw the amendment to strike out the last word, but ask for a vote on the motion to strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is a proposition to strike at the root of the local government here, and I hope the House will not agree to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts without giving us at least an opportunity for a word of explanation.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. My motion to strike out the last word was withdrawn, but the original motion to strike out the last paragraph, as I understand, was not withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. It was withdrawn by the gentleman from Kentucky, with the consent of the committee, some fifteen minutes ago.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Then I renew the motion to strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will detain the committee but for a moment. This question of the power of Congress I do not care to go into. It was examined carefully at the time this government was created. I had the honor of presenting a brief to the District Committee at the time. I remind the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. G. F. HOAR,] and I admit he is a much better lawyer than I am, that in the Federalist Mr. Madison takes the ground distinctly that the General Government could establish a local government here for its own purposes. I will say to him also that in the research I gave the question at the time I found only one authority against the power, and that was found in Tucker's Blackstone. He suggests there, in the way of query, the power of Congress to delegate this authority. But, sir, Congress has been exercising it in the District for over seventy years. I think the Supreme Court—and I believe I cited several cases, but my brief is obscure in my memory just now—I believe the Supreme Court decided in favor of the right of Congress to delegate the power which the District government here now possesses.

The thought, however, I wish to throw out distinctly is that this is not the time to strike down this District government; and I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will withdraw his motion. If this paragraph is stricken out it will deprive the officers of the District government of the salaries to which they are justly entitled under the law.

This whole question will come up before the House before the end of this session, and then it can be discussed fully and fairly. These salaries, too, are provided for the year beginning the 1st of July next, when Congress will have adjourned. We can, therefore, safely grant these appropriations. I do not, therefore, now go into a discussion of the merits of the District government, or of the motion which the gentleman makes.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 77.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Idaho:

For salaries of governor and superintendent of Indian affairs, chief justice and two associate judges, and secretary, $15,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to strike out "and superintendent of Indian affairs."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For legislative expenses, namely: Rent, storage, light and fuel, postage, and incidental expenses, $1,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$1,250," to correct a clerical error.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

War Department:

For compensation of the Secretary of War, $8,000; chief clerk, $2,500; two clerks, at $2,000 each; two clerks of class four, and additional to one clerk of class four as disbursing clerk, $200; five clerks of class three; three clerks of class two; five clerks of class one; one messenger; two assistant messengers; and one laborer; in all, $39,500.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I move to strike out that paragraph and to insert the following in lieu thereof.

The Clerk read as follows:

One chief clerk, at an annual compensation of $2,500; one disbursing clerk, at $1,200; one chief clerk of division, at $2,000; eight clerks of class four, at $1,800 each; six clerks of class three, at $1,600; six clerks of class two, at $1,400; fifteen clerks of class one, at $1,200; two messengers, at $1,000; eight assistant messengers, at $840; one laborer, at $720; seven watchmen for the northwest building, (executive,) at $720 each.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the aggregate of that?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I desire to make a brief explanation to the committee. In the Forty-second Congress, under a resolution of the House introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, of which I have the honor to be chairman, was instructed to investigate that Department and to make certain inquiries. The committee proceeded to discharge that duty and made a report toward the close of last session. The committee were of opinion that there should be a reorganization of the clerical force, by which at least one hundred and fifty clerks might be dispensed with, saving in that Department of the Government about $165,000. The report being made at the close of the last session of the Forty-second Congress there was not time to mature the bill and present it. At the commencement of this present session of Congress, under the direction of the committee, I reported a bill for the reorganization of the War Department, which has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and by them considered favorably, and also to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and by them, as I am informed, also considered favorably.

The bill I have introduced reduces the number of clerks and messengers in the War Department one hundred and ninety-four and the expenses $178,600. I desire to state to the committee that under the different laws authorizing the detail of enlisted men for employment in the War Department four hundred of the men in this Department are from the Army. The bill to which I have referred repeals all laws by which the Secretary of War has the right to detail enlisted men from the Army, makes it the duty of the Secretary to place such enlisted men as are now employed in the Department on the civil list, and prohibits the appointment of further clerks in that Department.

The number of clerks now in the War Department is nine hundred and forty-two—nearly one thousand men. The bill proposes that the number shall be seven hundred and sixty-eight, making a saving of $178,600.

I desire to state that the object of introducing this amendment—and I propose to follow it with other amendments seriatim to every paragraph of the bill relating to the War Department—is to incorporate in the appropriation bill the provisions of the bill I have referred to. I hope the committee will sustain me in the first amendment I have offered, which will reduce the expenses $65,000. I will offer them seriatim to every paragraph. And if the committee does not want to save that money by reducing the number of clerks, it will vote those amendments down.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the aggregate of appropriation proposed by the gentleman's substitute?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. The amount of expense last year for the clerks of the War Department, including the whole force, was $1,119,300.74. The amount proposed by the bill I have introduced is $962,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. But this paragraph in the appropriation bill which the gentleman proposes to amend makes an appropriation of $39,500. What will be the amount under the substitute which the gentleman has offered?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. About $65,000. I wish to state here that the Committee on Appropriations have made no provision for enlisted men taking the position of civil clerks appointed under the law. The appropriation bill as it stands provides $456,940 for the clerical force; but really the expenditure under the bill is $1,105,908.

Mr. RANDALL. From what fund are the enlisted men paid?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. They are paid from four or five different funds. The general-service pay per month of enlisted men is as follows: For the common soldiers, pay proper, $13; extra-duty pay, $12; commutation of rations, $30; commutation of quarters, $18; fuel, $9; clothing, $6.50; total per month, $88.50; per annum, $1,062. There are about forty-five sergeants employed in the Department who have been detailed from the Army; their pay is $1,134. There are three hundred and sixty-six hospital stewards, whose pay is $1,266 per annum. They are detailed under an act passed in 1868, authorizing the detail of enlisted men as hospital stewards, or authorizing the Secretary of War to enlist for that purpose a large proportion of these hospital stewards. They were simply enlisted in the Army for clerks, and they receive $66 more than first-class clerks. Then there are engineer soldiers, whose salary is $1,314. The total for these enlisted men is about $500,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GUNCKEL rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I desire to make some further statements.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a very interesting subject, and I move that the gentleman have five minutes further

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I desire to state that when the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department called for a list of all these clerks, they gave us a return from the Quartermaster-General's Department, showing one hundred and forty-six clerks there, and it is upon that basis that the bill is framed. I find by the report of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service that they have got thirty-three more, making one hundred and seventy-six in all.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest to my colleague that he should submit all his amendments, covering all the paragraphs relating to the War Department, so that we may consider them all together.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I desire further to state that there appear to be quite a number of enlisted men detailed from the Army as clerks to the War Department who are not presented in any of these reports. There are five contract physicians at $1,800 each, one at $1,500, and three at $1,200, paid out of the Army appropriations; one engineer at $1,500, one engraver at $1,200, one carpenter at $1,200, one fireman at $600, one laborer at $600—these being paid out of the appropriation for the Medical Department; one clerk at $1,800, under the act for supplying trusses, approved May 28, 1872. This makes $13,800 more than the expenses shown by the report, which makes the saving, if my amendments be adopted, of $178,000 in one Department alone.

My reason for offering the amendments separately to each paragraph is because the bill is under the charge of the different committees I have mentioned. I will state further that the bill which I have introduced, and to which I have referred, provides expressly—

That it shall be unlawful to allow or pay to any of the persons designated in this act any additional compensation from any source, or to retain, detail, or employ in any branch of the War Department, except the Signal Office, any persons other than those herein authorized.

So that if this bill is passed it confines the Department to the actual number of clerks provided by the appropriation bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. I beg leave to say to the gentleman from Indiana that the bill he has introduced was before the Committee on Civil Service Reform this morning and that we unanimously adopted it, but striking out all the clerks of class five. We did this to make it correspond with the action of the committee in regard to the Treasury Department. We thus in reality by our action save five to ten thousand dollars in addition to the $178,000 of which the gentleman has spoken.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. Yes; and I have made my amendment correspond with your bill striking out the fifth-class clerks and all increase of salary.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will state further that in this bill the messengers are put at $840. We put them all as laborers at $730, as in our bill reorganizing the Treasury Department, so that there is a still further reduction there.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I desire to state to the committee that if this amendment be adopted I have corresponding amendments to offer to every paragraph of the bill relating to the War Department.

Mr. DONNAN. I suggest to the gentleman that he offer his entire bill as a substitute for these paragraphs of the bill which relate to the War Department. That will simplify the action of the committee.

Mr. GUNCKEL. The bill of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILLIAMS] was referred several days ago to the Committee on Military Affairs, and by that committee to a sub-committee, of which I happened to be a member. I have given a great deal of time to the investigation of this matter, taking item by item and going to the Bureaus of the Department, and I think it is a measure that ought to be approved. My friend has given to it a great deal of time and attention, and has succeeded in a remarkable manner in making a great reduction of the force, a reduction of nearly two hundred clerks and of nearly $200,000, adapting it to meet the views entirely of the War Department, and of every Bureau in it. That is somewhat remarkable.

I fear that the Committee on Appropriations have not very well considered the details of their bill. We are informed by communications from the Secretary of War and the heads of the several Bureaus that they cannot possibly get along with the provision made in this bill. It would embarrass and cripple them so that they could not conduct their business. As I said before, the gentleman from Indiana has arranged his bill so that it is actually less in amount than that of the Committee on Appropriations, and yet it entirely meets the views of the Secretary of War, and will enable the Department to go right along with their business in every way. His bill not only meets the views and concurrence of the Committee on Military Affairs, but I am glad to learn that it also meets the views of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service. I hope, therefore, that the entire bill of the gentleman from Indiana will be ingrafted in this bill.

Before I take my seat I beg to call the attention of the committee to section 4 of the bill of the gentleman from Indiana, to which I hope there will be no objection. It has been the habit of the War Department to take enlisted men from the Army, and these number four or five hundred now, and put them in the different Bureaus of the War Department, and use them as clerks at $1,200 and $1,400 a year. It cuts that off entirely and brings every man employed in the War Department into the civil service, so that we may know the number of clerks, the pay they are receiving, and what is appropriated for that purpose. That is as it ought to be. That section of the bill of the gentleman from Indiana is as follows:

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful to allow or pay to any of the persons designated in this act any additional compensation from any source, or to retain, detail, or employ in any branch of the War Department, except the Signal Office, any persons other than those herein authorized, the chiefs of the several Bureaus, and such commissioned officers as the Secretary of War may from time to time assign to special duties; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to reduce the number of temporary clerks and others authorized by this act as fast as the wants of the public service will permit.

That is a good provision, and I hope it will be adopted. In conclusion, I beg simply to call the attention of the committee again to the fact that the bill of the gentleman reduces the number of employés two hundred, and makes a reduction in the appropriation of about $200,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hardly see why my colleague should say that the Committee on Appropriations have not considered this bill carefully. They are not capable of considering any bill carefully if they have not done it in this case.

Mr. GUNCKEL. The gentleman will permit me to say that he told me so himself, and said that if the Committee on Military Affairs would agree to this bill of the gentleman from Indiana he would be willing that it should be incorporated in this bill. So I had pretty high authority for what I said.

Mr. GARFIELD. My colleague made the remark, as I understood him, about the whole bill.

Mr. GUNCKEL. O, no; I said that portion of it relating to the War Department. I was not speaking of the whole bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. Concerning a portion of the appropriations for the War Department my colleague is entirely right. The Committee on Appropriations could not wait until the Committee on Military Affairs had perfected their bill, and so they cut down the appropriations by a sort of dead-level gauge, so that we should certainly get a reduction in this bill, their object being to compel a consideration of the question of reducing the force in the War Department. They were waiting for the Committee on Military Affairs to perfect a bill to which that committee were giving their attention more thoroughly than our committee had time to do, and we were very glad to have their assistance.

I know of no reason why their bill should not be accepted in place of all the items in this bill in relation to the War Department. There is one matter upon which the Committee on Appropriations have not entered at all, and that is the number of enlisted men employed in what is called general service, and put upon clerical duty.

That is a bad arrangement, and ought to be broken up. The Committee on Appropriations have never had anything to do with it; no special appropriation is made for that purpose. These clerks are paid, I do not know out of what fund; perhaps out of the general fund for the support of the Army. I suppose they are paid out of the funds given by the bill for the support of the Army. It is an exceedingly bad arrangement to allow any Secretary in any Department to employ any number of clerks that do not come under review by Congress. And I am exceedingly glad that the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service have enabled us to get at that evil and strike it down.

One mistake has evidently been made in the amendment which has been offered. It proposes to provide for "two messengers, $1,000 each." Now, for the last two years we have allowed no messenger in any Department of the Government more than $840.

Mr. KELLOGG. In the bill which we agreed upon to-day we have made the messengers of all the Departments to correspond with the messengers of the Treasury Department.

Mr. GARFIELD. That correction should be made. Then all that is needed is to say "so many clerks of class four, so many clerks of class three," &c., and the law fixes the amount each clerk is to receive. And then at the end of the paragraph should be put the aggregate amount the paragraph calls for. I ask consent that all the paragraphs relating to the War Department should be treated as one paragraph or section, and the substitute prepared by the Committee on Civil Service Reform be treated as one amendment.

Mr. DONNAN. I will ask the attention of the committee for a moment only to the paragraph in relation to the Quartermaster-General. I find in the letter of the Secretary of War a report of the Quartermaster-General, showing that, in addition to the one hundred and forty-six clerks in his Department, there are thirty-two clerks known as Quartermaster's clerks, none of whom receive less than $100 a month, and some of them receive as high as $300 a month. And yet all this list of thirty-two clerks are employed without any distinct supervision of law. I sent a telegram yesterday afternoon to the Quartermaster-General, asking under what authority of law these additional clerks were employed. I received in answer that which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 22, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to report, in reply to your telegram of this afternoon, that the clerks referred to are employed by the officers of the Quartermaster's Department on duty in this city under the general authority of the appropriation acts for many years past. (See that of March 3, 1873, 17 Statutes, chapter 299, page 544; "Clerks to Quartermaster.")

They are not a part of the clerical organization of the Quartermaster-General's Office, and are not his clerks.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. C. MEIGS,
Quartermaster-General, U. S. A.

Hon. W. G. DONNAN,
House of Representatives.

Mr. DONNAN. I understand that a proposed amendment cuts off all these additional clerks.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILLIAMS] to accept a modification of his amendment which I have suggested to him.

The amendment, as modified, was read, as follows:

One chief clerk, at an annual compensation of $2,500; one disbursing clerk, at $2,000; one chief clerk of division, at $2,000; eight clerks of class four; six clerks of class three; six clerks of class two; fifteen clerks of class one; two messengers; eight assistant messengers; one laborer, at $720; three watchmen for northwest building, (executive,) at $720 each.

Mr. KELLOGG. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] why not call all these assistant laborers messengers? That is really their condition and that is their pay. And that will correspond with the bill which our committee agreed upon to-day.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I will modify my amendment as suggested.

The amendment, as modified, was then adopted.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For the purpose of examining the rebel archives and having copies furnished for the Government, $6,000.

Mr. SENER. I move to strike out the paragraph last read, for the purpose of inquiring of the gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr. GARFIELD] what is the necessity for this appropriation? It seems to be for information which, if needed, should be furnished by some clerk or officer already employed. If so, then I do not see the necessity for this appropriation.

Mr. GARFIELD. The archives of the rebel government have been of very great value in the examination of the claims before the British and American mixed claims commission, a very large share of which were presented by subjects of Great Britain residing South, and who presented their claims against our Government under the treaty of Washington. To test their relation to the government, whether they had taken any part in the rebellion, the rebel archives have been consulted from day to day, doubtless saving the Government hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of dollars. That work is still going on. It is also of service in relation to many questions before the southern claims commission.

Mr. SENER. Who makes this examination?

Mr. GARFIELD. The War Department.

Mr. SENER. By clerks already employed?

Mr. GARFIELD. O, yes.

Mr. SENER. Then why this appropriation?

Mr. GARFIELD. They must have an additional force for this special purpose. This work is now going on.

Mr. KELLOGG. There is a provision in the bill agreed to by our committee such as was asked for by the War Department, for one clerk of class three, one clerk of class two, and three clerks of class one.

Mr. GARFIELD. That covers the same case, but I think it best to insert a lumped sum.

Mr. SENER. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I renew the amendment. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] whether there has not been an appropriation for this purpose from year to year since the war? I would like to know what has been the amount of the appropriation each year heretofore. Last year, I believe, the appropriation was much larger than now.

Mr. GARFIELD. In the first place we appropriated for purchasing these archives a large sum of money; $75,000 was the last appropriation made for purchasing these archives.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Can the gentleman give us the history of that purchase? I would like to hear something about where these archives came from.

Mr. GARFIELD. I supposed the gentleman was well aware where they came from. They were purchased from a general of the southern confederacy, the price being $75,000.

Mr. SENER. The gentleman is mistaken in saying he was a confederate general.

Mr. GARFIELD. I supposed he was. At any rate it was a purchase which was well worth making by the Government. The use these records have already served before the southern claims commission and the mixed claims commission has more than paid for the outlay. They are every day proving valuable for the same purposes.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. If these archives are so valuable, would it not be more economical to have them published?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not a question of publication. They are being examined day by day. For instance, a claim comes up from a British subject who resided in the South during the war. He claims to have been injured to the amount of $100,000. The claims commission sends for the information which these archives may furnish as to the conduct of that man during the war. The clerks in charge run through all these records—which they are gradually getting indexed—to find that man's name, and whether he had any official relation to the confederate government. By their examination they throw what light they can upon the case; and if it be proved that he was engaged in the war, he has no right as a British subject to be awarded anything by the claims commission. There were claims by British subjects to the amount, I think, of $35,000,000, of which up to the present time only $2,500,000 have been allowed; and probably not more than $5,000,000 in all will be allowed when the work shall have been completed. It will thus be seen that very considerable expense would be entailed upon the Government of the United States if the indexing and overhauling of these rebel archives should not be kept up. It is true that some uncomfortable letters have appeared now and then. One of them perhaps saved us from having a certain gentleman as Chief Justice; but for that reason we ought to prize these records none the less.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I would like the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to give, if he can, the name of the confederate general from whom these records were bought. I want it for a purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suppose the gentleman from Georgia is well acquainted with it. I do not care to rake up the history of the past.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I would like to have the name.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia withdraw his amendment?

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLOGG. By consent of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILLIAMS] I move to strike from the bill the several paragraphs relating to the War Department, and offer as a substitute a bill which was unanimously agreed to to-day by the Committee on the Civil Service Reform.

The CHAIRMAN. Strictly speaking the Chair cannot entertain a motion to strike out any paragraph before it has been read; but if there be no objection all the paragraphs relating to the War Department down to line 1041 will be considered as read, and the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] will be regarded as pending as a substitute.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest that these paragraphs be passed over informally, and meanwhile this amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut can be printed in connection with the paragraphs for which it is proposed as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that arrangement will be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I consent if it embraces the first paragraph.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it the understanding that all paragraphs relating to the War Department shall be passed over, and be taken up at the next session of the Committee of the Whole after the session of this evening? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the whole of these amendments be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask also that the table appended to the original bill be printed immediately after the amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman from Connecticut to make the footings under the head of each Bureau.

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

[The paragraphs for which Mr. KELLOGG's amendment is offered as a substitute are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

For compensation of the Secretary of War, $8,000; chief clerk, $2,500; two clerks, at $2,000 each; two clerks of class four, and additional to one clerk of class four as disbursing clerk, $200; five clerks of class three; three clerks of class two; five clerks of class one; one messenger; two assistant messengers; and one laborer; in all, $39,500.

For contingent expenses of his office, $12,000.

For the purpose of examining the rebel archives and having copies furnished for the Government, $6,000.

Office of the Adjutant-General:

For chief clerk, $2,000; four clerks of class four; eight clerks of class three; forty clerks of class two; forty clerks of class one; two messengers; one assistant messenger; and one fireman; in all, $129,120.

For postage on official matter of the War Department and its Bureaus, $120,000.

For contingent expenses, $8,000.

Office of the Quartermaster-General:

For chief clerk, $2,000; three clerks of class four; seven clerks of class three; fifteen clerks of class two; fifty clerks of class one; thirty copyists, at $900 each; superintendent of the building, $200; one messenger; two assistant messengers; and six laborers; in all, $133,400.

For contingent expenses, $7,000.

Office of the Paymaster-General:

For chief clerk, $2,000; three clerks of class four; seven clerks of class three; eighteen clerks of class two; ten clerks of class one; and two messengers; in all, $57,480.

For contingent expenses, $4,000.

Office of the Commissary-General:

For chief clerk, $2,000; one clerk of class three; six clerks of class two; twelve clerks of class one; one messenger; and two laborers; in all, $28,680.

For contingent expenses, namely: office-rent, repairs, and miscellaneous items, $5,000.

Office of the Surgeon-General:

For chief clerk, $2,000; one clerk of class three; two clerks of class two; six clerks of class one; one messenger; and one laborer; in all, $15,160.

For contingent expenses, blank books, stationery, binding, rent, fuel, and including rent of Surgeon-General's office and Army Medical Museum, $7,000.

Office of Chief Engineer:

For chief clerk, $2,000; three clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; four clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; one messenger; and one laborer; in all, $25,760.

For contingent expenses, namely: for stationery, office furniture, miscellaneous and incidental expenses, including professional books, maps, and two daily Washington newspapers, $3,000.

Office of the Chief of Ordnance:

For chief clerk, $2,000; two clerks of class four; two clerks of class three; three clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; and one messenger; in all, $18,640.

For contingent expenses, namely: stationery, envelopes, wrapping-paper, for sending blanks to the arsenals, forts, permanent batteries, and troops in the field, telegrams, express charges, and incidentals of a similar nature, furniture, matting, carpets, oil-cloth, professional books for Ordnance Department library, pamphlets and newspapers, $2,000.

Office of Military Justice:

For one chief clerk, at $2,000; one clerk of class three; one clerk of class one; in all, $4,800.

For contingent expenses, $500.

Signal Office:

For two clerks of class two, $2,800.

Office of the Inspector-General:

For one clerk of class three, $1,600.

The following is the substitute proposed by Mr. KELLOGG, including the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana, already adopted:

That on and after the 1st day of July, 1874, there may be employed in the War Department and its several branches or Bureaus, the following persons, or so many of them as may at any time be found necessary for the transaction of public business:

In the office of the Secretary of War:

One chief clerk, at an annual compensation of $2,500; one disbursing clerk, at $2,000; two chief clerks of divisions, at $2,000; seven clerks of class four, six clerks of class three, six clerks of class two, fifteen clerks of class one; two messengers, at $840 each; nine laborers, at $720; seven watchmen for northwest building, (executive,) at $720 each; in all $70,300.

For contingent expenses of his office, $12,000.

For the purpose of examining the rebel archives and having copies furnished for the Government, $6,000.

In the office of the Adjutant-General:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; nine clerks of class four, fifteen clerks of class three, twenty-five clerks of class two, one hundred clerks of class one, three temporary clerks of class four, six temporary clerks of class three, twenty temporary clerks of class two, sixty temporary clerks of class one; ten messengers, at $840; in all, $320,600.

For postage on official matter of the War Department and its Bureaus, $120,000.

For contingent expenses, $8,000.

In the office of the Inspector-General:

One clerk of class four; one messenger, at $840; in all $2,640.

In the office of the Quartermaster-General:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; eight clerks of class four, ten clerks of class three, twenty-four clerks of class two, forty clerks of class one; eighteen copyists, at $900; one messenger, at $840; eight laborers, at $720; one engineer, at $800; one fireman, at $720; and five watchmen, at $720 each; six temporary clerks of class two, ten temporary clerks of class one; ten temporary copyists, at $900; in all, $171,520.

For contingent expenses, $7,000.

In the office of the Paymaster-General:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; seven clerks of class four, eight clerks of class three, fifteen clerks of class two, thirteen clerks of class one; one messenger, at $840; four watchmen, at $720; five laborers, at $720; two temporary clerks of class two, three temporary clerks of class one; in all, $77,720.

For contingent expenses, $4,000.

In the office of the Commissary-General:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; two clerks of class four, four clerks of class three, five clerks of class two, twelve clerks of class one; one messenger, at $840; three laborers, at $720; two watchmen, at $720; in all, $37,840.

For contingent expenses, namely: office-rent, repairs, and miscellaneous items, $7,000.

In the office of the Surgeon-General:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; five clerks of class four, three clerks of class three, eight clerks of class two, one hundred and fifteen clerks of class one, (twenty of whom shall be temporary;) one librarian, at $1,600; one chemist, at $1,800; one anatomist at the Army Medical Museum, at $1,600; one engineer in division of records and museum, at $1,400; one messenger, at $840; twenty-two watchmen and laborers, (six temporary,) at $720 each; in all, $188,080.

For contingent expenses, blank books, stationery, binding, rent, fuel, and including rent of Surgeon-General's office and Army Medical Museum, $7,000.

In the office of the Chief Engineer:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; five clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; four clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; one messenger, at $840; three laborers, at $720 each; in all, $30,080.

For contingent expenses, namely: for stationery, office furniture, miscellaneous and incidental expenses, including professional books, maps, and two daily Washington newspapers, $3,000.

In the office of the Chief of Ordnance:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; three clerks of class four; three clerks of class three; three clerks of class two; eight clerks of class one; one messenger, at $840; one laborer, at $720; in all, $27,560.

For contingent expenses, namely: stationery, envelopes, wrapping-paper, for sending blanks to the arsenals, forts, permanent batteries, and troops in the field, telegrams, express charges, and incidentals of a similar nature, furniture, matting, carpets, oil-cloth, professional books for Ordnance Department library, pamphlets, and newspapers, $2,000.

In the office of Military Justice:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; one clerk of class four; one clerk of class three; two clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; one messenger, at $840; in all, $13,840.

For contingent expenses, $500.

In the Signal Office:

Two clerks of class four; one messenger, at $840; in all, $4,440.

That the persons employed in any branch of the War Department on the 30th day of June, 1874, may be appointed or promoted under the provisions of this act, subject only to such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe; and in all such promotions and appointments under the provisions of this act it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to give the preference to such of the enlisted men as are now employed as clerks in said several departments upon the recommendation of the heads of the several Bureaus as to their qualifications to discharge with efficiency the duties thereof.

That it is further made the duty of the Secretary of War, when the reduction of clerks now employed shall take effect under the provisions of this act, to retain, as far as possible, such of the enlisted men as are now employed in the several Bureaus of said Department, where the same can be done with a due regard to the dispatch of public business. And it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of War to place such enlisted men so retained upon the civil list, so as to entitle them to promotion under the civil-service regulations.

That it shall be unlawful to allow or pay, to any of the persons designated in this act, any additional compensation from any source, or to retain, detail, or employ in any branch of the War Department, except the Signal Office, any persons other than those herein authorized, the chiefs of the several Bureaus, and such commissioned officers as the Secretary of War may from time to time assign to special duties; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to reduce the number of temporary clerks and others authorized by this act as fast as the wants of the public service will permit.]

Table of proposed reductions.

Office, &c.	Present.		Proposed.		Amount as amended by Civil Service Committee.
	Persons.	Amount.	Persons.	Amount.
Secretary's Office	50	$67,643 00	56	$72,780 00	$70,300 00
Archives Office	5	6,000 00	5	6,600 00	6,660 00
Adjutant-General's Office	342	384,637 00	249	321,400 00	320,600 00
Inspector-General's Office	2	2,494 00	2	2,640 00	2,640 00
Quartermaster-General's Office	146	172,000 00	143	172,320 00	171,520 00
Paymaster-General's Office	64	82,523 00	59	78,840 00	77,720 00
Commissary-General's Office	31	37,762 00	30	38,520 00	37,840 00
Surgeon-General's Office	238	279,652 94	159	190,040 00	188,080 00
Engineer Office	20	27,640 80	22	31,800 00	30,800 00
Ordnance Office	22	29,285 00	20	28,240 00	27,560 00
Office of Military Justice	10	11,863 00	10	14,200 00	13,840 00
Signal-Service Office	3	4,800 00	3	4,800 00	4,440 00
Total	942	1,106,300 74	758	962,180 00	951,940 00
Medical attendance for enlisted men	....	13,000 00	....	.....	.....
	942	1,119,300 74	....	.....	.....
	758	962,180 00	....	.....	.....
Immediate reduction	184	157,227 74	....	.....	167,360 74
Temporary	146	179,000 00	....	.....	.....

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

For compensation of the Secretary of the Navy, $8,000; for compensation of the chief clerk of the Navy Department, at $2,200, and, additional to chief clerk, $300, to continue while there is no Assistant Secretary and no longer; one disbursing clerk, at $2,000; four clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; two clerks of class two; three clerks of class one; two messengers; and two laborers; in all, $35,620.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the words "one disbursing clerk at $2,000."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should be glad to have the ear of the gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations. We have in the other Departments, especially in the Treasury Department, allowed the disbursing clerk simply an addition of $200. We have in the Treasury Department allowed the chief clerk an addition only of $200 to his salary as chief clerk for acting as disbursing officer. How does it occur, then, in the Navy Department we give this disbursing officer a salary of $2,000, when we allow elsewhere only an increase of $200 for the responsibility of acting as disbursing clerk? We do that in the Treasury Department. We provide here, however, that for the Navy Department there shall be a disbursing clerk with a salary of $2,000 a year, and for the duties of that position alone.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, this, instead of being an abuse, is really a limitation which does not apply in other Departments. The Navy Department has always been run in a different fashion, so far as clerical force goes, from any other Department, and in a way which I think will be satisfactory to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] with his economical views. If he will investigate it he will find it has not been extended and ramified year after year for the purpose of building up other Bureaus and divisions. Formerly single clerks did the service in some of the other Departments; indeed in all of them with reference to disbursing appropriations, but the duties have been divided up now under the head of one Bureau and another. In the Navy Department for years it has all been done, however, by one clerk and has never been extended beyond one. And I will tell the gentleman that this clerk in the Navy Department does what in other Departments we appropriate for is done by three or five or six or a dozen clerks, because that is the system upon which the Navy Department is run.

As a further illustration or explanation in the line of my remarks, I will tell the gentleman from Indiana what I have no doubt he will be glad to hear, and that is that the whole clerical force of the entire Navy Department to-day is not so large as it was before the war, twelve years ago. I do not know of a change which has taken place in a single clerkship in the Navy Department since I have been in Congress. They keep the old clerks in. It is not run by patronage, but solely to keep up the business with the same old force. During the period of war the force had to be enlarged, as everybody will admit; but since the war was ended it did what no other Department did; it cut down its force, so that to-day they have not got so many clerks as they had before the war. It is really a remarkable exhibition of economical running of clerical force in the Navy Department. I wish the gentleman from Indiana, as an honest, faithful economist, would do what I have done; go himself and look into the clerical force of the Navy Department and compare it with some of the other Departments. It would do him good.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct a mistake I fell into in reference to the disbursing officer in the Treasury Department. I find there are clerks employed in the Treasury Department whose entire duty it is to pay the clerical force. In the War Department it is otherwise. It will be remembered by the committee that a few years ago the chief clerk of the War Department, Mr. Potts, was allowed a compensation of $200 additional for performing the duties of disbursing clerk.

Now, we all know that the Navy Department before the war was one of the most extravagant Departments of the Government, and it has been a source of general congratulation I think that since the war there has been a thorough effort at economy in that Department. So I understand; and I am desirous of saying that the War Department and the Navy Department are the two Departments of the Government where the force employed is not apparently beyond what the exigencies of the service require. No one can pass through those Departments without being struck with the diligence with which the duties of those employed in them are performed.

Still, in the War Department, which makes much heavier disbursements than the Navy Department, it is sufficient to give a fourth-class clerk $200 additional pay for acting as disbursing clerk. Why, then, in the Navy Department should there be employed a clerk exclusively as disbursing clerk with a salary of $2,000?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Does the gentleman not see that while we give the Navy Department a disbursing clerk at $2,000, we do not give them the fourth-class clerk that the War Department has? Now, has the gentleman any idea about the difference between the clerical force in the Navy Department and in the War Department? While the clerical force in the Navy Department, including all the clerks in all the Department and all its Bureaus, amounts to less than seventy clerks, not so many as in several Bureaus and divisions of the War Department, there are in the War Department and its different Bureaus, I think, one thousand and one clerks and civil employés of all kinds employed. The Navy Department has a disbursing clerk who is not a fourth-class clerk. There would be no difference between this and our giving the Navy Department a fourth-class clerk with $200 additional as disbursing clerk.

Mr. HOLMAN. During the war, at the instance of the Secretary of War, we paid by a special act an additional compensation of $200 to the clerk who performed the duties of disbursing clerk, having all the increased duties incident to a state of war. Now, if during the war $200 was considered a sufficient compensation for the discharge of these duties, why should it be proposed here to pay a gentleman in the Navy Department $2,000 for acting as disbursing clerk alone? I know that my friend from Maine is wrong.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do not know in the case referred to by the gentleman from Indiana what Mr. Potts had to do. I do not know what the system in the War Department was. But I think it is plain that he could not have done all the duties of a disbursing clerk in a time of war for $200. There may have been some extra responsibility put upon him which that paid for. But this man to whom we give the $2,000 does the whole. He has nobody under him. He has all the responsibility, keeps all the accounts, and pays all the money. Now, I venture to say that $200 never paid any man in the War Department for doing all of that. It may have been given to him on account of special responsibilities; but I am sure, and I speak with confidence, that he never did the work for that. The gentleman himself must see that his proposition overstates itself.

Mr. HOLMAN. I state what the records of the House show, and I remember it distinctly, because I thought it was one of the few salaries which merited an increase; one of the few increases of salaries I ever supported. I reported the bill myself paying him an additional $200 for the reason that the law provided that the disbursing clerk should be a fourth-class clerk, and in consequence of that the chief clerk could not receive this compensation, although he gave the bond and performed all the duties. But here is a very small Department of the Government, and you set apart a single clerk at $2,000 to act as disbursing officer and pay the clerks in that Department.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I will make this agreement with my friend: Let him go to the Department and examine what that clerk is doing, and then if he is not satisfied that he is worth all that compensation I will endeavor to meet the gentleman's views.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

For compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, $8,000; Assistant Secretary, $3,500; chief clerk; ten clerks of class four, eight of whom may be paid $200 additional if the Secretary of the Interior deem it necessary and proper; six clerks of class three; six clerks of class two; six clerks of class one; three copyists; three messengers; two assistant messengers; and six laborers in his office; in all, $69,280.

Mr. SENER. I notice that in the paragraph which has just been read there is no salary provided for the chief clerk. The paragraph simply reads "chief clerk," and there is no salary named for the office. I think the chief clerk's salary ought to be fixed by the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is a misprint here. The amount of $2,500 should have been inserted.

Mr. SENER. I move to amend the paragraph by inserting that amount.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The paragraph provides that eight of the clerks of class four may be paid each $200 additional if the Secretary of the Interior deems it necessary and proper. I do not see why this should be left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior; and I will move to strike that out unless some necessity can be shown for it.

Mr. GARFIELD. It has stood in that way in the law for a number of years. The Secretary cannot tell certainly how many division clerks he may need. This gives him the discretion to use eight of them at least as division clerks, and pay them $200 additional to their pay as fourth-class clerks. If he does not use the whole number so much is saved to the Treasury. He cannot use more than eight. I think the provision is a wise one.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I do not think it wise to leave these salaries to the discretion of the Secretary, with power to give those extra amounts to any favorite clerks to whom he may see fit to pay.

Mr. GARFIELD. Thus far the system has worked well, and I think the gentleman will consent to let it pass.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of packing and distributing official documents, including salary of superintendent, $5,000.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I move to amend that paragraph by striking out "$5,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$7,000."

That amendment does not increase any salaries, but it simply leaves the appropriation as it was last year. This appropriation covers items like these: there is paid out of it the superintendent of the document-room, and one clerk, and one messenger, and one packer, and then there is also to be paid out of this fund the money expended for paper, and twine, and boxes, which amounts to $1,800; so that the appropriation of $7,000 will not quite cover the amount expended. The superintendent of the document-room of this Department distributes all the pamphlet editions of the laws that are published; eleven thousand copies to the States and Territories, twenty-two to each Senator and Member, and two thousand copies of bound volumes of the Statutes at Large, besides four hundred sets of other documents published by authority of Congress to so many schools, colleges, and libraries.

The superintendent of the document-room of this Department also compiles the Biennial Register, or Blue-Book, so that if you cut down the appropriation to $5,000, you will have to bring in a deficiency bill, or to make another appropriation in another way. I simply ask that the appropriation shall be the same as last year, because the persons employed in this office cannot otherwise be compensated out of this appropriation and do the work required of them. I believe the Committee on Appropriations have examined this subject, and are willing that this amendment shall be adopted.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I looked into this matter myself at the request of the Committee on Appropriations, and I am satisfied that the amendment is correct.

Mr. HOLMAN. I find that in the appropriation bill passed the year before the increase of salary bill was passed the appropriation for these items was only $5,000. That was the year which terminated on the 30th of June, 1873. I do not, for my own part, refer to the appropriation bill corresponding with this passed during the last Congress, but I find that the appropriation heretofore made was $5,000. I hold the law of 1873 in my hand, showing that that was the appropriation then.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. But there was not included then an appropriation for a clerk and a messenger who are now covered by this appropriation. I would also say that in consequence of the increase in the number of members of Congress the labors in this office have been increased.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, how?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. In the distribution of the statutes to members of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, not at all.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. On the contrary, the copies of the statutes that we receive come from the document-rooms of the Capitol, and there is no increase in the labors of this office. My friend will find that the increase in the number of members of Congress does not affect this office at all; and I think that an appropriation the same as that made in 1873 is certainly sufficient.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. There are twenty-two copies of the statutes sent to each Senator and Representative from this office.

Mr. HOLMAN. How many?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Twenty-two; and, of course, the increase in the number of members of Congress imposes additional duties on these officers.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend must know that they are received from our document-room.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Those that are bound?

Mr. HOLMAN. Members of Congress do not receive the bound edition of the statutes; they never have received them. We receive simply the statutes that we publish and that go into our document-room.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I am sure the gentleman from Indiana would not be parsimonious in a matter of this kind, and I would not ask for an increase of the appropriation, even of $2,000, if I was not satisfied from an investigation I have made on the subject of the amount actually necessary to expend in this office that the appropriation which I ask is necessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. The appropriation for this purpose in former years has been $5,000, and there has never been any deficiency, nor is there any increase of duties.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I understand that heretofore some of these expenses have been paid out of another appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, well, they may do the same thing again.

Mr. DONNAN. I am satisfied that this officer ought to have more or less, I do not know which. If he compiles the Blue-Book he does not devote enough attention to it to make it correct and reliable.

Mr. FORT. I understand that the Blue-Book is two years behind time.

The question was taken on Mr. ALBRIGHT's amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 34, noes 73; no quorum voting.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to insert after the word "superintendent" the words "at a salary of $1,800." This paragraph contains no details and does not fix the salary of the superintendent. I propose to make it $1,800 a year, and I suppose that is a sufficient salary for the position.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will say to the gentleman that there was a sub-committee of the Committee on Appropriations, which had this matter in charge, and they cut down the appropriation to $5,000, taking the language of the law as it has been for a series of years.

Mr. HOLMAN. This appropriation is not cut down; it is the same as it was in 1873.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is cut down to what it was last year.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, that may be.

Mr. GARFIELD. Afterward the Secretary of the Interior sent us word that he could not run the office at the rate we had fixed, and a sub-committee of two or three members was sent to make a special examination of the work done there, and they came back and reported that the appropriation ought to amount to $5,000. I have not myself any special information on the subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman know what the salary should be?

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no personal knowledge.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, I move to fix it at $1,800.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no objection to that; I do not know whether it increases or reduces the salary.

The question was on the amendment moved by Mr. HOLMAN.

Mr. GARFIELD. In view of the session to-night I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WOODFORD reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TYNER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3094) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made a special order for Wednesday next after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was presented by Mr. BABCOCK, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 2885) to remove the disabilities of Charles H. McBlair, of Maryland; and

An act (H. R. No. 3029) to provide for the relief of persons suffering from the overflow of the Lower Mississippi River.

The message also announced that bills of the following titles, having been received by the President on the 13th instant, and not having been returned by him within ten days, as prescribed by the Constitution, had become laws without his approval:

An act (H. R. No. 1405) for the relief of Victor Mylius, of Macoupin County, Illinois; and

An act (H. R. No. 1585) for the relief of the heirs of Seth Lamb.

ORDER FOR A RECESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now move that the House take a recess until half-past seven o'clock to-night; and I request members to come here and help us do a good evening's work on the legislative appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House the session of this evening will be exclusively devoted to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The gentleman from Indiana, Mr. TYNER, will act as Speaker pro tempore, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. HOSKINS, as chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

The motion of Mr. GARFIELD was then agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half-past seven p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half-past seven o'clock p. m., Mr. TYNER in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that for this evening we may act in Committee of the Whole on the pending bill without regard to the presence of a quorum.

Mr. SENER. I reserve my right to object.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course it will require unanimous consent. I did not know but gentlemen might agree to it in order to facilitate the transaction of business. I move that the rules be suspended and the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole upon the pending appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. HOSKINS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is the one moved by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to make the salary of the superintendent of documents in the Interior Department $1,800.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am disposed to allow that amendment to be adopted. I am not quite certain that it is right, but if we find out hereafter that it is not right we can correct it.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. It seems to me that in matters of this kind there should be some attempt made at equality. I do not think the librarian of the Interior Department and the superintendent of documents there performs a less important work than the superintendent of documents here in this House. The superintendent of the Interior Department has not only charge of books to be distributed all over the country to colleges and States, but he is also charged with the care and responsibility of the post-office stamps, which he distributes to all the Bureaus of the Department and the officials entitled to them. He also has charge of the printing done for the Department, which is very great; it all passes through his hands, and he has to read the proof, and he attends to matters of that kind. Of my own knowledge he very often works beyond business hours. It does seem to me that if we are looking toward an equalization of salaries of those men who are performing similar duties, we should not strike at an officer in one of the Departments and keep one of our own officers performing similar duties at a higher rate of compensation.

Mr. GARFIELD. Since I last called the attention of the House to this matter I have obtained a memoranda from the sub-committee that went to the Interior Department and there examined thoroughly into this matter. It was on their report that the increase of this item to $7,500 was recommended The superintendent to whom the gentleman refers, and who acts as librarian of the Interior Department, receives a salary of $2,500; that has been so for a series of years. He has one clerk of the second class, a $1,400 clerk, a messenger at $840, and a laborer at $720. These are the salaries that are provided for, and they amount to $5,460. In view of this memorandum I hope the amendment will not prevail; for I think it would change an officer whom we cannot afford to change under the circumstances.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. In looking at the Blue-Book, I find that the amount expended in this office last year for the pay of officials was $7,960, making no allowance at all for paper, twine, and boxes, which are covered by this appropriation of $5,000. If you fix the salary of this officer at $1,800, only $3,200 of the $5,000 remains to pay the other clerks and employés of this office, leaving nothing perhaps for packing and for getting up the documents which are sent all over the country.

This is a matter in which the people have an interest; and I think they will look with a great deal of suspicion upon our enthusiasm for economy when we strike down officials in other Departments who are doing as much if not more than similar officials here and yet have lower salaries. We ought to practice upon the motto that "charity begins at home." It seems to me that we are not doing justice either to ourselves or the interests of the Government in standing upon a few thousand dollars in order to strike at the officials in that Department. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. HOLMAN. It has been proposed by some gentleman in this House that there shall be adopted a new system with reference to appointments in the Departments; that they shall be distributed among the various districts, so that each member of Congress may have an opportunity of making some appointments. I trust that such a system will not be adopted; for I can see very well that if each of us should have friends holding office in the various Departments it would be very difficult for us to rise above personal considerations so as to keep down the salaries to a reasonable rate.

I do not blame my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALBRIGHT] for feeling sympathy with his friend who happens to hold this office.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. He is not my friend; he is almost an absolute stranger; he is a gentleman from the State of Kentucky; and although I understood he was a very gallant soldier, I never knew him until I came to Washington.

Mr. HOLMAN. His being a "gallant soldier" is certainly a circumstance in his favor, and if he is a disabled soldier I should feel very much inclined to waive any objection in regard to his pay, provided he renders efficient service. But, sir, when we are coming down, as it is said, to the "hard-pan" of specie payments; when, according to the theory, the expenses of living are to be reduced, while the burden of taxation will be heavily increased, I submit to my friend from Pennsylvania that it is a very improper time indeed to talk about high salaries.

I have never heard any gentleman discussing these questions before the people without insisting that public offices should not be sought for the purpose of making money; that they should be desired largely for other objects at a salary which would merely be a reasonable compensation for the time and labor required in the discharge of the duties—such compensation as is paid in unofficial life for services requiring the same degree of integrity and capability. It is upon that principle, I think, that the salaries of Government officials should be based. Are we to be told that a gentleman having charge of a small library in the Interior Department is, according to any system of gradation, to receive the same compensation as the chief clerk in the Treasury or War or Navy Departments? It will be observed in looking over the appropriation bills heretofore passed that we have not indicated this salary. The Secretary of the Interior has made it just what he thought proper; and it seems that he has fixed it at $2,500. Now let the fact go upon record in this bill that the salary is fixed at $2,500, and my friend from Pennsylvania, or some other gentleman, has a sure fulcrum on which to bring up a great body of other salaries to this level. The question involved here is not this salary alone but hundreds of others that must be raised for the purpose of "equalization." The raising of a single salary beyond the rate that was regarded as reasonable in 1872 impresses me with absolute fear; for whenever you get one salary up a large number of others must go up in proportion.

I hope that neither the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALBRIGHT] nor any other gentleman will quote the act of Congress of March 3, 1873, as indicating what is reasonable in our appropriations. We have had to back out from that legislation upon the demand of the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BECK. I wish to put a single question to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. ALBRIGHT.] He said that this officer comes from Kentucky.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I so understand.

Mr. BECK. What is his name?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Captain C. C. Adams.

Mr. BECK. I simply rose to ask that question, because I have been here myself seven years and most of my colleagues have been here for some time; but I do not think there has been one man appointed in any Department of this Government upon the recommendation of any member of Congress or any Senator from Kentucky. I am glad some one has been put in from our State. Does any one know how he got there?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I am glad the gentleman has some company.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows, under the heading "Department of the Interior:"

For fuel, light, and salary of the engineer, assistant engineer, and repairs of the heating apparatus, $20,000.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I see that this paragraph contains an appropriation for an assistant engineer. Last year we appropriated for the salary of an engineer only. I would like to know the reason for the addition of an assistant engineer.

Mr. GARFIELD. We appropriated $4,000 last year, but this year the change of grade all around the Interior Department requires a larger appropriation.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I see there is here an appropriation for an assistant engineer; last year the appropriation was only for one engineer. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if there is any need for that additional appropriation, or the creation of that additional office?

Mr. GARFIELD. The Secretary of the Interior called the attention of the committee to the fact, and the necessity for that appropriation. He was before us with the chiefs of Bureaus to show that the actual expenses of that Department would overrun the amount of the appropriation last year, but that an addition of about $1,800 would run them through.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. But what need is there for having an assistant engineer?

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand one engineer cannot run a building like this where it is necessary to have some person present all the time. Therefore it was necessary to have an assistant engineer as well as an engineer.

The Clerk read as follows:

For official postage-stamps for the Department of the Interior, as follows:
For the office of the Secretary, $18,000; for the General Land Office, $41,000; for the Bureau of Education, $10,000; for the Bureau of Indian Affairs, $10,000; for the Patent Office, $20,000; for the Pension Office, $25,000; and for the National Museum in the Smithsonian Institution, $1,000; in all, $125,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. The committee with much unanimity has already struck out this item for official postage-stamps. I therefore move to strike out "$125,000" in lines 1192 and 1193 and insert "$5,000."

Mr. SENER. That is a summing up, and the gentleman must make corresponding amendments in the other items.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only put the motion as it is made.

Mr. PACKER. Mr. Chairman, so far as the revenues of the Post-Office Department are concerned it can make no difference, I apprehend, whether this amendment is adopted by the committee or not; for under the provisions of the act of 31st of January, 1873, the Department of the Interior can only purchase postal-stamps by paying for them to the Post-Office Department the same prices at which other parties procure them. That law provides that from and after the 1st day of July, 1873, "all official correspondence of whatever nature, and other mailable matter sent from or addressed to any officer of the Government, or person now authorized to frank such matter, shall be chargeable with the same rates of postage as may be lawfully imposed upon like matter sent by or addressed to other persons."

But, Mr. Chairman, it seems to be assumed by gentlemen in argument here that the payment of the Post-Office Department by the other ExecutiveDepartments for the transportation of their official mail-matter is an innovation upon the former practice and usage of the Government, and I therefore desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that Congress, by the act of March 3, 1845, took from the Executive Departments of the Government the right they had previously enjoyed under the act of March 3, 1825, to receive and transmit through the mail their mailable matter free of postage, and then required them to keep an account of all postage charged to and payable by them, respectively, upon letters, packages or other matters received through the mail, touching the duties or business of their respective offices; and directed it to be paid quarterly out of the contingent fund of the proper Bureau or Department.

By another act, approved on the same day, the Secretary of the Treasury was directed to pay the postages which might be chargeable to any of the Executive Departments or Bureaus, under the provisions of the law I have just referred to.

By the act of 3d March, 1847, (section 12,) so much of the act of March 3, 1845, to which I have referred, as provided for the payment of postage upon mail-matter from the contingent funds of the two Houses of Congress and of the other Departments of the Government for which such mail service was performed, was repealed, and it was then enacted that "in lieu of such payment and in compensation for such mail services as may be performed for the several Departments of the Government, there shall be paid to the Post-Office Department from the Treasury for each year's service the sum of $200,000, which is hereby appropriated for that purpose out of any unappropriated money in the Treasury."

Then came the act of March 3, 1851, by which Congress also provided that—

> There shall be paid to the Post-Office Department, in further payment and compensation for the mail service performed for the two Houses of Congress and the other Departments and offices of the Government in the transportation of free matter, the sum of $500,000 per year, which shall be paid quarterly out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

These two acts, then, of 1847 and 1851, it will be seen, made "continuing" or annual appropriations of the sum of $700,000 to be paid every year to the Post-Office Department for the transportation of official matter in the mails; and this appropriation was continued until the inauguration of the present official postal-stamp system. So that while the Departments were nominally, and in one sense really, in the enjoyment of the franking privilege prior to July 1, 1873, the time at which the act of January 31, 1873, went into operation, they were also in point of fact, Mr. Chairman, paying by means of these appropriations to the Post-Office Department for the mail service and postal facilities afforded them at the rate of $700,000 per annum.

The official postal-stamp system, sir, but changed the mode of ascertaining the amount of compensation to be paid by each of the Departments, and in one respect at least has the advantage of ascertaining and determining with accuracy the amount that should be paid by each one of them, at the same rates for which the same services are rendered by the Post-Office Department for the public.

The proposition now is, as I understand it, sir, to appropriate a sum merely sufficient to pay the actual cost of preparing the stamps. But I contend, Mr. Chairman, that the true measure of the value of the service rendered by the post-office for the other Departments of the Government, in carrying their letters and mail-matter, is not the expense incurred in printing the stamps, (for that is only a question of engraving and printing,) but it is the actual cost of carrying their mail-matter for them. And while the post-office should not seek to make a profit at the expense of the other Departments, I submit, sir, that every principle of justice requires that they should not ask it to do their work and to assist them to earn and collect their immense revenues at an enormous loss to itself. By furnishing the postal facilities required by the Secretary of the Interior, by the General Land Office, the Bureau of Education, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Patent Office, the Pension Office, and the other Bureaus of the Department of the Interior, in their extensive correspondence, and to all the other Departments of the Government, I may say, (for the same rule and the same reasons apply to all,) in the execution of their duties and in the performance of their vast and extensive business the post-office contributes largely to their efficiency and success; and I submit, sir, that it should not be made the mere "hewer of wood and drawer of water," to bear their burdens, while their receipts are in no manner reduced by the expenses borne by it in performing this necessary service for them.

If, under the policy inaugurated by the last Congress, an account-current is to be kept between the several Executive Departments of the Government, it should be properly and accurately kept; and there can be no better method of keeping it fairly between the Post-Office and the other Departments than to charge them for the work done for them at the same rates it charges for similar services rendered the public.

In the moment of time left me, sir, I desire also to say that this appropriation, as reported by the Committee on Appropriations, will not swell the aggregate amount of the appropriations for carrying on the Government, as is sometimes alleged; for if it is not put in here as an appropriation for the payment of postage, it will necessarily have to be in a deficiency bill to pay the actual cost and expenses incurred in carrying the mails.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. Will my colleague on the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PACKER. Certainly.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I understand the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to say that it does not swell the appropriation. I wish to ask distinctly whether if we allow this appropriation of $125,000 to stand for official postage-stamps and $125,000, if it costs that much, for transporting the mails, would we not pay twice when we receive only one service?

Mr. PACKER. If we do not make this appropriation in this bill we will have to make the appropriation in the defficiency bill just so much larger.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. Then the gentleman means to say that the expense is $125,000 more than it was thought to be.

Mr. PACKER. Not at all. If it is not included in this bill you will have to make the deficiency just so much larger. The cost to the Government will be the same, whether the appropriation is put in this bill or in another and under another name.

Mr. TYNER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interfere with the evident desire of gentlemen to limit the appropriation for postage-stamps simply to the amount which would be necessary to pay the cost of their manufacture, yet it seems to me there are some thoughts in connection with this it would be well to state now before we dispose of this whole subject. The law passed by the last Congress evidently contemplates the Post-Office Department shall receive from the other Executive Departments for the sale of postage-stamps to cover their official correspondence the sums which would be represented if private individuals were to purchase postage-stamps to the same amount. I believe that to be right in principle inasmuch as we abolished the franking privilege, but there is another thought in that connection which I think we should not lose sight of. I want the Postmaster-General to receive the benefit of the fullest appropriation which may be necessary to cover the cost of the official correspondence of all the Departments for at least the full period of one fiscal year, because I believe at the expiration of that time we can take his own showing and demonstrate the fact that the abolition of the franking privilege will not save the general Treasury a single dollar. I propose to let him keep his accounts in accordance with his own views. I propose to give him all the revenue to be afforded from stamps sold to the other Departments, but at the expiration of one year or two years from the abolition of the franking privilege, if I happen to be here, I propose to take up his own report and show not a dollar has been saved to the general Treasury by the abolition of the franking privilege. For that reason I hope we will allow the appropriation recommended by the appropriate committee.

But there is another reason still. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PACKER] has indicated that the Postmaster-General in making out his estimates for the present fiscal year, as gentlemen will see by turning to the last page of his report, estimated the amount to be derived from the sale of stamps to the other Executive Departments, $2,250,000. Now, sir, in making up the Post-Office appropriation bill for the next year, which was reported to the House to-day by the Committee on Appropriations, they allow the sum of $2,250,000, and if now we shall cut off any portion of that it will be necessary to make it up and to allow a deficiency to a corresponding amount.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it would not be necessary to keep a strict account with the Postmaster-General, as well as with heads of other Departments, for the stamps he uses? Is he permitted to use all the stamps he requires for his own departmental correspondence without keeping an account of them?

Mr. TYNER. I do not understand that the Postmaster-General does that. The Postmaster-General asks for an appropriation of $950,000 to cover the cost of correspondence in his own Department.

Mr. CONGER. It is not in this bill.

Mr. TYNER. Not at all. But I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that an appropriation of $950,000 for this purpose for the Post-Office Department has been put into the Post-Office appropriation bill. The bill which I introduced into the House to-day, making the appropriations for the Post-Office Department, contains that appropriation of $950,000 for the cost of the official correspondence of that Department, which the Postmaster-General will receive just as he receives the amount set down here for the Interior Department, charging himself with the stamps he uses under this appropriation. Now, if we reduce the amounts appropriated here, if instead of allowing the Treasury Department, for instance, $200,000, we should allow it only $5,000, then it will be necessary to cover the balance in the form of appropriations in the deficiency bill, and the aggregate of the appropriation bills will be swelled by just that amount.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to occupy the time of the committee but for a single moment. I have offered these amendments, first to the State Department appropriation, and then to the Treasury Department appropriation, and the committee with wonderful unanimity, almost with entire unanimity, adopted the amendments; which to my mind was evidence that, in the judgment of the committee, this style of doing the thing was a roundabout way, and an incorrect and an improper way of doing it. If the law is in the way, then let us amend the law so that we shall appropriate a sum of money sufficient to pay for the purchase or for the manufacture of these stamps.

We are now giving a credit to the Post-Office Department, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. TYNER] has just said, in the post-office appropriation bill of $950,000. We put that much money into the hands of the Department. They take that money; they purchase stamps of themselves and use those stamps. But it cannot fail to be noticed by every member of the committee that this method of doing a thing is entirely out of all reason and character. It seems to me that we ought to appropriate in this legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill a sum of money sufficient to cover the expenses of manufacturing these stamps and then have them used in the various Departments, if we propose to continue the present law.

The gentleman from Indiana desires that the post-office shall have the credit of this large sum of money, some $2,000,000, that it may defend itself, or make its showing before the people, under the repeal of the franking privilege. I voted for the repeal of the franking privilege; not, however, that it was in accord with my judgment, for I believe that the old franking law should have been properly modified and amended, but that it should not have been wholly repealed. And I do not believe that the people to-day are satisfied with the repeal as it was actually effected.

I know that my own constituents are not satisfied with it to the entire extent to which it was carried, for Congress as a result now refuses to print the public documents which the people demand. I made a few remarks here the other day when the bill to transmit documents free through the mails was before the House, and those remarks were approved of by my constituents. There was not a single newspaper in my district which failed to commend what I said upon that matter, since in those remarks I only plead for free distribution of public documents and not revival of the franking privilege. There has been altogether too much said upon this subject; and my feeling is that the Post-Office Department has sought too much to interfere with the legislative branch of the Government in settling this question.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it appears, as has been stated by the gentleman from Indiana, that $950,000 are appropriated for the Post-Office Department to pay for the expense of carrying its official correspondence. And I understand that there is an item of $118,000 additional in that bill to pay for printing these stamps. I desire that these amendments may be made, so that when we shall reach the termination of this bill there may be a unanimous consent granted then to such an amendment as will give us practically the same law as we have now, and at the same time place this thing on a proper footing; that we shall pay for the printing of the stamps, and then furnish the Departments with as many stamps as they need.

I hope the committee will vote for this amendment; and if this shall be carried, I shall move to strike out the words after the word "Secretary" down to and including "$1,000."

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say a word. I regret very much to occupy the time of the Committee of the Whole on this subject. It recurs frequently in this bill as we come to the different Departments. And I am compelled to say, Mr. Chairman, that it seems to me that we ought to make fights on questions of this sort on the real ground on which we want to make them. If we want to restore the franking privilege, let us say so. We have tried to say so—or some of the members of this House have tried to say so during this winter and have failed. By a very strong vote last year, whether gentlemen voted on their own convictions or on the convictions of other people, the House and the Senate swept away the franking privilege, and made a solemn law that every Department of the Government should buy from the Post-Office Department at their face value all the postal stamps they needed for their business. That is the law, the plain, unquestioned law of the land. The Committee on Appropriations brought in the bill making appropriations exactly in accordance with the law; no more, no less. We do not come in as defenders of the law, or to attack it, but to obey it. But when we come to appropriate $200,000 for postage for the Treasury Department gentlemen cut it down to $5,000, although there is not a man here but knows that $5,000 will run that Department in the matter of postage for only one week. The proposition is made now when we reach the Department of the Interior to cut this amount down from $125,000 to $5,000. Every member here knows that that amount will run the Department for postage for about two weeks and no more, and the amount is to be cut down to give a dig at the repeal of the franking privilege. That is all that it can be.

Now, I submit that we ought not to legislate in this way. We are acting on an appropriation bill and under law. Let us make the appropriation fairly in the spirit of the law, and when we want to change the law let us bring our bills into the House and change it, and the appropriation bills shall be made to conform. But this series of attacks upon each particular item that touches the postage law is too much a concession that in repealing the franking privilege we were coerced into doing what we did not like to do, and that now we want to take it back.

I hope that as one Department has been passed by unscathed in this bill we shall let the others go.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. There is one thing more which I think it is well to consider here. Supposing the opinion of this House is that we ought to go back to the franking privilege, a privilege that the House itself took away and that nobody else did, does anybody want to begin by giving back the franking privilege to the Departments? Is there any sense in that? Now this proposition, if it means anything, arises from the proposition that was ruled upon the other day—instead of giving the Departments the face value of stamps that they shall use, to give them so much money with which to buy or make stamps. Well, now, that is equivalent to giving the franking privilege to the Departments. It places no restriction upon the Departments whatever. You give them so much money to manufacture stamps, and they manufacture them and use them in a Department, just as they formerly used the frank of the head of the Department, or the franks of the heads of Bureaus and the chief clerks. The result is that they have the franking privilege in another form. Everybody in the Department sticks on a stamp; every clerk writing a letter sticks on a stamp, because there is no limitation; and in that way they have the franking privilege.

This bill limits them to a certain amount. They may use so much money for this purpose, and nothing more. It is like the limitation upon all other appropriations. We say to them that they may use so much money for clerk-hire, so much for fuel, and so much for light. Well, this is the same kind of limitation. At the end of three months or six months the head of the Department looks over his funds, and he sees that they are spending the appropriation for fuel or for lights too fast or for any other items that are flexible. He says to them that hereafter the amount used for that purpose must be reduced, and that they must keep within the limitation. So it will be when we give them the face value of stamps. The head of the Department will notifiy his subordinates that those stamps can only be used for official business. The sums here appropriated are made up on that basis. The committee does not propose to give them anything else. It proposes to give them enough to do the business of the Government. If a Department has an apppropriation of $100,000 for this purpose, at the end of six months the head of the Department will see that only $50,000 has been spent, or if more has been spent he will notify the different Bureaus and divisions that he has only, and that they have only, $100,000 for the year, and that they must keep within that amount and so we make this matter of postage a matter to be regulated like anything else.

Now if there was any merit in the repeal of the franking privilege it was that it cut off abuses that it was said—I never believed that they existed as far as some men said, but it was said—with some force that the privilege was abused in certain directions, and it was that argument that led to its being cut off. Now in the legislation embodied in this bill the limitation is in the direction of curing that abuse in the Departments. They will be subject then to exactly the same restrictions that everybody else is subject to. There certainly is force in the point made by the gentleman from Indiana that we should give this system a fair trial, and then if it is a failure, as it promises to be, the whole matter can be considered from a broad point of view

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BECK. I move to amend the amendment so as to reduce the amount to $100. I am in favor of striking out the whole paragraph. I do not understand the argument of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] nor do I understand that this has any particular connection with the franking privilege as applied to members of Congress. I understood him to say that if we make this appropriation now it will make the Departments more guarded, and that it will place them in just the same position as everybody else is with regard to postage. I do not so understand it. Members of Congress now pay their own postage out of their own pockets. This proposition is to take the money of the tax-payers of the country out of the Treasury and put it into the hands of the Interior Department. The money is to be collected by taxation and placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, transferred by him to the Secretary of the Interior, who is to transfer it to the Postmaster-General. So far as the franking privilege of members of Congress is concerned it is gone. This is no abolition of it at all. You have to levy taxes to meet the appropriation bills that are presented to us, and among them is an item, as the Postmaster-General's last report shows, of $2,250,000 for postage-stamps for the Departments. Where is that $2,250,000 to come from? It is to come out of the pockets of the tax-payers of this country, and has to be met by taxation levied by Congress. Why should we do that? If we want the people of the country to understand exactly what has been saved by the repeal of the franking privilege, then let the Postmaster-General come in with his deficiency, after he has exhausted the revenues derived from the people. He gets now, as he tells us, $27,000,000 a year. What he does with it I do not know. But every dollar that he gets from the people ought to be paid into the Treasury, to be drawn therefrom only by appropriations by Congress.

The system that is pursued by the Postmaster-General now is the same as was pursued at one time by the Patent Office; and the result was that the Patent Office spent just whatever it chose. When the Postmaster-General comes in here with his deficiencies—he is asking now that we shall furnish him with $6,880,000 deficiency, including the $2,225,000 which he estimates he will receive from the various Departments for postage-stamps. Let him exhaust the appropriations which we have heretofore made for his Department and make his report to us, and then we will be in a condition to look into his accounts and see what he has done with the $27,000,000 which he says he will receive this year. When we furnish him $2,250,000 out of the revenues of the country the people are made to believe that the Post-Office Department is not spending that money at all; that that is legitimate revenue, derived from other sources than from taxation. Now that is not true; and we ought not to put it in such a shape that the Postmaster-General or anybody else can make the impression upon the country that it is true.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] says that these men will be more economical if we limit them to a given sum. Now all his experience, and the experience of every member of this House, is against that statement. They spend whatever is necessary, whether they put on a stamp furnished by the Postmaster-General, or in any other way. And when they have not enough they say that we have failed to appropriate what should have been appropriated, and that there is a deficiency. Sir, such a policy never saved a dollar; it is but an indirect way of reducing the deficiencies of the Post-Office Department and making the people believe that it is being run for two and a quarter millions less than it really is. Let him meet his deficiencies as the head of every other Department has to meet his. Let him submit his accounts to Congress; let Congress look over them and see if he has managed fairly. I do not want the Government to appropriate two and a quarter millions for his Department to meet a deficiency except in the direct form of a deficiency. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. DUNNELL, and upon a division there were—ayes 49, noes 48.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let it go.

Mr. PACKER. We can have a separate vote upon it in the House.

The amendment was declared adopted.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

General Land Office:

For Commissioner of the General Land Office, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; recorder, $2,000; three principal clerks, at $1,800 each; three clerks of class four; twenty-three clerks of class three, forty clerks of class two, forty clerks of class one; one draughtsman, $1,600; one assistant draughtsman, $1,400; two messengers; three assistant messengers; seven laborers; and two packers; in all, $171,920. Also, for additional clerks, on account of military-bounty lands, namely: For principal clerk, $2,000; one clerk of class three, four clerks of class two, thirty-five clerks of class one; and two laborers; in all, $52,640: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, at his discretion, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to use any portion of said appropriation for piece-work, or by the day, month, or year, at such rate or rates as he may deem just or fair, not exceeding a salary of $1,200 per annum.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have some explanation of that proviso.

Mr. GARFIELD. Before I give that I would ask that a verbal amendment be made to change the word "or" to "and," near the close of the proviso, between the words "just" and "fair;" so that it will read: "at such rate or rates as he may deem just and fair."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. This proviso is added, I believe, in the interest of economy and efficiency. Sometimes a large amount of work, such as draughting, has to be done in the Land Office, and there needs to be temporarily more than the regular force; sometimes less than the regular force is required. This proviso was inserted at the suggestion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; so that instead of employing all the clerks allowed by this provision he might use such portion of the amount here appropriated for clerical force in the employment of persons by the week or month, or for any special emergency that might arise, and pay them by the piece or day. It was believed that this would add to the efficiency and economy of his office.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to move an amendment, and I suppose it will be objected to. It is to make the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office $4,000 instead of $3,000. I ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order for a moment, until I say a word. As a member of the Committee on the Public Lands and as a Representative from a State having a large amount of business in that department, I have been very deeply impressed with the fact that we are asking of the Commissioner of the General Land Office an amount of work far beyond any compensation that we give him.

And right here I will say that in my judgment the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service would do a great deal more for the country if it would bring in a general bill revising the civil list of the country than it does to spend its time over what is popularly known as civil-service reform. The Commissioner of the General Land Office has been receiving $3,000 a year. The present Commissioner, Mr. Willis Drummond, has been Commissioner for the last four years. He is a gentleman of singular virtue, of the most untiring industry, going into his office at eight o'clock in the morning and working until dark, and half of the nights of the year he has been taking papers to his home and frequently working upon them until midnight. He has worked in that office in that manner for three years. Now what is the result? He resigns the office in order to go into business in this city, because, with the compensation you give him, he is absolutely unable to support himself and his family.

Mr. BECK. A number of us would like to know whether the present Commissioner would retain the office if his salary was made $4,000 a year. If so we would——

Mr. DUNNELL. The Commissioner who has just resigned has said to me that before the salary was increased last March he had made up his mind to leave the office. I know personally that when the salary was increased to $4,000 he felt constrained to remain; but by the recent action of Congress he became satisfied that his salary would not be beyond $3,000; and he assured me on the street the day before yesterday that $3,000 would not clothe and feed himself and his family. Now I do insist, Mr. Chairman, that it is unbecoming a great and rich Government like ours to ask a man of such high character and qualifications to render service in this responsible office for $3,000 a year.

Mr. BECK. I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] whether the present Commissioner will remain in office if the salary be increased to $4,000?

Mr. DUNNELL. I understand that he would.

Mr. BECK. You mean Judge Drummond?

Mr. DUNNELL. I refer to Hon. Willis Drummond.

Mr. BECK. Then I shall vote to make the salary $4,000.

Mr. CLYMER. I would give him $5,000.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I think the gentleman from Minnesota is mistaken in the statement he has just made. I believe the present Commissioner has made up his mind to retire from the office. I had a conversation with him the day before yesterday.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would say to the gentleman from Missouri that the retirement of the Commissioner is based entirely upon the inadequacy of the salary.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I believe that is the reason of his retirement.

Mr. DUNNELL. Wholly.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. The present Commissioner has already made his business arrangements for retiring.

Mr. DUNNELL. That may be partially true; yet I am satisfied that if the salary of $4,000 were restored he would withdraw from those arrangements and would go on in the execution of his duties. I say that the retirement of a man of such admitted fidelity and integrity as Judge Drummond would be a loss to the country.

Mr. CLYMER. As a member of the Committee on the Public Lands I have some knowledge of the valuable services rendered by the present Commissioner of the General Land Office. In my judgment there is no more faithful and efficient officer; and there is possibly none under whose supervision there come matters of greater importance to the interests of the Government. In the wide and extensive intercourse of the Committee on the Public Lands with this officer we have found him so careful, so correct, so thoroughly earnest at all times in behalf of the interests of the Government as against those who would speculate upon it, that I do not conceive that even $4,000 is anything like an adequate reward for services such as he renders. If by increasing the salary to $5,000 I could be assured that we could retain his services I would vote that amount most cheerfully. Five thousand dollars is not to be weighed in the balance in consideration of services such as we receive from this officer. I trust sincerely that we shall make his salary at least $4,000, if thereby we can retain his services.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Would my colleague [Mr. CLYMER] be willing to allow that sum to the present incumbent only, or to any man of equal competency and integrity?

Mr. CLYMER. If I could be assured of the services of an equally valuable man I would be willing to allow the same salary.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. We have always had competent and faithful men in that position.

Mr. CLYMER. I know nothing about that; but I would be unwilling to risk a change.

Mr. DUNNELL. It would be a most unfortunate thing for the Government to go in search of a suitable man for this position and then undertake to educate him to the duties of this peculiar office. Mr. Drummond is now familiar with the railroad land grants and with the construction of all the land laws of the country.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I believe that most people concede the thirst for office with increased salaries to be the great evil of our time; and should the salary of this officer be increased, as proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota, it will not be the first instance in which the virtues of a particular man have proved a misfortune to the country; for the gentleman knows very well that should this salary be raised it will not be the only increase, but will simply be the beginning of a similar increase in a large number of other cases. Some gentleman of very amiable qualities and recognized virtues (and happily this country is full of such men) holds an office, and under the influence of his friends in Congress his salary is increased. When that is accomplished other salaries must go up in proportion. It is proposed now to increase this salary, although less than a year ago at the demand of the people we reduced it.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let me ask the gentleman from Indiana whether the demand of the people for the reduction of salaries had any relation whatever to this officer?

Mr. HOLMAN. Sir, the public demand was that salaries should all be reduced. There was but one voice from the people on this subject, and it was that the salaries paid by the Federal Government were too high—far beyond the average compensation received by equally competent and equally honest men in unofficial pursuits.

The gentleman from Minnesota should remember that during the whole war, when the expense of living was twice what it is now, this same office was held by one of the most accomplished officers that this Government has ever had; and during that period the clamor for an increase of the salary was never heard. We have fallen upon evil times when office-holders expect to amass fortunes out of the hard-drawn taxes of the people. Whenever one officer by means of his personal friendships among members of Congress succeeds in getting his salary raised there comes a demand for a corresponding increase all along the line.

I should like to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that if you increase one salary you will be compelled to increase the salary of the officers which follow. I feel confident that the representation of the policy, and to some extent of the power of the House, will not refuse a demand so reasonable that the policy, to which the House yielded when Congress first met, shall not be abandoned at this early moment by increasing these salaries which the law then reduced. No man can contemplate the future history of this country without knowing the danger which besets us is the tendency to cupidity in public affairs; and I never saw it exhibited to so great an extent as to-night. We have heard an announcement to the effect that if we will only increase this man's salary he will hold on. If we do increase his salary I say it will be laying the foundation for increasing all other salaries. It is just by such steps we have built up the enormous load of taxation which oppresses the laboring people of the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the indulgence of the committee to say that following one another are appropriations for the Commissioner of Pensions, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the Commissioner of Education, who receive $3,000 a year each. It would be indecent to raise one and not raise all, and to restore all is to restore a section of the repeal of the salary law which we passed after so much pressure.

Mr. NIBLACK. There is another view of the question to which I wish to call the gentleman's attention, and that is that we are now on the high road to specie payments, and when we reach that point these salaries will become more valuable.

Mr. RANDALL. Why not make the three principal clerks fourth-class clerks, the salary being the same?

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us vote on the first.

The committtee divided, and there were—ayes 53, noes 54; no quorum voting.

Mr. DUNNELL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DUNNELL and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 71.

So (no further count being asked for) the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indian Office:

For compensation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; five clerks of class four; eight clerks of class three; one stenographer, $1,600; thirteen clerks of class two; eleven clerks of class one; four copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $65,680.

Mr. RANDALL. I notice there is an additional officer here, one stenographer at $1,600 a year; and that there is an increase in clerks of class two and of class one.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is a decrease in class one, but an increase in class two.

Mr. RANDALL. There is an increase in class one, as I understand it.

Mr. GARFIELD. There were two classes of clerks, and we have made a change in this respect; that is all.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman say it is necessary?

Mr. GARFIELD. We thought it was necessary. We did not give all that was asked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pension Office:

For compensation of Commissioner of Pensions, $3,000; deputy commissioner, $2,500; chief clerk, $2,000; medical referee, $2,500; twenty-six clerks of class four; fifty-two clerks of class three; eighty-four clerks of class two; one hundred and twenty-two clerks of class one; twenty-five copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; twelve assistant messengers; six laborers; one engineer, $1,400; and one assistant engineer, $1,000; in all, $442,700.

Mr. RANDALL. I find there are two new offices here. We provide for a deputy commissioner and for a medical referee.

Mr. GARFIELD. These two were created by the law of last year. We simply follow the law in putting them in.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Were they created by law or merely in the appropriation bill?

Mr. GARFIELD. By a law which was passed last year reorganizing the Pension Office.

Mr. RANDALL. It is an aggregate increase of $4,500.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is true, but the law provides for it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses of the office, namely: For actual expenses of clerks detailed to investigate suspected attempts at fraud, as provided by law, $30,000; for stationery, $12,000; for carpets, mats, furniture, awnings, and repairs of the same, $7,000; for horse and carriage, and keeping of the same, $1,200; for fuel, gas, engraving, and retouching plates; for bounty-land warrants, printing and binding the same; engraving and printing pension certificates; and for other necessary expenses of the office, including two daily newspapers, $24,800; in all, $75,000.

Mr. RUSK. I move to strike out "30" in line 1248 and insert "60;" so it will read, "as provided by law, $60,000."

Mr. Chairman, this is for the investigation of fraudulent claims. There are now over one thousand pending, and if they are investigated it will certainly be a saving to the Government of $100,000. The investigation of fifty claims of this class shows a saving of $32,000. You will find in Miscellaneous Document No. 221 a full statement of these cases. Delay of investigation and a payment which will be made of these claims will amount to more than this appropriation. It is therefore to the interest of the Government to make this appropriation so that investigation can proceed at once.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Is this for the one thousand cases or for an investigation generally?

Mr. RUSK. To investigate generally. But there are cases now pending, where charges have been preferred, which it is necessary especially to investigate.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Are experts employed for the purpose?

Mr. RUSK. There are clerks detailed for the purpose. They are sent to a locality where it is alleged that claims are fraudulent, to investigate the facts. Gentlemen will find in this document one case where a widow drew $2,172.65. When the case was investigated, it was proved that she was worth $100,000. The evidence was clear. When the Pension Office was informed that it was a fraudulent case they sent an agent to the locality to investigate, and upon the investigation it was proved, as I have said, that she was worth $100,000, and the whole amount, over $2,000, was collected back. It is for the investigation of this class of cases that this appropriation is made.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say that if the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, who holds a very responsible position and is capable of judging of this matter, says to the Committee of the Whole that in his judgment the situation of the service is such that an increase of this appropriation by the amount of $30,000 is necessary to protect the office against fraud, I will not oppose it. The gentleman is earnest about it, and has expressed his opinion decidedly. I have no special knowledge of the subject beyond what he has communicated, and I will not oppose the amendment.

Mr. BECK. I rise to oppose the amendment, for this reason: These clerks who are detailed from the Pension Office for the investigation of fraud have not one-tenth part of the means of ascertaining the fraud that the United States officers now located in every part of the United States have, without any additional expense whatever being incurred. There are internal-revenue officers; there are postmasters in every village; there are United States district attorneys, marshals, and others, who, on information from this department, can make every investigation that is necessary, and report the result.

The whole object of this increase is to send clerks traveling, with mileage and other expenses, all over the country, doing no good. That is the meaning of it. If you will make the officers of the United States, whom you have now got in every district, do their duty, upon reports from the Commissioner of Pensions, every fraud can be detected far better than it can be detected by a clerk sent from Washington.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to the increase, because it is extending the discretion of the officers of the Government in the expenditure of money. I think they ought to be closely tied down.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether there is not some mode by which these frauds can be investigated better than by sending out clerks from the Pension Office? We all know that it costs a vast amount of money to send out a clerk from Washington, say to Iowa, to investigate a case or cases of fraud. And this system of sending out clerks is employed to some extent in giving recreation to clerks in the Departments and as a mode and means of increasing their salaries.

The whole system is wrong. We ought, as the gentleman from Kentucky has said, to employ officers who are already in the localities where the frauds are to be investigated, both as a means of securing the efficient investigation of frauds and as an economical mode of investigating them.

On an early day of this session I had the honor of introducing a bill providing a different mode of paying pensions from that which now prevails, and providing a mode of investigating frauds, which I think would be vastly more economical and efficient than the present mode. That bill still sleeps in the hands of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RUSK. I will say for the benefit of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] that we have examined his bill thoroughly, and found it entirely impracticable. And I will say further for his benefit that every soldier who has petitioned Congress on the subject has petitioned to have the mode of payment remain precisely as it is now.

Mr. LAWRERCE. I have not surrendered the floor. I have no doubt the gentleman supposes that the bill is impracticable. But does he not know that the very mode of payment provided by that bill is employed in paying two-thirds of all the expenditures of the Government—I mean the mode of paying by drafts? Why cannot pensioners be paid by drafts sent to them just as well as other creditors of the Government? and, in fact, at last they are paid by drafts. There are so many office-holders interested in preserving the existing mode of paying pensions that it is not surprising that they have sufficient influence to get up petitions against the bill.

Mr. RUSK. I supposed the gentleman would have waited for the discussion on that matter until the bill was pending.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The bill provides a mode of preventing frauds which I think is better than this mode. I shall not vote any money to send out clerks from Washington for this purpose.

Mr. RUSK. I would state to the gentleman that this appropriation is under the present law. And if it is necessary to appropriate $30,000, it is necessary to appropriate a larger sum. I say that I offer the amendment in the interest of economy, and I am satisfied that it is in the interest of economy. But if any gentleman desires to change the law and to provide a better mode of investigating these frauds, I am entirely willing that that should be done.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Is there a law authorizing the sending out of clerks for this purpose unless you put it in your appropriation bill?

Mr. RUSK. There certainly is.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Where is it outside of your appropriation bill?

Mr. RUSK. The law authorizes the Commissioner of Pensions to make investigations in cases where he has been informed that frauds exist.

Mr. LAWRENCE. And you put in your appropriation bill that this shall be done by sending out clerks, when, you might just as well provide that it shall be done by officers of the Government in the localities where the frauds are to be investigated.

Mr. KILLINGER. I have no doubt that the chairman of the Committee on Pensions offered this amendment in good faith, but I hope the House will not assent to it and by its vote indorse this system. Sir, it is rotten to the core; there is no doubt about that. I have seen some of the operations of it myself. These clerks get their annual salaries and then they make these trips and have their mileage and all sorts of expenses paid, and they are generally pleasure trips. There may now and then be cases where some saving is made to the Government, but there is no law for sending them. It is merely an abuse which has grown up in the Pension Bureau, and it ought to be abolished. It is equivalent to the moiety system and other things of that kind. There is no law for it and no good sense in it, and it ought to be done away with.

Mr. RUSK. I wish to correct the impression that there is no law authorizing this system of investigating frauds. The law of 1873 provides this method of detecting these frauds, and unless that law is changed certainly an appropriation should be made sufficient to carry it out.

I am not here defending the Pension Bureau for the manner in which they do their business. I want that distinctly understood. I have not investigated the Pension Bureau, but I have looked into these frauds and I know that they ought all of them to be at once investigated. It would be in the interest of economy.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to add a remark to what the gentleman has said. Last year we made an appropriation in lump of $75,000 for contingent expenses of the Pension Office, including the detection of frauds upon the Pension Bureau.

Mr. RUSK. And $45,000 of that amount was set apart for this purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations found that nearly $45,000 of that sum was expended in the traveling expenses of persons who were sent out to investigate these frauds, and they were not always, I believe, clerks of the Department. I think in most cases they were given mileage. The committee were of opinion that too large a liberty was given in that direction, and that mileage could be given if the persons in authority were so disposed to favor those who were sent and to give them the opportunity of traveling. To prevent that we have put into this bill, as gentlemen will see, not a lumping sum of $75,000 for contingent expenses, but we have itemized it as far as we possibly could and have set apart only $30,000 that could be used in this way. We have so limited it that the clerks sent out on this business shall receive only their actual expenses. No mileage is allowed, nothing that can amount to perquisites, nothing but the actual expenses of the clerks detailed.

We believe that this will very considerably restrict what might have been a dangerous power, and one which, it is alleged, has been used unwisely, whether so alleged truthfully or not I do not know.

As to the question whether we should now increase the amount appropriated in this bill, the laboring oar is in the hands of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. RUSK,] the chairman of the Committee on Pensions. But whatever we put in here I believe is carefully guarded by the provisison that these persons shall only receive their actual expenses.

Mr. TYNER. Gentlemen have raised a question as to whether there is a law authorizing the Commissioner of Pensions to detail clerks for the performance of special duties, such as have been referred to. I desire that the Clerk shall read section 30 of the act on the subject.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is the act of March 3, 1873, and a very bad law.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized and empowered to detail, from time to time, clerks in his office to investigate suspected attempts at fraud on the Government of the United States through and by virtue of the provisions of this or any other act of Congress providing for pensions, and to aid in prosecuting any person so offending, with such additional compensation as is customary in cases of special services, and that any person so detailed shall have power to administer oaths and take affidavits in the course of such investigation.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman give us the date of that act?

Mr. TYNER. March 3, 1873.

Mr. RANDALL. The same year the moiety law passed.

The question was taken on Mr. RUSK's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out "$30,000" and inserting "$15,000" in lieu thereof. I do it because I consider that $15,000 is sufficient for actual expenses, and in addition I do it is a notification to the Commissioner of Pensions that the whole business of finding out these frauds should be done by the postmasters throughout the country. They are far more familiar with the people resident in their neighborhoods than any temporary officer who might go out there could be. It is another one of the abuses of the Government, as I said before, giving an unbridled authority to officers of the Government to expend money at their own will.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. There is one thing more that should be said for this feature of the pension service. To begin with, gentlemen should remember that the Committee on Appropriations have already cut down this appropriation $15,000 from last year.

Mr. RANDALL. They paid constructive mileage then, and now they are to pay only actual expenses.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Now, some gentlemen may be under misapprehension as to this feature of the pension service, owing to the language in which the appropriation is couched. This money is not spent in any large degree in paying the expenses of clerks whose general duty is here in Washington in the Pension Bureau, and who are sent off upon vacations to enliven their lives and make their duties pleasanter. If it were it would be subject to grave objection, and I should give it little sympathy. It is a service of a different kind, and it is this: Those who are appointed for this service of investigating frauds are called clerks for this reason, the committee do not believe and I do not believe in an irresponsible force of any Department—secret officers, detectives, spies, shadowers of other men's conduct, of whom nobody knows whether they are officers or not.

But here is a body of men, regular clerks, borne on the rolls of the office; and while they are clerks by designation, yet their duty is to ferret out frauds. These men wherever they go bear with them no irresponsible character, no secret character. They are clerks assigned to this duty of detecting frauds. Now, so long as human nature is as we find it, there will be frauds in this as in other branches of the public service. I believe that in this Department as in every other Department the detection of frauds should be left to the regular force. I do not believe in the Pension Bureau having a band of spies or lurking informers in every corner of the land, bearing no mandate from their headquarters, but shadowing the doings of American citizens. I do not believe in any such thing in this Bureau any more than in any other. But as there must be detection of fraud so long as there is fraud, in order to have efficient service we should give the Department a regular force that is borne upon its rolls, that is paid a salary, that has no commissions, no moieties, but is paid so much a year. That is now a feature of the Pension Department; and that is the manner in which this is being done.

Now, if you strike here at this, which is a good feature, which is conducted properly, which is conducted as a majority of this House believe investigations of fraud should be conducted, you by comparison encourage other irresponsible methods of detecting and investigating frauds. I do not say that no better method than this can be devised of ferreting out frauds that exist, but this method more than pays for itself. The experience of your committee upon investigation is that it more than pays for itself. I think it pays double in the returns of cases of fraud that are lopped off by means of these regular officers of the Department. I hope the committee will hesitate before striking out this feature.

Mr. NIBLACK. Is not this a duty required by existing law?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Certainly it is. The law is explicit in declaring that it shall be done. It is only for us to say the amount we will give to have it done.

Mr. NIBLACK. Then I do not think we should expend more time on this matter.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I think we should rather increase the amount than decrease it.

Mr. RANDALL. I think $30,000 is too much, and therefore I have moved to reduce it to $15,000. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NIBLACK] alludes to the law. The law might lead to the expenditure of $100,000 as well as $15,000. That is the force of his remarks.

Mr. NIBLACK. Unless we change the law we should carry it out. I do not say the law is a good one, but I only ask if the law required this.

Mr. RANDALL. I maintain that $15,000 is enough even under the law, which is a bad law, by the by.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. SENER. I move to strike out the words "for horse and carriage and keeping of the same, $1,200." I have looked over this appropriation bill as well as I could to-night, and I desire to call the attention of this committee to the fact that there are four or five Bureau officers in this portion of the bill, and this is the only one who is allowed a horse and carriage by authority of law. I find no horse and carriage allowed the Secretary of the Interior. I find none allowed to the Comptroller of the Currency, or to either one of the Auditors. I find none allowed in terms to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Commissioner of Education, or the Commissioner of Patents. It seems to me that with the improved facilities for passing from point to point in Washington afforded by the street cars, with the several Departments connected as they now are, by telegraph, we should not allow any Bureau officer a horse and carriage. If you allow one to have it, then why not allow all?

I have no personal feeling against the Commissioner of Pensions to prompt me to make this motion. I have always found him a very courteous, urbane public official. But if we are going to unload, to reduce our expenditures—if we mean to restrict our salaries to $5,000 a year, to pay our own expenses on the street cars, to cut off our mileage, then let us cut down these expenditures in the Departments also. If this appropriation is to be continued I want to know some good reason for it. If it is to be sanctioned by express terms of law, then I want to know why the other Bureaus are not likewise allowed a horse and carriage.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will simply say in reply that the duties of the Pension Office are peculiar in this: It is in a building a great way from the Interior Department, in the Seaton House, and there are other buildings where the pension clerks are kept. A great deal of communication, of referring papers and of messages, is required to be done. And furthermore, there is required constant consultation with the rolls of the War Department in order to test the accuracy of the papers presented in applications for pensions. Almost every application for a pension must be compared at the Adjutant-General's office at the War Department with the rolls, in order to see whether the allegations made in the application are true.

In the same way it is frequently necessary to send to the Surgeon-General's office to see what entries are made there. Thus it has been found necessary in the past for this Bureau to keep a horse and wagon. If after this statement, gentlemen think that the appropriation should be struck out, I shall not insist upon it remaining.

Mr. FRYE. Is it in the interest of economy for this Bureau to keep a horse?

Mr. GARFIELD. We think it is.

Mr. RANDALL. O, no; it is not.

Mr. SENER. I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that it is only a few minutes' walk from the Department of the Interior to the Seaton House, where many of the pension records are kept. Besides that, as my friend from Ohio very well knows, no pension paper carried to the Pension Office is acted on the same day it is carried there. Nor does the Commissioner himself give personal attention to papers, except by sending for a clerk to bring in the papers; and then he gives a hearing and determines what he will do in the matter.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I wish to ask my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] why it is necessary to appropriate $1,200 to keep a horse and carriage for one year. It is at the rate of $100 a month. Now, it does not cost any such sum in any city of the United States, or of the world; and this appropriation for such a purpose cannot be honestly expended.

Mr. GARFIELD. More than this was expended last year to keep up the establishment in this same office. The gentleman cannot hire a saddle-horse in this city for less than twenty-five dollars a month in any respectable livery-stable.

Mr. KILLINGER. Thirty dollars a month will keep a horse at any livery-stable.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States Patent Office:

For compensation of the Commissioner of the Patent Office, $4,500; for assistant commissioner, $3,000; for chief clerk, $2,500; three examiners-in-chief, at $3,000 each; examiner in charge of interferences, $2,500; trade-mark examiner, $2,500.

Mr. RANDALL. I find here a new officer—"trade-mark examiner."

Mr. GARFIELD. That is a new office.

Mr. RANDALL. Is it created by law?

Mr. GARFIELD. The recent law allowing trade-marks to be copyrighted has given rise to this peculiar business; and the appropriation for this officer was recommended by the Commissioner.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there anybody holding such an office at present?

Mr. GARFIELD. I believe there is, though I am not sure. But the Committee on Appropriations were satisfied that, as the law had created the place, or had at least made a necessity for the performance of the duties, the appropriation should be made.

Mr. RANDALL. One other point. The last act appropriated for thirty-five copyists of drawings. I find that none are appropriated for in this bill, and the aggregate amount is reduced $35,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. That, I am sorry to tell the gentleman, is partly a mistake of the committee. We think we have reduced the item more than we ought to have done; and I shall ask to make an amendment making the aggregate appropriation nearly the same as last year.

Mr. CONGER. The law of the last Congress provided a method by which trade-marks might be registered in the Patent Office, and authorized the appointment of a suitable officer to keep that register. The receipts from this branch of business more than pay all the additional expense, although the fees received are paid directly into the Treasury. This officer is necessary to carry out the law, and it provided for his appointment.

Mr. BECK. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what reason, if any, exists why the Commissioner of Patents should receive $4,500 a year, while the Commissioner of the General Land Office receives only $3,000?

Mr. GARFIELD. The only reason is the law. That is the way the law has fixed it. The gentleman is aware that the Commissioner of Patents holds an office much older than any other of these other offices—older; indeed, than the Interior Department itself. The name Patent Office was applied to the whole building because it was the earlier office. The Patent Office, as the gentleman knows, unlike most of the other Departments of the Government, pays for itself. Its receipts from new patents and extensions during last year were $703,199.77, while the total expenditure was but two-thirds of that amount. Of course the Commissioner of Patents needs to be not only a thorough lawyer, but an expert in the special business imposed upon him.

Mr. BECK. Does not the Commissioner of the General Land Office need also to be one of the best lawyers in the country?

Mr. GARFIELD. He needs to be a good lawyer; but I do not think the position requires that class of qualities demanded in the head of the Patent Office. Still I do not by any means say that the Commissioner of the General Land Office ought not to have more salary.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the Patent Office, namely: For stationery for use of office, repair of model-cases, stationary port-folios for drawings, furniture and labor connected therewith, repairing, papering, painting, carpets, ice, advertising, books for library, moneys refunded, printing engraved patent-heads, international exchanges, plumbing, gas-fitting, extra labor on indexes and abstracts for annual reports, fitting rooms, temporary clerks, laborers, and other contingencies, $80,000; and no money appropriated by this act shall be expended for advertising in newspapers.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. I raise a point of order on the last clause of the bill, providing that "no money appropriated by this act shall be expended for advertising in newspapers." This provision is in contravention of the existing law; and I refer the Chairman to section 64 of the act of July 8, 1870.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentlemen from Indiana [Mr. SAYLER] will send to the desk the section on which he bases his point it will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 64. And be it further enacted, That upon the receipt of such application, and the payment of the duty required by law, the Commissioner shall cause to be published in one newspaper in the city of Washington, and in such other papers published in the section of the country most interested adversely to the extension of the patent as he may deem proper, for at least sixty days prior to the day set for hearing the case, a notice of such application, and of the time and place when and where the same will be considered, that any person may appear and show cause why the extension should not be granted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the indulgence of the Chair in a single remark upon the point of order. If we here proposed to change the law and to say that hereafter there shall be no publication in newspapers, the point of order would clearly be good. But this clause merely provides that none of the money appropriated in this act shall be used for that purpose. It is always in order to limit an appropriation in this way. It does not change the law at all. We merely decline to appropriate anything for this particular purpose. Congress may always decline to appropriate for any lawful purpose. We merely provide here that no part of this appropriation shall be used for a specified object. We do not say what may be done hereafter; you may appropriate for it in another line or in another bill, but we say that the money hereby appropriated shall not be used for that purpose.

The reason for that is simply this: the Committee on Appropriations found whenever anybody came for an extension of a patent the Washington newspapers were full of advertisements at the public expense and at a high price. We are publishing now a Patent Office Gazette, an Official Gazette, and everybody who is interested in patents will learn more fully from that Gazette than from any Washington newspaper about any application for a patent. The Commissioner of Patents said to us it was far cheaper, for they printed all such notices in the Official Gazette, and it was entirely unnecessary to print them besides in a Washington daily newspaper. We thereby reach all people interested in patents better than in any other way, and that too without any other cost.

All patent men take that Gazette, or all can take it, and the whole country has come to understand, if they want to know how patents are going, they should subscribe and pay for the weekly Patent Office Gazette which is official.

Mr. MYERS. Six copies are sent to every congressional district.

Mr. GARFIELD. Six are sent to every congressional district under the law. All the leading libraries have it. It is sent to eight libraries in each district. It is a waste of money, therefore, to publish at the public expense every application for an extension of patent in the newspapers in Washington. We do not violate the law, but we say the money we appropriate here shall not be used for that purpose.

Mr. BURCHARD. I wish to ask a question. Does the law positively require publication in the Washington newspapers?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly, and the official Gazette is a Washington paper, and complies with the law.

There is a certain amount the Patent Office has to do in the way of advertising. It has to notify parties, and it advertises in this Gazette, the cost of that advertisement being charged to the applicant for extension of his patent.

Mr. CONGER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SAYLER] raises the point of order that the words "and no money appropriated by this act shall be expended for advertising in newspapers," changes existing law, and that is the pending question before the committee.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, it is on that point I wish to make a statement. The law as it now stands requires upon every application for a United States patent a certain sum to be paid by the applicant, fifteen dollars. That is an expense the law provides the applicant himself shall be put to for advertising his application for extension to the world, and especially to those most interested adversely to his extension. It is a very necessary provision of law. Under it the law puts the burden upon the applicant seeking the extension. For instance, if it be for a harvester or a reaper, it is provided that his application shall be published at his expense in the region where harvesters and reapers are most used. If it be an application for an extension of a patent in the way of looms or mills, it is provided the notice shall be published in those sections of the country most interested. The expense is thrown on the applicant, and does not come from the people or the Government.

As the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations well says, the charges upon the applicants for patents are much larger to-day than the expense, including also this advertising. Now, the law requires such application shall be published in one newspaper in this District. That is accomplished by publishing in the Official Gazette which was authorized by the law of last year. But it also requires that it shall be published in newspapers in the district where the people are adverse to the extension. It cannot be published in such papers here unless this clause is stricken out. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this clause of the law:

All money received at the Patent Office for any purpose, or from any source whatever, shall be paid into the Treasury as received, without any deduction whatever; and all disbursements for said office shall be made by the disbursing clerks of the Interior Department.

That is the law in regard to the money. The Commissioner of Patents cannot take this money which is paid for these publications and pay for the publication of these notices in the papers, because all money for every purpose goes into the Treasury; and unless we make an appropriation for this advertising there will be no advertising as provided by law. I submit, therefore, the point taken by my colleague on the Committee on Patents that this changes not only the letter but the spirit of existing law, and changes it injuriously to the public interests in this case, is well taken.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire to say but a single sentence on the point of order. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to this fact: Suppose we strike out from the bill the entire paragraph appropriating for the Patent Office, and not appropriate anything for it in this bill; that would not change the existing law. It would leave the law as it stands. We would simply not make an appropriation. Now if, instead of doing that, we appropriate for a part of the purposes for which the law requires moneys to be expended in the Patent Office, and say that we shall not in this bill appropriate for advertising, or that we shall not appropriate for the Commissioner's salary, or for any other purpose that does not change the existing law, it simply leaves no appropriations in this bill to carry out a particular legal enactment.

Mr. MYERS. Having had some connection with this matter I desire to say a word. The suggestion of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] I hope will not prove of any avail here. The effect, if not the intent, of the lines against which the point of order has been made would be to nullify existing law. I introduced at an early part of the session a bill providing, among other things, that this publication should be dispensed with. I agree that the advertisements in the Patent Office Gazette should be sufficient notice to parties interested in an extension of a patent. It is largely subscribed for. It is sent to eight libraries in each district, and it would give all the information that is required. But when parties apply for extensions, the Commissioner is required by the positive terms of the sixty-fourth section of the act of 1870 to—

Cause to be published in one newspaper in the city of Washington, and in such other papers published in the section of the country most interested adversely to an extension of the patent, as he may deem proper, for at least sixty days prior to the day set forth for hearing the case, a notice of such application, and of the time and place when and where the same will be considered.

Now thousands of applications come in every year—many thousands. The people are interested in having these applications granted or acted upon, and the law cannot be fulfilled if it is nullified in this way in an appropriation bill. If you want to repeal it, if you want to amend and better the law, let a bill be reported and acted upon which provides for such repeal. But until that time, in the face of a positive enactment in the interest of inventors, without which the law cannot properly be fulfilled and without which an extension cannot be properly granted, let us not nullify the law by this proviso, which will operate against the inventors as well as against the law.

Mr. LAWRENCE. How against inventors?

Mr. MYERS. Because when a party applies for an extension of a patent, the Commissioner will not advertise when there is no appropriation to pay for it, and he will go before the public with his patent and some one will infringe upon it, and when it comes before a court on a request for an injunction the court will have to decide that the provisions of the law have not been complied with and that the extension is valueless. Or if, as the law would probably be declared, the executive act of the Commissioner in extending the patent is final and conclusive, then those interested adversely to the extension would by the failure to publish the notice of application be debarred from the chance of opposition which the law contemplates. If we want to change the existing law let us do so, but let us not strike at the existing law in an appropriation bill.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. I ask for the ruling of the Chair on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no hesitation in announcing his ruling upon this question. It seems to the Chair as clearly as anything can that the two lines against which the point of order is raised do not change existing law, but are simply a restriction upon an appropriation. Suppose that this bill had appropriated $50,000 for this particular purpose, it would have been perfectly competent for this committee to have amended it and made the amount $25,000, or to have stricken it out entirely. This is simply a restriction upon the appropriation; but an appropriation for this same purpose may be introduced in another bill. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out the words "and no money appropriated by this act shall be expended for advertising in newspapers."

In support of this amendment I have simply this to say, that one of the great causes of complaint about the working of the patent laws is in regard to the extension of patents, and there ought to be every facility given to the entire public, and especially to that portion of the public that is presumably the most interested in the extension of a patent, to enable them to appear and have a hearing. I take it that in this as in everything else there ought to be extended to every citizen the amplest opportunity to have his cause heard.

This section of the law to which reference has been made is eminently wise. It provides that notice of the extension of a patent shall go into the newspapers in the region of country where those likely to be most interested reside; and every one from his own experience knows that an advertisement of this kind appearing in the local newspapers in my own section of country or in the section of country represented by any other member will attract the attention of the people at once.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Will the gentleman allow me to state an amendment which I was about to propose, and which I think will be agreed to unanimously?

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. I will hear what it is.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. It is to perfect the paragraph by adding the words "in Washington other than the Official Gazette." That will leave it so that this money shall not be expended for advertising in newspapers in Washington other than the Official Gazette. Advertisements can be put in the papers in the western country as now.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. I will accept that as a modification of my amendment.

Mr. BURCHARD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. I desire to know why he wishes this money to be expended in advertising in the Gazette, which is a paper published by the Department? I cannot see why the matter should not be left, as it is in the law, at the discretion of the Commissioner, who has charge of this matter. If he sees fit to publish these advertisements in the Official Gazette he will do so, and I understand that that is his preference. If he thinks it better that they should be published in newspapers that will go to the community rather than to experts who take the Official Gazette, leave it to his discretion. I will be satisfied either way; but I see no reason for appropriating money to pay for advertising in the Official Gazette, which is published by the Department.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The reason for adding the words, "other than the Official Gazette" is because it might be claimed that that is a newspaper. It seems to me that the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SAYLER] was a very wise one, and that was that there are a great many persons interested in these matters adversely to an applicant who desire that these advertisements shall be published in their local newspapers; but persons interested in patents in Washington are almost invariably readers of the Patent Office Gazette. It is to get rid of this great abuse of having the Washington press here getting these large sums out of the Government, which the Commissioner finds it difficult to prevent, that this proposition has been made.

Now, my proposition leaves the Washington public to look for these notices in the Patent Office Gazette, which is printed here, and which any man can get at in ten minutes; all the patent agents here, of course, take the Gazette. And then the Commissioner can send these advertisements to the papers elsewhere, as the needs of the community require. My amendment will make the clause read:

And no money appropriated by this act shall be expended for advertising in newspapers in the city of Washington, other than the Patent Office Gazette.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For photolithographing or otherwise producing plates for the Official Gazette, including pay of employés engaged on the Gazette, and for making similar plates of patents issued between July 1, 1869, and January 1, 1872, $40,000.

Mr. BECK. I move to amend that paragraph so as to make the amount $20,000, and to add to it the proviso that the Official Gazette shall not be furnished to members of Congress. I do not believe that one member in fifty ever opens it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order that the amendment changes existing law.

Mr. BECK. In what way?

Mr. GARFIELD. It provides that hereafter the Gazette shall not be furnished to members of Congress, and the law says they shall be so furnished.

Mr. BECK. I know they make me take it every week.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is provided by law that it shall be distributed to each congressional district, and to every member of Congress.

Mr. BECK. Are we obliged to take it?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky insist on his amendment?

Mr. BECK. No, sir; I withdraw it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For tracings of drawings preparatory to photolithographing back issues, $10,000.

Mr. RANDALL. That is something new.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to move to amend that paragraph by striking out "$10,000," and inserting "$35,000." The gentleman from Pennsylvania noticed that we struck out thirty-five copyists at $1,000 each in the body of the appropriation, for the purpose of placing them by themselves in this item, where the Commissioner will not be compelled to employ thirty-five persons at $1,000 each, but where he can have the work done by piece-work, or in whatever way may be more economical. He asks the committee to appropriate, instead of what we struck out there, $35,000 in this item.

Mr. RANDALL. That will make the amount just as it was last year.

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Education:
For Commissioner of Education, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; one clerk of class four; one statistician, with the compensation of a clerk of class four; one clerk of class three; one translator, with the compensation of a clerk of class three; one clerk of class two; four copyists, at $900 each; one messenger, $840; and one watchman; in all, $18,360.

Mr. O'BRIEN obtained the floor.

Mr. BUCKNER. With the permission of the gentleman I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no; let us wait until ten o'clock. I will move in ten minutes that the committee rise.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I move to amend that paragraph by striking out the $3,000 for the the salary of the Commissioner of Education.

I take this opportunity of making some general remarks upon the question involved in this paragraph. I understand that this Bureau of Education originated in the Fortieth Congress, and at that time the appropriation asked for was only $5,000. Now an appropriation of $40,000 is asked for. I would not oppose an appropriation of $5,000 for the purpose of enabling the Commissioner or a clerk to obtain statistics from the different States in regard to the subject of education, but I am opposed to any extension of the dimensions of this department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman from Maryland, what is the intention of the amendment? If the words "$3,000" are stricken out, it will leave the words "for the Commissioner of Education," with no salary fixed.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I will withdraw that amendment and move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I yield for that motion to be made.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman to wait until ten o'clock, and then I will move to rise. The chairman of the Committee on Education, my colleague, [Mr. MONROE,] desires to be heard on this motion.

Mr. BUCKNER. And we want to be heard, too.

Mr. SENER. I object to debate, and call for the regular order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask gentlemen to allow my colleague [Mr. MONROE] to be heard, as a matter of courtesy.

Mr. BUCKNER. I insist upon my motion.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. BUCKNER; and upon a division there were—ayes 26, noes 52.

Mr. SENER. No quorum voted.

Mr. GARFIELD. It does not require a quorum for the committee to refuse to rise.

Mr. SENER. It takes a quorum to do business.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman insists upon tellers the Chair will appoint them.

Mr. SENER. I insist upon tellers.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I ask——

Mr. SENER. I object to debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the committee to give way to the gentleman to please him.

Mr. SENER. I have rights here.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly, and we will help you get them. Let the question be again taken.

The question was again taken upon the motion that the committee rise; and upon a division there were—ayes 4, noes 61.

Mr. SENER. That is not a quorum. I insist upon tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SENER and Mr. O'BRIEN were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there was 1 in the affirmative.

Mr. SENER. I do not call for a further count.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now yield to my colleague, [Mr. MONROE.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] is entitled to the floor on his motion to strike out the pending paragraph.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The committee is in such a condition that I decline to speak upon this question to-night, and will yield my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE,] the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor.

The question was then taken by a viva voce vote on the motion to strike out the paragraph, and the Chairman announced that it was not adopted.

Mr. BECK. I call for a division upon that question. I supposed that gentlemen intended to debate this subject. I am in earnest. I want this whole paragraph stricken out.

Mr. MONROE. I was quite ready to make some remarks; but as no one had given any reason for striking out the paragraph, it seemed to me to be entirely superfluous for me to rise in my place and defend an established Bureau of the Government here in Washington.

Mr. O'BRIEN. In reply to the gentleman, I wish to say that I think I can give good and sufficient reasons——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not now in order. The committee is voting on the motion to strike out; and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has called for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 55.

Mr. O'BRIEN. That is not a quorum, and I call for tellers.

Mr. GARFIELD. If a further count is insisted upon——

Mr. BECK. I insist upon it.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then, in view of the lateness of the hour, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and, Mr. TYNER having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HOSKINS reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BELL: A paper for the establishment of a post-route in Georgia, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BUFFINTON: The petition of merchants, ship-owners, and ship-masters of Provincetown, Massachusetts, for the abolition of the system of compulsory pilotage on all ships or vessels duly registered or enrolled, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of merchants, ship-owners, and ship-masters of Providence, Rhode Island, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. BUNDY: The petition of Sylvester McDaniel, Charles Gates, and 141 others, of Lawrence and Gallia Counties, Ohio, for a post-route from Ironton, in Lawrence County, to Rodney, in Gallia County, Ohio, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. PLATT, of Virginia: The petition of Amelia A. H. Richards, administratrix of the estate of Felix Richards, to be compensated for property taken and used by the United States, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of R. Raglan, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana: One hundred and eighty-four petitions from citizens in different parts of the United States, for the passage of a law authorizing the manufacture of patent-right articles by others than the owners of patent-rights upon payment of a reasonable royalty thereon, severally to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. WOODFORD: The petition of George H. Moore and 92 others, for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1179) granting increased pensions to disabled soldiers, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of John S. Phillips and 11 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of L. Crandell and 15 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of J. M. Clay and 21 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition W. F. H. Getty and 21 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of William L. Drain and 22 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Titus E. Dodge and 34 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of George Scrafford and 37 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Frank Von Duzen and 39 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Calvin P. Kendig and 59 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of John N. Humphrey and 62 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of S. F. Kimball and 65 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of William Mulligan and 70 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Lucius P. Bird and 73 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of John B. Jones and 89 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of E. C. Parkinson and 5 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of John G. Copley and 10 others, of similar import, to the same committee.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 24, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3091) to release J. W. Bennett from political disabilities was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending the passage of a law conferring jurisdiction upon general courts-martial concurrent with that of the courts in the States and Territories in the trial of military persons charged with certain crimes; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting a copy of his adjusted quarterly accounts of receipts and expenditures of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Yearly Meeting of New York of the religious Society of Friends, asking Congress to adopt and recommend to other nations the adoption of arbitration for the settlement of international differences, instead of war; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FENTON presented the petition of William R. Glover, Thomas W. Mather, and others, praying that their claim for compensation and damages on account of the non-fulfillment on the part of the United States of a contract made between them and the Postmaster-General, dated at Washington City, District of Columbia, January 21, 1853, and modified May 20, 1853, for carrying the mails on route No. 5102, express and way lines, from Louisville, Kentucky, to New Orleans, Louisiana, for the term of four years, be restored to the docket of the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAMLIN presented a petition of citizens of Eastport, Maine, praying for the enactment of such laws as will abolish the present system of compulsory pilotage on all ships or vessels duly registered or enrolled at all harbors, rivers, and places within the jurisdiction of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. STEVENSON presented the petition, with accompanying papers, of Gideon M. Hazen, of Knoxville, Tennessee, praying reimbursement for cotton taken from him by the Union soldiers under General Burnside in the winter of 1863; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GORDON presented a memorial of the Medical Association of Georgia, in favor of the enactment of such laws as will increase the efficiency of the Medical Department of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Pilots' Association of Savannah, Georgia, praying that no bill may be passed prohibiting compulsory pilotage on vessels, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McCREERY presented the memorial of Payne, James & Co., asking compensation for property taken at Nashville, Tennessee, by the United States during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 571) to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to construct a branch, and to change the location of its road within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 723) to repeal a part of an act making appropriations for the payment of teachers in the public schools in the District of Columbia, and providing for the levy of a tax to reimburse the same," approved April 18, 1874, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 224) to incorporate the Washington City Inebriate Asylum in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, who were by a resolution of the Senate instructed to inquire as to the amount of gas consumed and paid for by the Government at Washington, whether its illuminating power is constantly tested, and whether its cost cannot properly be diminished, beg leave to submit a report with a bill.

The bill (S. No. 733) regulating gas-works was read and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I shall, at the earliest moment after this bill and the report have been printed, and Senators have had time to read the report, endeavor to call up the bill for the action of the Senate at once on the subject. The committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

The committee was discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1414) granting a pension to Susan Bennett, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2676) granting a pension to Thomas McKinster, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 700) for the relief of Robert Love, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 678) granting a pension to Josephine D. Thomas, to report it adversely. We find in the papers that a pension has already been granted at the Pension Office. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 7) for the creation of a court for the adjudication and disposition of certain moneys received into the Treasury under an award made by the tribunal of arbitration constituted by virtue of the first article of the treaty concluded at Washington the 8th of May, A. D. 1871, between the United States of America and the Queen of Great Britain, to report the same back with amendments. The amendments are to make the bill precisely as it passed the Senate at the last session. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the various petitions on the subject.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1691) for the relief of Thomas Ridgway, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 734) to confirm the sale of land in Kansas made by Dudley Tucker, a Shawnee Indian; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 714) to provide for a commission upon the subject of postal telegraphy; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLANAGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 735) for the relief of D. G. and D. A. Sanford, of Texas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 736) changing the present boundaries of the eastern and western judicial districts of Texas; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEVENSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 737) for the relief of Gideon M. Hazen, of Knoxville, East Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 738) to authorize nations and tribes of Indians in their corporate capacity and individual members and citizens thereof to sue and be sued in the courts of the United States of America; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 739) to prohibit national banks from loaning money on money as security, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONOVER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 740) for the relief of James Atkins, late collector internal revenue for the fourth district of Georgia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT OF COINAGE LAW.

Mr. SARGENT. About a week ago, during my absence from the Senate, the Finance Committee reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2878) to amend the twenty-fifth section of the coinage act of 1873 with an adverse report, and without discussion the bill was indefinitely postponed. As it is a bill affecting the mints of the United States and very largely the Pacific coast, I ask the favor of the Senate that the vote whereby the bill was indefinitely postponed be reconsidered, and that it be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee. I do not ask any other action now except that it go on the Calendar. I suppose the motion only can be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the Senator was absent at the time the adverse report was made by me I think it is right that the request should be granted. I did not notice that he was absent when I made the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The order will be entered if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

STAMPING OF DOCUMENTS IN THE SOUTH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further morning business the Calendar will be proceeded with.

The first bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 464) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and the several acts amendatory thereof; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Finance reported the bill with an amendment, to strike out the preamble and all after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That no instrument, document, writing, or paper of any description, required by law to be stamped, made, signed, or issued within the States of Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas, prior to the 1st day of July, 1865, shall be deemed or held as invalid and of no effect by reason of the failure to impose thereon the stamp or stamps required by law; but the rights of a purchaser in good faith prior to the passage of this act shall not be affected by anything herein contained.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. JOHNSTON. What is that bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I can state to the Senator from Virginia that the original bill was introduced by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON,] intended to give certain relief in cases in the South where during the war stamps were not attached to instruments and their legality has been called in question. The substitute proposed by the committee is free from objection, and met the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. It is merely intended to allow, in certain cases, documents to be validated notwithstanding they were not stamped during the war.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have no objection. I only wanted to understand the bill.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD SAVAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the next bill on the Calendar.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1763) to permit Edward Savage, of Minnesota, to enter one quarter-section of the public lands, or any legal subdivision of the same; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill allows Edward Savage, of Minnesota, to enter one quarter-section of the public lands within the State of Minnesota, or any legal subdivision of the same, under the general or soldiers' homestead law, or under the act approved March 3, 1873, entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on western prairies."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE OVER THE WILLAMETTE RIVER.

Mr. DENNIS. I ask permission to call up the bill (S. No. 482) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Willamette River at Salem, in the State of Oregon; which is a matter of great interest to that locality.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think we had better go on with the Calendar unless there is something very special about this bill. I think we shall make progress by adhering to the Calendar.

Mr. DENNIS. Mr. President——

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If we keep on with the Calendar we shall reach all these cases in two or three days; but if its regular course is interrupted we shall never get through.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would appeal to the Senator from Maine. This is a local matter in which our people are very much interested. It will not take a moment's time. The parties are standing prepared to furnish the money to build the bridge, and are only waiting for the passage of this bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But the bill is in the ordinary course. What is done in one case it is reasonable to do in another.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is the only thing I have asked since I have been here. It will not take a moment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not wish to take up time; but why not go on regularly with the Calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. DENNIS] to take up the bill indicated by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 482) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Willamette River at Salem, in the State of Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section of the bill makes it lawful for the county commissioners of the county of Marion, in the State of Oregon, or for those commissioners jointly with the county commissioners of the county of Polk, in that State, to build a bridge across the Willamette River at the city of Salem, at a point to be selected and determined by the board of commissioners of Marion County, or by that board jointly with the board of commissioners of Polk County. There is to be placed in the bridge a draw of not less than two hundred feet in width, with a center abutment not to exceed forty feet wide and ten feet above the water line, leaving a passage on each side of the abutment of not less than eighty feet in width, and so constructed as not to impede the navigation of the river and allow the easy passage of vessels through the bridge.

The second section reserves the right to alter or amend the act so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of the river by the construction of the bridge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to have the committee explain this bill, and whether it is based upon the same principles that our other legislation upon this subject has been. The Senator from Oregon no doubt can tell us.

Mr. MITCHELL. The bill has the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We cannot discuss the merits of the bill on this motion, though I have no objection to its being taken up. This bill does not provide, as all our later legislation has done, that any alteration or change in the bridge necessary to navigation shall be made at the expense of the people who put it up, and not at the expense of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to putting that in if the Senator desires to offer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by adding at the end of the second section:

And any change needful to that end—

That is, to the removal of obstructions—shall be made at the expense of the counties in which such bridge shall be erected.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. STOCKTON. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HOWE. Is that worth while?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot answer that question.

Mr. HOWE. I propose to leave it to the Senate. [Laughter.] I have ascertained lately that we are very much pressed for time; that the public business is suffering, and I do not know of any other business that is suffering; and why not sit here to-morrow and see if we cannot relieve this suffering to some extent? I hope the Senator will not press the motion.

Mr. STOCKTON. I think, myself, that the press of business is on the committees much more than on the Senate. That is my own experience, and, I think, that of almost every Senator; and in order to get along with our business here we want more time in committee. I think that is the general sentiment of the Senate, and we ought to have Saturday for committee business.

Mr. HOWE. I did not know where the suffering was. I am glad to be informed. If it is the committees that need time, that is a good reason for adjourning over. Had we not better adjourn over for a week from Monday and give the committees time to block out their work?

Mr. STOCKTON. Do I understand the Senator to move that as an amendment to my motion?

Mr. HOWE. I would rather not move it upon any information that I have; but it occurred to me if the suffering is really where the Senator from New Jersey suggests, we had better do that in order to secure relief, for I do not believe many committees will sit to-morrow whether the Senate does or not.

Mr. STOCKTON. I do not know what committees the gentleman is on; but it is a matter of great astonishment to me that a gentleman who has been so long in this body and on so many committees should not be aware that the laboring committees of this Senate at the present moment are so pressed that it is absolutely necessary they should have time in order that business shall progress. That he should be unaware of that fact is to me a matter of great surprise.

Mr. HOWE. The public cannot suffer because of my ignorance. I accept the notice of the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the yeas were 30.

Mr. HOWE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We ought not to have the yeas and nays without some discussion, I am sure. [Laughter.] I merely wish to say in all seriousness that I think there is great force in what the Senator from New Jersey has said about the press being rather upon committees at this time than upon the Senate itself, except the general debate on the state of the nation which we have of course chronically. I know that in a committee of which I am a member, and in respect to which the Chair can bear me out, there is a great mass of business which is pressing for time which we do not find the opportunity to keep up with; and to have therefore a spare day to begin in the morning and take until night will be an advantage.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 32, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bogy, Cameron, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Flanagan, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Johnston, Kelly, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson, Ramsey, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Tipton, and Windom—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Gilbert, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Oglesby, Pratt, Sargent, Sherman, and Wadleigh—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boreman, Boutwell, Brownlow, Buckingham, Conkling, Cooper, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Maryland, Hitchcock, Jones, Lewis, Logan, McCreery, Morton, Norwood, Pease, Robertson, Schurz, Scott, Spencer, Stewart, Thurman, West, and Wright—29.

So the motion was agreed to.

STREET RAILWAY IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My colleague, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, [Mr. LEWIS,] is detained from his seat, not being very well. I am requested by him to ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2102) to incorporate the Capitol, North O street, and South Washington Railroad.

Mr. SARGENT. I think we had better proceed with the Calendar regularly. We shall reach this bill in turn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is hardly worth while to take up that bill now. I object to it. Let us go on with the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I beg to interrupt the reading. I do not think that bill ought to be taken up; and I raise this question, whether it is not liable to objection after the title is read without the bill being read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the reading has progressed far enough to inform the Senate what the bill is, that being the only object of the reading, the Chair will submit the question now to the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope the Senate will not proceed to the consideration of that bill. It is obvious that it cannot be disposed of in the morning hour this morning; and this course of proceeding destroys the entire effect of the order to go on with the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the bill will not be taken up this morning, because it is a very important bill involving the propriety of allowing a railroad like a gridiron over a considerable part of the city and in part over the only avenue left in the city that is free from railways for private driving and for the communication of citizens clear across the city. As we are going to have a beautiful city here, I trust we shall consider carefully a bill that has a provision of that kind. I do not wish to discuss the merits; but I hope it will be allowed to go over so that Senators may look into it and be prepared to consider it when it may come up.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I will state that I make this motion at the request of my colleague, and not at my own instance. If there is any objection, I shall not press the bill now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw his motion?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, sir.

JACOB PARMERTER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills on the Calendar will be proceeded with.

The bill (H. R. No. 1562) for the relief of Jacob Parmerter, reimbursing him for defending a suit brought against him for an official act, was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no written report of the Senate committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to know what the facts are.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report from the House committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to object to the bill. I only wish to have it understood by the Senate, because it is only two or three days ago that the Judiciary Committee had a bill to indemnify a person who had been sued and who beat his antagonist, for doing some official act, and we reported against it, and the Senate indefinitely postponed the bill without question, upon the ground that the officer stood like any other citizen who had been sued for some act that he had a right to do and that the Government could not assume to pay the expenses of everybody who was wrongfully sued in the country, whether an officer or not. It may be that this question about collectors stands upon some other ground. I only wish to have the attention of the Senate to it, and to know what the facts are.

Mr. FENTON. I think my colleague is familiar with the facts in this case; but if there is any question about it I suggest that it lie over until he returns. Let it be passed over informally.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it go over on the Calendar.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state what the facts are. This collector was sued for some official act while he was collector, and through neglect on the part of the law officers a judgment was rendered against him. The unanimous opinion of the Committee on Commerce was that the money should be refunded to him. The case is entirely familiar to the senior Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It had better lie over until the Senator from New York returns.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let it be laid aside informally so as to come up on call.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will go over on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside and the next bill on the Calendar reported.

BARK AZOR.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2206) to grant an American register to the bark Azor; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the bark Azor, an American-built vessel employed as a packet between the island of Fayal and the United States, which had been transferred to a British subject in 1863, and retransferred to the heirs of Charles W. Dabney, late consul of the United States in the island of Fayal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. No. 3093) to relieve David A. Telfair from political disability; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 1039) for the relief of John B. Weber, late colonel of the Eighteenth Regiment Corps d'Afrique;

A bill (H. R. No. 1581) for the relief of George S. Wright, administrator of the estate of John T. Wright, deceased;

A bill (H. R. No. 200) for the relief of settlers on the Cherokee strip, in Kansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 1575) for the relief of Richard H. Swift;

A bill (H. R. No. 2193) to ratify an agreement with certain Ute Indians in Colorado, and to make an appropriation for carrying out the same; and

A bill (H. R. No. 668) relative to private contracts or agreements made with Indians prior to May 21, 1872.

PROTECTION OF TIMBER LANDS AND RESERVATIONS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 524) to protect the timber lands of the United States, Government reservations, and lands purchased by the United States; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section provides that if any person or persons shall knowingly and unlawfully cut, or shall knowingly aid, assist, or be employed in unlawfully cutting, or shall wantonly destroy or injure, or procure to be wantonly destroyed or injured, any timber tree or any shade or ornamental tree, or any other kind of tree, standing, growing, or being upon any lands of the United States, which, in pursuance of law, have been reserved, or which have been purchased by the United States for any public use, every such person or persons so offending, on conviction thereof before any circuit or district court of the United States, shall, for every such offense, pay a fine not exceeding $500, or shall be imprisoned not exceeding twelve months.

The second section provides that if any person or persons shall knowingly and unlawfully break or destroy any fence, wall, hedge, or gate inclosing any lands of the United States, which have, in pursuance of any law, been reserved or purchased by the United States for any public use, every such person so offending, on conviction, shall, for every such offense, pay a fine not exceeding $200, or be imprisoned not exceeding six months.

By the third section, if any person or persons shall knowingly and unlawfully break, open, or destroy any gate, fence, hedge, or wall inclosing any lands of the United States, reserved or purchased as aforesaid, and shall drive any cattle, horses, or hogs upon the lands aforesaid for the purpose of destroying the grass or trees on the said grounds, or where they may destroy the grass or trees, or if any such person or persons shall knowingly permit his or their cattle, horses, or hogs to enter through any inclosures upon the lands of the United States aforesaid, where the cattle, horses, or hogs may or can destroy the grass or trees or other property of the United States on the said land, every such person or persons so offending, on conviction, shall pay a fine not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned not exceeding twelve months.

Mr. HAMLIN. Some Senator who is more familiar with this matter than I am, I hope, will answer this question: Will not this bill exclude the vast herds of cattle that are driven into the mountains for the purpose of pasturing in the summer from remaining there? It seems to me the language would exclude them, and make all the men who are herding their cattle there for the summer for fattening purposes trespassers under the bill, and subject to its penalties. If so it is very broad in its scope. Some Senator who knows more about it ought to give us the information.

Mr. SPRAGUE. This bill is for the purpose of providing against trespassers upon the small reservations of the United States. The bill was prepared by the district attorney at Louisville, approved by the Secretary of War, carefully considered by the Committee on Public Lands; and the point indicated by the Senator from Maine was especially considered by that committee. It was thought the language would not justify the construction put upon it by the Senator.

Mr. SARGENT. The object of the bill, I have no question, is good; but the language is general. I suppose the Territory of Alaska is land purchased by the United States for public purposes. It is possible that very much of the land west of the Mississippi was purchased by the Government of the United States for public purposes. This bill by its terms would apply to the Territory of Alaska, or any great tract of country for which the Government has ever paid any money, by treaty or otherwise. It seems to me it would be very much better to recommit this bill to make it answer its unquestionably good purpose; that is, to protect small reservations, to prevent people trespassing upon small reservations reserved for particular purposes by the Government, either to cut timber or otherwise. But in its present form, it seems to me that the bill goes very far beyond the purpose which was stated by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. I move that the bill be recommitted to that committee.

Mr. OGLESBY. The necessity, if I remember it, for this bill arose out of persons taking the liberty of going upon the grounds that have been reserved for soldiers' asylums and soldiers' homes. There is one such institution in Kentucky, near Lexington, I believe; and when the officers in charge attempted to enforce penalties against such persons, under the State law, there was some technical objection, and when they undertook to prosecute them in the courts of the United States there was some technical objection. The purpose is simply to have a law to prevent depredations on these reservations, particularly for soldiers' homes, so that grounds beautified for such purposes may not be damaged and destroyed by turning in oxen and cattle upon them at the pleasure of persons living in the neighborhood. That is the foundation of the bill. It was not contemplated that its provisions should apply to the public domain in any sense. It was drawn with reference to the special object which has been stated. The Attorney-General carefully considered the bill after it had been presented by the district attorney of Kentucky, and he submitted it with his favorable recommendation to the committee. The committee bestowed considerable care upon it, and, I believe, unanimously recommended its passage. If it is open to any objections that are urged to it here I do not care to object to its going back, though I do not know that the committee can do anything better by its going back. But I do not understand that it was within the purview or purposes of the bill to make persons liable to damages for their stock running upon uninclosed public land, upon public prairie land, or timber land.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does it apply to the live-oak plantations?

Mr. OGLESBY. I think it applies to any reservations that are fenced, and where efforts have been made to surround and protect them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The live-oak plantations in the South are not fenced; but it is of very great importance to the Government to punish people who cut down the live-oak, as is being done now in that section, as I understand. Therefore I suggest to the Senator and the committee, that if this bill does not now cover cases of willful trespass in cutting down the live-oak timber of the United States, which is of very great value, it ought to be so adjusted that it will provide for that case.

Mr. OGLESBY. The bill arose out of depredations upon public lands about reservations for soldiers' homes, soldiers' asylums, and soldiers' hospitals. That was the ground of complaint, and that is what this bill is proposed to remedy. I do not think it was contemplated to go beyond that.

Mr. HAMLIN. I take it every Senator would concur in the object which has been stated by the Senator from Illinois. Nobody can doubt that such a law as he indicates would be necessary; but the point here suggested is that the language of the bill as it now stands is too broad; that it would make all persons trespassers who enter upon public lands that were purchased for public use. I think all our lands are purchased for some purpose, and they are purchased for use. It is better, I think, to recommit the bill for the purpose of limiting it specifically to the object named, and adding what the Senator from Vermont has so well suggested as being now without necessary provisions of law. I hope, therefore, the bill will be recommitted, as I think we can pass it sooner in that way than by attempting to amend it in the Senate.

Mr. OGLESBY. I have no right to speak for the Committee on Public Lands; but I certainly have no objection to its being recommitted for perfection.

Mr. HAMLIN. You will get it through quicker by that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

LUCIUS A. ROUNTREE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 363) for the relief of Lucius A. Rountree, which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of War to cause to be paid to Lucius A. Rountree the full pay and emoluments of a first lieutenant of infantry of Company A, Forty-sixth Regiment of Missouri Volunteers, from the 13th of September, 1864, to the 3d of December, 1864, deducting therefrom any amount he may have received as an enlisted man during the time specified.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM J. SCOTT.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1935) for the relief of William J. Scott, late aid-de-camp on the staff of General Spear; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary of the Treasury is by the bill authorized to pay to William J. Scott the pay and emoluments of an aid-de-camp, with the rank of first lieutenant, from the 21st of May, 1862, to the 30th of October, 1862, deducting what pay, if any, he may have received as an aid-de-camp on the staff of Brigadier-General James G. Spear.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is there a report accompanying that bill? If so, I should like to have it read. I desire to see the principle on which it proceeds.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. LOGAN on the 10th of March:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1935) for the relief of William J. Scott, having had the same under consideration, report as follows:

The evidence on file shows clearly that claimant was appointed aid-de-camp on the staff of Brigadier-General Spear, and served honorably and faithfully as such from May 21, 1862, to October 30, 1862, never being absent from duty. But the evidence further shows, as is admitted by petitioner in his clear and candid statement of the facts, that the appointment was illegal, said claimant not holding any office at the time. An attempt was make to have him appointed lieutenant of Company I, dating back to the time of his appointment as aid-de-camp; but he was never mustered in as such, and in fact another person was appointed and mustered in the office to which he supposed he was appointed.

The service having been faithfully performed, at a time of urgent necessity, the simple question to be decided is, will the Government pay a reasonable compensation for the services rendered by claimant? Your committee believe that equity requires this to be done; and as said claimant supposed he was serving as second lieutenant, your committee believe that the pay and emoluments of a second lieutenant would be a reasonable compensation, and therefore recommend that said bill be amended by substituting the word "second" for the word "first" in the fifth line, and with this amendment that the bill be passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is one amendment recommended by the committee, that does not appear in the printed bill, which ought to be voted upon. The report shows that he is to be paid at the rate payable to second lieutenants, instead of as the original bill says, as first lieutenant, although it does not appear on the face of the bill itself, by some mistake.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be amended in that respect so as to conform to the report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I move to amend the bill by striking out "as an aid-de-camp on the staff of Brigadier-General Thomas G. Spear" and insert "during said period;" so as to read:

Deducting what pay, if any, he may have received during said period.

The pay which is to be deducted by the bill as it stands is pay as aid-de-camp. If he has received any pay in a soldierly capacity during that period, that ought to be deducted to make it right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

STATE OF LOUISIANA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired and the Senate resumes the consideration of the bill (S. No. 446) to restore the rights of the State of Louisiana, on which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, some days ago the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] gave notice that to-day he desired as chairman of the Select Committee on Transportation to make a report and submit some remarks. With a view to give him an opportunity to do so during the day, I shall cut short what I have further to submit upon the pending bill.

[Mr. MERRIMON proceeded with his remarks, concluding the speech commenced yesterday by him. His speech in full will be found in the Appendix.]

THE TRANSPORTATION QUESTION.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask consent of the Senate to present the report of the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, in submitting this report I deem it my duty to state, as briefly as the nature of the subject will permit, the conclusions and recommendations of the committee, and some of the leading facts and considerations upon which they are based. Whenever convenient I shall take the liberty of employing without further acknowledgment the language of the report. It is perhaps unnecessary to say that an investigation covering a field so broad, embracing interests so vast and complex, and involving an examination of details almost infinite in variety and number, requires more than a single vacation, and that the pressure of business during the session of the Senate has afforded but little opportunity for the preparation of a report commensurate with the importance of the questions involved. The committee do not pretend to have treated the subject exhaustively.

In Great Britain parliamentary committees and commissions have been engaged upon the same subjects for more than thirty years, and yet even in that country, comparatively so small in geographical extent, with only 15,000 miles of railway, and with a Parliament of unlimited powers, the problems of cheap transportation and governmental regulation of railways are still unsolved.

In the State of Massachusetts a most able and untiring commission, headed by Mr. Charles Francis Adams, jr., have devoted five or six years to a similar investigation, and yet they by no means consider the subject exhausted.

It was hardly to be expected, therefore, that a committee who were charged with the duty of investigating and reporting upon a transportation system embracing 70,000 miles of railway and more than 30,000 miles of water-routes, could within the limited time at their command, do full justice to all of the important questions involved.

The following is a brief résumé of the principal subjects which have especially commanded the attention of the committee, and which with others are embraced in their report:

First. The annual average price of wheat and corn during the five years 1868 to 1872, inclusive, at Chicago and Milwaukee and at points west of these cities; at Buffalo, Montreal, New York, Saint Louis, New Orleans, and Liverpool.

Second. The quantity of grain received and shipped from all the lake ports, and ports on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, and ports on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts.

Third. The total shipments of grain to the States on the Atlantic sea-board; the quantity distributed between the western and eastern borders of these States; the total quantity consumed in the New England States; the Atlantic States south of New England; and the total quantity exported; also the quantity of grain shipped to the Gulf States, and the quantity exported from these States; the quantity exported to Canada and also from the Pacific coast to foreign countries.

Fourth. The shipments of grain from the West by the lakes and Saint Lawrence River; by the lakes, Erie Canal, and Hudson River; by the lakes to the east end of Lake Erie; thence by rail toward the sea-board; and by the "all-rail" lines from lake ports and interior points in the West, to the East and to the South; and the quantity shipped southward by the Mississippi River.

Fifth. The average annual freight charges from point to point are presented as follows: From points on the Mississippi River to Chicago and Milwaukee; Chicago to Buffalo; Chicago to Montreal by lake and Saint Lawrence River, and by rail; Chicago to New York by lake and canal, by lake and rail, and by all rail; Saint Louis to New Orleans; New Orleans to Liverpool, New York to Liverpool, and Montreal to Liverpool. These averages have been deduced from computations based upon the quantity shipped and the average rates which prevailed each month.

Sixth. Great Britain being the principal grain-importing country, very full information in regard to the sources of her supply, the quantity received from each country for thirteen years, the rates of freight from each country to England for a period of ten years, and the average prices in the English markets of wheat and corn imported from each country during a period of thirteen years. This information has been obtained from the British reports on trade and navigation, and from data furnished especially for the committee by the British Board of Trade through the United States consuls at London and Liverpool.

Seventh. Some general facts are presented in regard to the commerce of the Pacific coast.

One of the most important branches of the work commanding the attention of the committee has been that of the improvement and construction of water lines of transport. The lines which the committee have personally examined and most carefully investigated are—

First. The proposed Caughnawaga and Lake Champlain route, from the river Saint Lawrence to New York.

Second. The Oswego and Oneida Canal route, from Oswego to New York.

Third. The Erie Canal route, from Buffalo to New York.

Fourth. The James River and Kanawha Canal, or central water line, from Richmond to the Ohio River.

Fifth. The Atlantic and Great Western Canal, from the Tennessee River to Savannah, Georgia.

Sixth. The proposed ship-canal across the peninsula of Florida.

Seventh. The improvement of the Ohio River.

Eighth. The improvement of the Mississippi above the Falls of Saint Anthony; between Saint Paul and Saint Louis; and between Saint Louis and New Orleans.

Ninth. The Fort Saint Philip Canal, and other plans for improving the mouth of the Mississippi River.

Tenth. The Wisconsin and Fox Rivers improvement.

Eleventh. The Illinois and Hennepin Canal.

Twelfth. The Niagara Ship-canal.

In addition to these routes the committee have obtained information in regard to the canals of Pennsylvania, and the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal.

The inquiries of the committee in regard to railroads have embraced among other subjects the following:

Combinations between different lines; the consolidation or amalgamation of lines; fast-freight lines; the issuing of stock not representing money paid in for construction, a device commonly known as "stock-watering" or capitalization of net earnings; competition between railroads and water lines; the relative cheapness of the various methods of transportation; the regulation or control of existing railroads by States and by the national Government, involving the questions as to the limitation of the powers of Congress under the commercial clause of the Constitution; the construction of one or more double-track freight railroads by the Government, to be operated by the Government, or leased to parties who shall operate such road or roads subject to Government control; and the chartering of freight railroads to be constructed and managed by private corporations, such roads to receive aid from the Government and to submit to governmental regulation with regard to their rates of freight and the facilities which they shall afford.

A thorough elucidation of these topics involves a study of railway abuses in all their various phases, and the whole question of the economy of transport by rail and by water.

In entering upon the investigation directed by the resolution of the Senate the committee were fully impressed with the importance and difficulties of their work, and they have assiduously devoted themselves to its discharge. The absence of official information concerning the transportation interests of the country has added to their embarrassments. Perhaps the most extraordinary feature of our governmental policy touching the vast internal commerce of the nation, is the apparent indifference and neglect with which it has been treated. Careful statistics have been prepared of our foreign commerce, while those appertaining to the much greater interests of internal trade seem to have been almost wholly, and in some cases intentionally, ignored. No officer of the Government has ever been charged with the duty of collecting information on this subject, and the legislator who would inform himself concerning the nature, extent, value, or necessities of our internal commerce, or of its relations to our foreign trade, must patiently grope his way through the statistics of individual boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and transportation companies. Even the census reports, which purport to contain an inventory of the property and business of the people, and which in some matters descend to the minutest details, are silent with regard to the billions of dollars represented by railways, ships, and other instruments of internal transportation, and to the much greater values of commodities annually moved by them.

We have no means of estimating accurately the magnitude of our internal trade; but its colossal proportions may be inferred from two or three known facts. The value of commodities moved by the railroads in 1872 is estimated at over $10,000,000,000, and their gross receipts reached the enormous sum of $473,241,055. The commerce of the cities of the Ohio River alone has been carefully estimated at over $1,600,000,000 per annum. Some conception of the immense trade carried on upon the northern lakes may be formed from the fact that during the entire season of navigation, in 1872, an average of one vessel every nine minutes, day and night, passed Fort Gratiot light-house, near Port Huron. It is probably safe to say that the value of our internal commerce is ten times greater than our trade with all foreign nations, and that the amount annually paid for transportation is more than double the entire revenues of the Government.

The indifference which has hitherto prevailed on this subject may be partially accounted for by the fact that great moral questions, exciting political issues, and a terrible struggle for the maintenance of national unity, have engrossed the public mind. All of these questions being now happily settled or in process of speedy adjustment, other issues, relating to the material welfare of the people, and the enhancement of national wealth and power, force themselves into recognition. Among those questions none are more important, and none more thoroughly absorb public attention than that which it has been the duty of the committee to consider.

Cheap and ample facilities for the interchange of commodities between the widely separated sections of our country, and with foreign nations, constitute the prime conditions of national progress and prosperity. By reason of the failure of existing systems of transportation to fully meet these conditions commerce is impeded, agriculture languishes, labor is inadequately rewarded, food is unnecessarily taxed, exportations are diminished, and nearly all the most important business interests of the country are depressed. Hence the most important problem now pressing for solution is, "How shall cheaper and better facilities for transportation be provided?"

PROPOSED REMEDIES.

For the accomplishment of this object various measures have been suggested, all of which are embraced in one or more of the following general propositions, namely:

First. Competition between railways and its promotion, by additional lines without regulation.

Second. Direct congressional regulation of railway transportation, under the power to regulate commerce among the several States.

Third. Indirect regulation, and promotion of competition through the agency of one or more lines of railway, to be owned or controlled by the Government.

Fourth. The improvement of natural water-ways, and the construction of artificial channels of water communication.

Earnestly endeavoring to solve the problem intrusted to them, the committee have given to each of these propositions the most careful attention. At the threshold of their inquiry they were confronted by questions touching the nature, extent, and application of the national power to regulate commerce among the several States, and as to the practicability of so exercising it as to effect the desired object.

In the discussion of that power they have intentionally omitted all considerations of the dangers of its exercise. Whatever those dangers may be, they address themselves to the sound discretion of Congress, in view of its responsibility to the people, but do not in the slightest degree affect the inquiry as to the existence of the power itself. To argue that because a governmental power may be abused it therefore does not exist, is to contradict facts patent in the constitution of every civilized nation. It would in fact be impossible to construct a government that could maintain its own existence, without giving it powers which may be used to the injury of the people, and even to its own ruin. Take, for instance, the war powers of our own Government. Congress may to-morrow, without any cause whatever, declare war against all the nations of the earth, and yet no one will argue that because of this liability to abuse the power to declare war does not exist.

The power to lay and collect taxes may be used to the injury of the people in many ways, but no one doubts its existence. So of many of the other acknowledged powers of the Government. The wise and illustrious men who embodied in our Constitution the element of free government were careful to delegate to Congress all powers essential to the existence and progress of a great nation; but at the same time they provided an ample safeguard against the abuse of such powers by making those to whom they were intrusted directly responsible to the people. In fact the theory upon which they constructed our Government was that the people themselves exercise the powers granted, through their special agents appointed for that purpose; and this being not only the theory but the practical effect of the Constitution, there was less danger in conferring power on Congress than upon the legislative department of any other nation.

"Where there is a doubt as to whether a certain power has been granted, the inquiry very naturally and properly arises, is it unusual in its character and unknown in other governments?" If so, the keenest scrutiny will be invited and the most satisfactory demonstration of its existence will be required. "But if, on the contrary, it be a power which every government in Christendom is admitted to possess, which has always been exercised by every government hitherto existing, a power essential to the progress of civilization, without which agriculture must be depressed and commerce and trade must be impeded and intercourse obstructed, then the inquirer will approach the investigation in a different spirit. While he will still require satisfactory evidence, he will be prepared to give a favorable ear to what may be adduced to establish the fact of such a power having been granted." There can be no doubt to which class of powers the one under discussion belongs.

It being conceded that certain powers over interstate commerce are delegated to Congress by the Constitution, the inquiry is not what powers ought to have been granted, but what is the nature, extent, and application of the powers actually delegated?

In the discussion of this question the report maintains the following propositions:

First. That the powers of Congress, whatever they may be, are derived directly from the people of the several States, and not from the States themselves.

Second. That prior to the adoption of the Constitution the powers now possessed by the General Government constituted a part of the supreme sovereignty which resided in the people of the several States; and that the sovereignty of the people of the States over commerce was absolute, excepting only as it was limited by the Articles of Confederation.

Third. That whatever elements and attributes of sovereignty appertained to these powers when they existed in the people of the several States were transferred to the General Government with the powers themselves by the Constitution, and that they now exist in Congress as fully and completely as they formerly did in the people of the States, subject only to the express limitations of the Constitution.

Fourth. That the grant of powers to Congress is an investment of power for the general advantage, in the hands of agents selected for that purpose, and hence they are not to be construed strictly and against the grantee, but according to the natural and obvious meaning of the language of the Constitution, taken in connection with the purposes for which they were conferred.

Fifth. That every important word in the clauses which confer the "power to regulate commerce among the several States," and to "make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying it into execution," has received legislative, executive, and judicial construction, and that under such construction the power of Congress to regulate interstate transportation by railroads, and to aid and facilitate commerce, is clearly established.

Sixth. That in the exercise of its specific powers, Congress is authorized under the grant of auxiliary powers, to employ such means as are appropriate and plainly adapted to their execution, and is not confined to means which are indispensably necessary; and that the courts will not inquire into the degree of necessity of any particular means that may be adopted.

Seventh. In the selection of means by which interstate commerce shall be regulated Congress in its discretion, and under its responsibility to the people, 1. May prescribe the rules by which the instruments, vehicles, and agents engaged in transporting commodities from one State into or through another shall be governed, whether such transportation is by land or by water; 2. It may appropriate money for the construction of railways or canals, when the same shall be necessary for the regulation of commerce; 3. It may incorporate a company with authority to construct them; 4. It may exercise the right of eminent domain within a State in order to provide for the construction of such railways or canals; or, 5. It may, in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, take for the public use, paying just compensation therefor, any existing railway or canal owned by private persons or corporations.

These propositions are discussed at length in the report of the committee, and the decisions of the courts from which they are deduced are there cited. I will, therefore, content myself for the present with the statement of conclusions, deferring until some future occasion the discussion of constitutional questions. Believing that the powers of the General Government are ample to provide any or all of the measures of relief indicated in the four general divisions of remedies just mentioned, I proceed to consider the practicability and probable results attainable by each.

1. COMPETITION BETWEEN RAILWAYS, AND ITS PROMOTION BY ADDITIONAL LINES.

In order to understand the nature, extent, and value of unregulated railway competition, I have carefully studied the history of railway combinations and consolidations in other countries, and find that however diverse the principles of government under which their systems have grown up, or the regulations which have been imposed by law, actual and effective competition between railways is unknown. Combination is the natural law of their development. Competition, which is so powerful a regulator in other commercial affairs, will not suffice to regulate railways unless it be itself regulated by some power higher than the motives of self-interest which govern railway managers.

In Great Britain, Parliament, with unlimited powers, having struggled in vain for forty years against amalgamation, has ceased to look for relief in voluntary competition. The actual effects of railway competition in that country, and the greater combinations and more powerful monopolies which it ultimately induced, have disheartened those who regarded it as the panacea for railway evils and abuses, and it is said that the present tendency of the public is toward state ownership as the only effectual remedy. The late parliamentary commission, after an exhaustive investigation of the whole subject, conclude their review of the history of railway amalgamation with the statement—

> That while committees and commissioners carefully chosen have for the last thirty years clung to one form of competition after another, it has nevertheless become more and more evident that competition must fail to do for railways what it does for ordinary trade, and that no means have yet been found by which competition can be permanently maintained. * * * It may be taken as a general rule that there is now no active competition between different railways in the matter of rates and fares. Whenever different companies run between the same places they arrange their prices. * * * And if a new railway should ever be started with the promise of lower rates, it is sure, after a short time, to arrange with its original rivals on a system of equal charges.

The experience of our own country accords with that of Great Britain in this regard.

The theory here, as in England, has always been that the transportation business, like other commercial affairs, would regulate itself on the principle of competition. On this theory our railroad system has attained its present gigantic proportions. Believing that additional lines would create and stimulate competition and thereby reduce rates, towns, cities, counties, and States have made haste to burden themselves with debt in order to secure the coveted boon. The General Government having never interfered, and until recently the States having made but little effort to control or direct it, the system has developed itself under the influence of the natural laws which govern that kind of business. Hence the tendencies and results evolved by the operation of those laws, if carefully studied by the light of the experience of other countries, will enable us to form an opinion as to what may be anticipated from railway competition in the future, if left to regulate itself by the ordinary laws of trade. That there is effective competition in the matter of charges at many points cannot be doubted, but that the same natural laws which have destroyed it in other countries are vigorously at work here, and will ultimately produce the same results, is also obvious. The history of railway combinations in Europe, and especially in Great Britain, discloses the fact that during the period of development, and while each corporation was struggling to appropriate to its exclusive control as large a district of country as possible, competition was very sharp. When by the consolidation of separate links through trunk lines were formed between the principal centers of population and trade, competition at once sprang up between those points. But self-interest very soon suggested to the competing companies that as the traffic must be divided, it was desirable to divide its profits between themselves rather than with the public. The result was an agreement as to rates and an end of competition. Having become strong and rich, the trunk lines began the work of extending their power by the construction of branches and the absorption of weaker lines extending into the adjacent districts. Then followed a great struggle for territorial dominion, during which sharp and active competition reappeared at numerous points in the contested districts. Its duration and vigor were measured chiefly by the relative strength of the giants contending for the prize, but the ultimate result was seldom long delayed, and never doubtful. By purchase, lease, arrangement of rates, or some other of the numerous forms of combination and consolidation, one point after another disappeared from the competing list, and finally the disputed territory passed under the exclusive control of one of the contestants. The same motives and influences which operated in Great Britain are rapidly producing similar results in this country.

Existing competition, whatever may be its extent and value, is gradually disappearing from the trunk lines, and is found mainly at points in the outlying districts from which these roads draw their support. The contest between the great companies for territorial dominion is still progressing in our country, and the struggle for control of the trade at some of the common termini and points of intersection of branch lines and feeders owned and operated by them, is apparent in the reduced charges which prevail at these places. The number of such competing points is, however, constantly diminishing as each of the great corporations absorbs, one after another, the inferior lines which have served as allies to its rival. Thus every additional absorption defines with constantly increasing precision the territorial boundaries of the district which is certainly and rapidly passing under its exclusive domination. The wide extent of our country and the colossal proportions of our railway system (equaling one-half of the railway mileage of the globe) require a longer time for complete development than in some of the states of Europe, and hence the influences which induce competition will extend through a longer period, but the ultimate result will probably be the same. And when the natural tendencies of corporate power working through railway organization shall have wrought out their inevitable conclusions, the magnitude of our combinations will probably be in proportion to the extent of the field in which they operate.

In illustration of the statement that competition has already substantially disappeared from the main trunk lines, take those which center in Chicago from the East—the Pennsylvania line, running to New York and Philadelphia; the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, running in connection with the Erie and New York Central; and the Michigan Central Railway, in connection with the last two, and also the Grand Trunk. These lines all have agents at Chicago, who meet together and agree on prices for east-bound freight; and the prices established by such agreement bind the eastern roads. Agents at the eastern termini meet in convention and agree upon the charges for western-bound freights.

The evidence taken by the committee shows that the principle upon which rates are adjusted on these lines is not what the services are actually worth, but "What are the rates charged by the water lines?" and "What will the property bear, in view of its movement to market?" During the winter months, when there is no water competition, the charges are usually so high as to prevent a large proportion of the crops which accumulate in the cities of Chicago and Milwaukee from going forward to market, and hence they remain in store awaiting reductions to be caused by the opening of water-routes. On the 1st of January, 1872, there was in store in Chicago and Milwaukee 2,516,597 bushels of wheat, and during the months of January, February, and March there were received at those ports 1,578,790 bushels. Of this total quantity in store and received, amounting to 4,095,487 bushels, only 286,000, or about 7 per cent., was shipped by rail during those three months. The quantity of corn received and in store at Chicago during the months of January, February, and March of that year amounted to 8,898,236 bushels, of which only 1,702,905, or 19½ per cent., was shipped by rail before the 1st of April. In the month of April, when the water competition began to be felt, the railways carried 462,570 bushels of wheat, as against a total of 286,000 in the preceding three months. The effect of this competition on the movement of corn was to send forward in April 1,018,271, against an aggregate of 1,702,905 bushels moved in January, February, and March.

The suggestive fact presented by these statistics is that while only 1,988,905 bushels of wheat and corn were moved by rail during the three months named, in the month of April, when the approaching water competition began to exert its influence, the reduction of rail rates induced 1,480,841 bushels to go forward by the railroads. Hence if the farmers of the West were compelled to rely upon railway competition for the movement of their crops, they would be unable to reach the eastern markets

An impression has prevailed that during the winter months all the rail lines from Chicago to the East are choked with the surplus products of the West, but the above facts seem to demonstrate that the companies prefer not to move them at all, rather than to do it at rates which those products will bear.

The two great companies which largely control the traffic of Wisconsin and Minnesota—the Chicago and Northwestern, and the Milwaukee and Saint Paul—afford another illustration of the value and extent of railway competition when regulated by its own laws. Towns and cities favored with a line belonging to, or controlled by, one of these companies have contributed liberally to aid in the construction of a second, which should be in the interest of the other company. For several years, while those great corporations have been extending their branches and absorbing weaker lines, competition has, at times, been active at certain places, but the territory which each can hope to control being now pretty well defined, an agreement as to rates has been made, and the people are alarmed by rumors, but too well founded, of a contemplated arrangement for pooling receipts. Thus the people of the great wheat-growing region of the continent, after having hoped and struggled for years for reduced rates through competition, and after having in many cases imposed upon themselves grievous burdens of taxation for that purpose, now find that, instead of bringing into the field a competitor, they have not only doubled the power with which they have to contend, but they have quartered upon themselves a new and expensive organization which must be supported from the products of their toil.

The history of railway management in every State of the Union, and throughout the civilized world, proves that competition invariably ends in combination. Hence the well-known aphorism, "Where combination is possible competition is impossible."

In view of these facts, is it probable that additional railway lines, under corporate control, will materially reduce the cost of transportation?

What reason have we to suppose that the same principles of combination which govern existing lines will not control the new ones? If, as already shown, competition with the water-routes and "the highest charge the commodity will bear" now rule the rates, have we any guarantee that they will not do so on the additional lines? In fact every new line from the Mississippi to the Atlantic Ocean will add from seventy-five to one hundred million dollars to the capital on which the transportation business of the country must pay five to seven million dollars annual interest, in addition to the cost of maintaining the new organization. Will not this afford an irresistible inducement to combine with existing companies, in order to make the largest possible profits out of the business to be performed? Is there anything in experience, or in the known principles of railway management, which teach us to hope that the new competing line would not at once participate in the councils of its rivals and be governed by their policy?

For these reasons, and others stated in the report of the committee, they have come to the conclusion that no substantial reduction in the cost of transportation is to be anticipated from unregulated competition between existing railways, nor in competition to be induced by authorizing the construction of additional lines, if they are to be under private management and control.

Let us therefore consider the second remedy proposed, namely:

2. DIRECT REGULATION BY ACT OF CONGRESS.'

Railway regulation, though untried by Congress, is by no means a novel experiment in the States, or in other countries. It has many earnest advocates, who seem to regard it as a certain and effectual remedy for high charges—a panacea for all the ills of our present systems of transportation. In the discussion of this branch of the subject, I wish it distinctly understood, that the considerations which apply to the vast system of railways in the United States do not apply with the same force to the smaller number of roads, and the less diverse conditions existing in a single State. The regulation of railway rates and fares, by law, is one of the most difficult problems ever presented to the Legislature of a State; but when extended to a great nation, composed of many independent sovereign States, having within their limits over thirteen hundred different railways, and embracing every conceivable variety of conditions and circumstances, the problem becomes one of much greater difficulty.

I have no doubt of the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, when carried on by railroads constituting continuous lines between two or more States. Under the power to regulate commerce among the several States, I believe Congress may prescribe the rules by which the instruments, agents, and vehicles engaged in such commerce shall be governed; and that it may prevent undue impositions by corporations of one State upon the commerce of other States; and in the maintenance of commercial equality among the States, it may prescribe a rule of charges for interstate commerce. Otherwise it would be in the power of the State of New York, extending as she does from Canada to the ocean, to authorize her railway companies to impose such charges as would virtually place an embargo upon the trade between New England and the West. That she probably will not do so is no answer to the argument. The question is not what will the State of New York permit in this regard, but what are the commercial rights of the States, and by what power are those rights to be guaranteed? Were the illustrious men who framed our Constitution so incompetent for their high duty as to have created an instrument which leaves it in the power of any one State to cripple and destroy the commerce of another? Is it conceivable that such a blunder could have been committed in view of the fact that "the design and object of that power, (the power to regulate commerce,) as evinced in the history of the Constitution, was to establish a perfect equality among the several States as to commercial rights, and to prevent unjust and invidious distinctions which local jealousies or local and partial interests might be disposed to introduce and maintain?" (14 Howard's Reports, page 574.) But if the power to prevent unjust and invidious distinctions exist, how is it to be exercised if any one State may create corporations with unlimited power to levy tribute at pleasure, and without control, upon the commerce of other States?

Take another case in illustration of this position. For five months each year there is practically no means of transportation for a large section of the country but by railroads. Illinois and Kentucky extend from the lakes on the north, around to the Alleghany Mountains at the east, thus rendering it impossible for the products of those States lying west and south of them to reach a market without passing through their limits.

Now, suppose those two States have granted to all the railroad companies within their jurisdiction the right to charge such rates as they please for transportation, and that those roads have become parts of the great through lines of transportation between the States to the west of them and the Atlantic sea-board. Suppose, further, that in a season of short crops in the East and in Europe, the managers of those roads combine, purchase a large quantity of breadstuffs, ship them to the East, and having them safely stored in New York and other eastern cities, put up the tariff for transportation so high as to prevent the products of other States from going forward. Can any one doubt that in such a case it would be not only right, but the sacred duty of Congress, to interfere by prescribing needful rules and regulations for the conduct of this traffic through those States? If the power does not reside in Congress, it is nowhere. The aggrieved States could do nothing, and the people of one-half the Union might starve, while the other half with overflowing granaries would be denied the privilege of feeding them. It is true this is a strong case, but its circumstances would change no principle of the Constitution; its hardships and aggravations would create no new powers. If the power be in the Constitution it exists at all times. If it exist for the purpose of relieving the people of the States in the aggravated case supposed, it exists for all purposes connected with interstate commerce. The circumstances do not call it into life, though they may demonstrate the necessity for its existence and the policy of its exercise.

Assuming, for the present, that the power of Congress is ample to regulate rates and fares on railroads engaged in interstate commerce, let us briefly inquire as to the practicability and expediency of its exercise; the extent to which with our present limited information on the subject it may be safely exerted, and the results probably attainable thereby.

In several of our own States, and in nearly all the countries of Europe, legislative regulation of rates and fares has been tried in almost every form, but I have yet to learn that such experiments have resulted in a material reduction of charges.

In England, to whose railway system ours corresponds more closely than to that of any other nation, the subject of regulation has been discussed for more than a third of a century, and experimented upon by Parliament in almost every conceivable form. Commenting on these experiments the Massachusetts railway commissioners say:

> Nowhere has the system of special legislation been more persistently followed, and nothing, it may be added, could have been more complete than its failure. As the result of forty years' experience, reviewed in the recent elaborate report of the joint committee on amalgamation of railways, it may be said that the English legislation has neither accomplished anything it sought to bring about, nor prevented anything which it sought to hinder.

In Ohio, where the system of direct regulation has been tried for several years, the railway commissioner, in his report for 1873, says:

> It is unnecessary here to reiterate the experience of Ohio, or the results of the numerous and persistent efforts of her Legislature to fix upon some practical and equitable law governing this matter. The report of this office for 1869 gives a list of nine distinct rates authorized by law for the transportation of passengers and freight. The several acts since passed, and labored attempts each session to devise some system by which rates can be justly regulated by law, have failed, as in the past, to accomplish the object desired.

In his report for 1870 the commissioner says:

> There is not a railroad in the State, whether operated under a special charter or the general law, upon which the laws regulating rates are not in some way violated nearly every time a regular passenger, a freight, or mixed train passes over it.

The railway commission of Massachusetts, after a thorough investigation of this subject, embracing the railway systems of foreign countries, and the various attempts at regulation in the United States, pronounce legislative regulation of rates and fare impracticable, and recommend "the control and regulation of the whole, through the ownership and management of a part."

The parliamentary committee of 1872, after elaborately reviewing all the various modes of railway regulation that have been proposed and tried in Great Britain, many of which correspond with those on which reliance seems to be placed in this country, state their conclusions, drawn from forty years' experience, as follows:

"Equal mileage rates" they pronounce "impracticable."

"Rates to be fixed by relation to cost and profit on capital" they dismiss, because "attended with difficulties which are practically insuperable."

"Immediate reduction of rates," they say, "would be merely a temporary remedy, for the reason that a change which will give the company ample profit to-day may, through increased economy, or other cause, be excessive to-morrow."

"Periodical revision of rates" is declared to be "inexpedient and impracticable."

"Absolute limitation of dividends" is pronounced "impossible and undesirable."

"Division of profits beyond a certain limit between companies and the public" they reject, because attended with "insuperable difficulties."

"Maxima rates," they say, "will effect but little, if any, reduction, because the actual legal maxima are rarely charged in the case of goods, as is evident from the existence of special rates; and in the case of passengers, the present action of the companies in carrying third-class passengers at parliamentary fares by all their trains shows how impossible it is for Parliament, or any other authority, to determine a scale of maximum charges which shall continue to be fair and liberal to the public under changes of time and circumstances."

Each and all of these modes of regulation have their advocates in this country who confidently rely upon them to reduce the cost of transportation. Let us examine them with reference to the practicability and expediency of their adoption by Congress. I assume that a general law of Congress regulating railway transportation, to be successful in the accomplishment of the desired object, must operate fairly and justly upon all, and that while it protects the public from undue exactions, it must also guard the equitable and just rights of stockholders who have honestly invested their money in railroads. Anything short of this would shock the sense of justice and fair play which distinguishes the American people, and hence would prove a failure.

1. "Equal mileage rates."—The reasons upon which this form of regulation is pronounced "impracticable" in England apply with much greater force in the United States.

Our roads are much longer. Their circumstances and condition are less uniform. The difference in cost of construction and expense of working different sections of the same road is greater. There is less uniformity in the amount of business on different roads, and on different sections of the same road. A rate that would ruin one road costing $100,000 per mile would be excessive on another that cost only $25,000 per mile, if the amount of business on each be the same. On the other hand, the more expensive road could, with a sufficiently large amount of business, make a profit at rates which would be ruinous on the cheaper one with a small amount of business. And even on the same road, a rate that would be excessive on one section would not pay the running expenses on another section. It would be manifestly unjust to require local freights passing over a given number of miles, costing $1,000,000, to pay the same rate per mile that other local freights pay for carriage over a like distance, on the same road, which cost five millions. Distance, also, is an important element in the economy of railway transportation, but it is not the only one, nor is it in fact always the most important element. Extortionate charges for short distances, and unjust discriminations against certain points, afford good ground for complaint, and doubtless demand a remedy, but that remedy to be effective must be based upon sound principles. It is a fact susceptible of the clearest demonstration, that it actually costs more per mile to transport a short distance than a long one; and this principle has received universal recognition by railway managers. In Belgium, where, through state management, the cheapest and in many respects the best railroad system in existence has been developed, the charges on fourth-class goods are graded according to distance, as follows:

Charge per ton per mile in 1868, including terminals, on Belgian Railway.

	Cents.
15 miles	2.54
31 miles	1.86
46 miles	1.66
62 miles	1.38
77 miles	1.18
93 miles	1.02
108 miles	.92
124 miles	.86
139 miles	.80
155 miles	.74

A similar decrease in rates in proportion to increase of distance prevails in every country in Europe, and I may add on every road in the United States.

The enforcement of equal mileage rates instead of bringing relief to the producers in the distant interior of the continent, would add very largely to their present burdens. The average charges for transporting all freights on the leading trunk lines between Chicago and New York, in 1872, was about 1½ cents per ton per mile, which on a bushel of wheat would amount to about 44 cents. The actual average charge by rail, per bushel, was 33½ cents. Hence, an equal mileage rate on those lines, if adjusted upon the basis of their average charges, would have reduced the value of the 213,000,000 bushels of wheat and corn moved that year about 10 cents per bushel, amounting to an aggregate loss to the producers of $21,000,000, with no compensating gain to the consumers. And as the price of wheat and corn at the West, as well that part which remains at home as that which is sent abroad, is fixed by the market price in Liverpool, less the cost of transportation, the loss to the Northwestern States on the entire crop of that year, estimated at over 900,000,000 bushels, would have amounted to the enormous sum of $90,000,000. Such a law, if permanently enforced, would, by the reduction of 10 cents per bushel on the value of the cereal crop of the Northwest, reduce the value of the farms in that section by an amount which would build and equip all the trunk lines of railroad from Chicago to New York.

Not only would an equal mileage rate, if applied to the whole country, impose additional burdens on those sections most in need of relief, but it would tend to destroy whatever of competition now exists. This fact is demonstrated by the operation of the pro rata law of the State of Illinois. At many points in that State the people have contributed largely to aid the construction of a second road for the purpose of securing competition. The two roads are not the same length. But the law says that both shall charge the same rate per mile. The longer one being compelled to charge more to the common point of destination is, of course, driven out of competition, and the shorter one takes a monopoly of the business. The people who have contributed to build competing roads thus find themselves taxed to pay the cost of transportation for others who have been less enterprising. A general pro rata law applied to the whole country would indefinitely multiply such evil results at competing points, without any compensating benefits at other places. The non-competing points would not be benefited, for if by reason of low rates, at the point of competition, a largely increased traffic should be created, from which the company could make a small profit, it would be enabled, to the extent of such profit, to reduce the rates at the intermediate point.

2. "Rate to be fixed by relation to cost and profit on capital."—If the difficulties of this mode of regulation are found to be "practically insuperable" in Great Britain with fifteen thousand miles of railway, what shall be said of the United States with their seventy thousand miles? In order to establish intelligently a rule of charges based upon cost and profit, we must investigate thoroughly the circumstances and conditions of every one of the thirteen hundred roads. We must know all about each individual road, its original cost, how much of its capital is real and how much fictitious how much was actually paid on its stock, and what proportion of the profits charged to capital account should have been charged to expenses. Having completed this detailed investigation, which would necessarily involve an examination and readjustment of the accounts of the company from its organization, we next turn our attention to its profits. In order to adjust charges to profits by a general rule of law, we must know what the actual profits are now, and what they will be in the future. This requires a knowledge of its grades and curvatures; the cost of fuel, supplies, and other items of working expenses; the amount of business it now does, and what it will continue to do; the economy or extravagance with which it will be managed; the condition and character of its construction and equipment; how long its iron, ties, and rolling-stock will last, and what it will cost to replace them; the storms of winter and the floods of summer it will probably encounter; and finally, the losses which will result from accidents of all kinds. This completed, we must study carefully the nature of its traffic, so as to know what relation the various classes of goods bear to each other in cost of transportation; what charge each class will bear without injury to the business interests of the country, and how much the expense of carrying a ton of silk goods twenty-five miles per hour exceeds that of carrying a ton of corn ten miles per hour.

When we have thus informed ourselves with reasonable accuracy in regard to all these details, and many more that might be named, we will be prepared to commence the investigation of the next road on the list, and so on through the 1,300. By the time we have completed the investigation, the changed conditions and circumstances of the roads, and the rapid changes in the business of the country, will render a re-examination imperatively necessary.

3. "Immediate reduction of rates and fares."—In addition to the fact that this would be only a "temporary remedy," it involves all the difficulties mentioned under the last proposition; for if the reduced rates are to stand the test of practical experiment, they must be just and reasonable, and hence all the circumstances and conditions of each road must be understood in order to establish a standard of reduction.

4. "Periodical revision of rates."—Stating their reasons for the conclusion that this method of regulation is "inexpedient and impracticable," the parliamentary committee from whose report I have quoted say:

> How is it to be performed, and by whom? If it is to be purely arbitrary, if no rule is to be laid down to guide the revisers, the power of revision will amount to a power to confiscate the property of the companies. It is not likely that Parliament would attempt the exercise of any such power itself, still less that it would confer such a power on any subordinate authority.

Assuming for the present that Congress would attempt the exercise of a power from which the Parliament of England shrinks, let us inquire how such revision of rates can be made in this country. Shall it be done by Congress itself, or by some tribunal acting under its authority? Surely not the latter, for the power of Congress over the subject is only a delegated power, which it cannot delegate to another. The revision must, therefore, be made by Congress itself, if at all. It is said in the English reports that "the rates in the case of all the great companies are numbered by millions." In this country each of the 1,300 roads has its through rates, its rates to every station on its own line, and to every station on the lines with which it connects, its scores of special rates, and its numerous classifications of goods. A bill which should enumerate them all, if such a bill could be framed, could hardly be read through during the session, and if read, not one member in a dozen would be the wiser. If Congress should undertake the periodical revision of rates on the 70,000 miles of railroad in the United States, it must remain in constant session and devote its attention exclusively to this work.

5. "Absolute limitation of dividends."—"This form of proposed regulation assumes that the passenger and shipper will receive, in the shape of reduced fares and charges, whatever excess of profits may remain after paying to the shareholder the limit allowed by law." It involves the power of revision, and the necessity for accurate and detailed information referred to under the forms of regulation already discussed, and hence, in its practical application, would encounter many, if not all, of the difficulties therein mentioned. In England it is pronounced "impossible and undesirable." "Impossible," because it involves the necessity of judging "what rates will enable the company to make the given dividend on a given capital," and of determining "what are the proper expenses of the companies and what economies they can practice." These are declared to be "matters which require the knowledge, skill, and experience of the managers themselves, and any attempt on the part of any government department to do it for them is impossible, unless the agents of the government were to undertake an amount of interference with the internal concerns of the companies which is neither desirable nor practicable." "Undesirable," because it would encourage extravagance, stock-watering, and corruption.

The assumption that what is withheld from the shareholders would be available for reduction of rates is declared to be a "fallacy, because the company, having no interest in making more than the fixed rate of profit, will have every inducement to use up the surplus in needless expenditure." "The result, therefore, of limiting the dividends of companies would be to deprive them, monopolists as they are, or will be, of the ordinary motives for efficiency or economy, and to impose upon government or Parliament an impracticable task, the result of which must be either to delude the public by giving a formal and groundless sanction to the schemes of the companies, or to take out of their hands the management of their own affairs."

The reasons thus forcibly presented against an absolute limitation of dividend are quite as applicable to the railroad system of America as to that of England. It is surely undesirable to increase the present extravagance and waste in railway management. It would be an easy matter for railway managers to keep their dividends within the prescribed limits, without a decrease of rates, by increasing their own compensation, by special contracts for the enrichment of favorites, and by many other means but too well known. If the dividend could not extend beyond a certain fixed amount it would be to the interest of the company to do only enough business to produce that sum, and hence if the movement of 1,000,000 tons at 2 cents per ton per mile, or of 2,000,000 tons at 1 cent per ton per mile, would produce the profit limited to the company, the lesser amount of work would be preferred. The direct inducement, therefore, would be to increase the price and diminish the traffic, thereby giving to the public an inferior service at an enhanced cost. It is apparent, also, that another result would be to stimulate stock-watering, which has already become so offensive to the public, and which has so largely increased the cost of transportation; for if the shareholder can receive only a certain fixed dividend on the amount of his capital, he will not be slow in finding some plausible excuse for increasing his stock.

One of the chief motives for the practice of stock inflations which prevail on some of our leading roads is the fear of offending public sentiment by an exhibit of actual profits. When public sentiment shall have crystallized into a law of absolute limitation, may we not expect to see this evil aggravated to an extent even more alarming than at present?

Such a limitation of dividends would also tend to discourage the construction of new and competing roads in localities where they are needed, for capital will not readily seek investment where the profits are limited, unless it be accompanied with a guarantee which no one proposes to give. This is illustrated by the fact that a bond of the New York Central Railroad, which guarantees 6 per cent., is worth as much in the market as its stock on the expectation of 8 per cent.

A law of Congress establishing this form of regulation would, even if practicable, afford no relief, but, on the other hand, it would result in a withdrawal of every inducement to economy; in increased expenditures and waste; in enhanced prices for inferior service; in an additional stimulus to the reprehensible practice of stock-watering, and in special contracts, jobbery, and favoritism.

6. "Division of profits beyond a certain limit between the companies and the public."—This is a modification of the last-named proposition, and is designed to avoid some of the difficulties and objections therein suggested. The theory upon which it proceeds is, that a certain limit being fixed the excess should be divided between the companies and the public, one portion being added to the dividend and the remainder being applied to the reduction of charges. It is true, this method would partially obviate the objection urged against an absolute limitation of dividend, because in proportion to the amount which might be added to the profits of the company an inducement to economy would exist. But other difficulties, which in Great Britain are declared to be "insuperable," would remain. It would involve the obnoxious task of selecting special traffic and special rates for reduction, and of deciding what should be the amount or description of any particular reductions, and in whose favor they should be made. A regulation of this kind was once adopted in England, but it never went into effect. It has been tried in France, but on account of the difficulty of selecting rates and classifications of goods on which to apply it the reduction has been abandoned, and one-half the surplus profit is paid into the national treasury. There is, therefore, but little encouragement to try the experiment in this country, where, by reason of the larger number of our roads, and the greater diversity of conditions and of traffic, as well as the instinctive aversion of our people to meddlesome governmental interference in private affairs, vastly greater difficulties would be encountered than in France or England.

7. "Maximum rates."—It is doubtless entirely practicable for State Legislatures to establish maxima rates which will afford a remedy for local extortions and discriminations; and it is possible that in certain cases such rates may be established by act of Congress with beneficial results. But it is difficult to see how a general law of Congress, establishing maxima rates, can be framed that will materially cheapen the cost of transport on existing lines of railway between the interior of the continent and the sea-board. The intelligent enactment of such a law would require an investigation of all the facts, circumstances, and conditions mentioned under the propositions just discussed, and hence would involve the difficulties therein suggested.

A commission with authority to establish maxima rates, subject to revision by the courts, has been suggested as the means of avoiding the difficulty last stated. But Congress acts only under delegated powers, and a serious constitutional question arises whether it can delegate its powers to another tribunal. I believe it is a well-settled principle of law that an agent cannot, without the authority of his principal, delegate his powers to another agent; else such sub-agent may again delegate them, and so on without limit. Assuming, however, that no constitutional difficulties exist, the expediency of clothing the President with power to appoint commissioners authorized to establish rates that will increase or diminish the dividends on over $3,000,000,000 of railway capital is seriously questioned. If there is any truth in the oft-repeated assertions that railway companies already exercise a corrupting influence over legislative bodies, what may we expect when the powers which now belong to Congress shall be transferred to a commission whose duties will require them to decide what profits shall be made upon this immense capital?

In the words of Mr. Charles Francis Adams, jr., I ask, "Is it consistent with ideas of common sense, is it within the bounds of reason, to suppose that the man who owns will not do his best to control the man who regulates?" The immense money power with which such a commission would have to contend may be appreciated from the fact that in 1873 the gross receipts of the railways of the United States amounted to over $473,000,000. The proposed commission is to have discretionary power to increase or diminish this enormous revenue. Five per cent. reduction would cost the companies over $20,000,000. Five per cent. increase would enable them to place ten millions "where it would do the most good," and to make as much more by the operation. I am inclined to think much that is said about the use of money by railway corporations, in influencing legislation, is born of the imagination, or perhaps of the spirit of calumny which disgraces the period in which we live. But I confess that so long as poor human nature remains unchanged, I hesitate to expose it to temptations so powerful as would be encountered by such a commission. Especially do I hesitate to place the interests of the public in the hands of men who are to be subjected to such temptations.

Nor am I inclined to confer on any executive officer of the Government power so unlimited as the appointment of such a commission would give.

But granting that the commission be honestly appointed, and composed of men whose integrity shall bid defiance to temptation, can substantial benefits, in the matter of reduced charges, be reasonably anticipated from their action?

Maxima rates, whether established by Congress or by a commission, must be high enough to pay the actual cost of transportation and leave a margin large enough to provide a fair return for capital honestly invested, and to cover all contingencies. The actual average charge on all cereals moved by the trunk lines of railway between Chicago and New York in 1872 was less than 12 mills per ton per mile. The evidence taken by the Committee on Transportation shows that the average cost of movement, exclusive of interest and dividends, was from 8 to 9 mills per ton per mile. Assuming the cost to be 8½ mills, there would be left for the payment of interest and dividends 3½ mills. The number of tons carried one mile on the Pennsylvania Railroad in 1872 was 1,190,052,975, which, at 3½ mills, gives $4,115,185. The actual cost of the road, with its equipment, was something over $12,000,000; hence, if the same rates had been charged on all the tonnage moved, the margin between the actual cost of movement and the actual average charges that year, would have paid a little less than 10 per cent. on the cost of the road. Is it probable that either Congress, or a commission, could have established a maximum rate with less margin above actual cost than the rates which were in fact imposed? In practice the maxima rates established by law in England, France, and Germany are seldom charged. The parliamentary committee of 1872 say:

> Legal maxima rates afford little protection to the public, since they are always fixed so high that it is, or becomes sooner or later, the interest of the companies to carry at lower rates. The same thing is true of terminal charges. The circumstances are so various and so constantly changing that any legal maxima which might now be fixed would probably be above the charges now actually made, certainly far above those which will hereafter be made. Indeed, attempts made in 1861 and 1866 to fix a maximum for terminals broke down because the only maximum that could be agreed upon was so much beyond the charge then actually made to coal-owners that the coal-owners feared it would lead to a rise in that charge.

Captain H. W. Tyler, in his report to the secretary of the railway department, board of trade, says:

> The attempt to limit rates and fares by the principle of fixing a maximum has almost always failed in practice, and is almost always likely to fail, for the simple reason that the parliamentary committees and authorities by whom such limits are decided cannot do otherwise than allow some margin between the actual probable rate, so far as they can forecast it, and the maximum rate; and cannot foresee the contingencies of competition, of increase in quantities, of facilities, or economy in working, or of alteration in commercial conditions which may occur in the course of years after such limits have been arranged by them.

The practical results in the matter of charges attained under the various systems of management, and governmental regulation, are shown by the following comparative statement. Great Britain may represent the system of direct governmental regulation without financial aid; France, the system of financial aid with the most rigid surveillance and regulation; Belgium, the system of indirect regulation of the whole through state ownership and management of a part, and entire non-interference with the private corporations except in matters of safety and police. The charges per ton per mile on fourth-class goods on the leading railways in each country and under each system, for the distance stated, are as follows:

GREAT BRITAIN.

	Cents.
On the London and Southwestern and London and Northwestern Railways, for 192 miles, per ton per mile	3.16
On the Great Northern Railway, for 155 miles, per ton per mile	4.4
On the Great Northern, London, Chatham and Dover Railways, for 198 miles, per ton per mile	4.5
On the Great Northern, North Eastern, North British, and Highland Railways, for 594 miles, per ton per mile	1.98

FRANCE.

On the line between Paris and Orleans, for all distances over 186 miles, per ton per mile	1.74

BELGIUM.

On the Belgium State Railways, for all distances over 155 miles, per ton per mile	.74

From this statement it will be seen that the experience of other countries affords little encouragement to seek reduced railway charges through direct Government regulation. The rates both in England and France, where legislative regulation has been most freely practiced, are higher than even in this country upon roads doing a large amount of business. The remarkably low rates in Belgium furnish a powerful argument in favor of state ownership, and also in confirmation of the principle that cheap transportation is to be obtained only through competition under governmental control.

If the experience of other nations is worth anything as a guide to the solution of the difficult and important problem under discussion, it proves that the adoption by Congress of any one of the seven methods of regulation just mentioned would be to delude the public with false hopes, without accomplishing the end sought.

I believe that a rule of maxima charges may be established by the States which will prevent local extortions and discriminations, and also that in certain cases Congress may impose such a regulation with advantage to the public; but I am compelled to say that, in my judgment, cheap transportation is not to be secured by such congressional legislation. And as the adoption of ill-advised measures will only tend to postpone the accomplishment of the desired object, it becomes important to consider well our action before entering upon experiments, the uniform failure of which is demonstrated by the experience of all other nations.

There are, however, certain measures which may be adopted with great advantage to the public interest, among which the following may be mentioned:

1. Publication of rates.—This mode of regulation proceeds upon the not unreasonable theory that the moral restraints of public opinion will have a salutary effect upon the companies, and that such publicity will tend to insure stability and certainty to the business of transportation, and to remove the discontent and suspicion of the public. And further, it is believed that a company dealing honestly and fairly should court publicity, and challenge criticism, by giving to the public every possible facility for obtaining information regarding its charges and its reasons for making them.

It is proposed as a remedy for the evils of unjust discrimination against one locality in favor of another, or in favor of one description of trade at the expense of another; for the prevention of higher rates for a short distance than for a longer one, and of uncertainty and favoritism by means of special contracts, rebates, drawbacks, and the thousand and one other means by which a rich and powerful company may by the secret adjustment of rates impose upon the public, and render fluctuating and precarious the business transactions of those who are compelled to use its line.

On this subject a singular unanimity prevails in nearly all the countries of Europe; France, Prussia, Austria, Sweden, and Belgium all regard it as important and insist upon its enforcement. In nearly all of those countries hand-books are published giving all the particulars regarding distance, classification, rates, special tariffs, &c. There is no doubt that a valuable reform in railway management may be attained by requiring such publication in this country, especially if it be accompanied, as in several European countries, with a provision prohibiting an increase of rates without reasonable public notice.

As many of the causes of complaint arise from fluctuations, discriminations, and favoritism at and between points entirely within a State, the remedy for such abuses must be applied by the State Legislature, if at all.

But there is a large class of cases in which interstate traffic is alone concerned, for which the remedy is in the hands of Congress.

2. Railway companies should be compelled to receipt for quantity and to account for the same at its point of destination.—The enforcement of a regulation of this kind upon all railway companies and freight line organizations, employed in transporting cereals from one State into another, would remedy an evil of no small magnitude, and one which falls peculiarly within the scope of national power. The evidence taken by the committee shows that the "shortage" on a car-load of grain transported from Chicago to New York varies from ¼ to 10 per cent.; 1 to 3 per cent. being not uncommon. Assuming the average shortage to be 2 per cent., it amounts to a loss of 3 cents per bushel on wheat, when the market price in New York is $1.50; a loss that falls wholly on the shipper from the western point. And as the western buyer knows by experience that the usual loss is from 1 to 3 per cent., and sometimes as high as 10 per cent., he will buy on a margin large enough to cover the greatest probable deficit. Hence the producer has to bear a loss even larger than the actual shortage. It may be said that a law compelling the carrier to receipt and account for quantity would render necessary an increased charge for transportation. This is doubted for two reasons: First, because the water lines now account for quantity; and as the railways fix their prices in competition with the water-routes, they cannot, during the season of navigation, increase their prices. Second, the evidence taken by the committee shows that the rule of railway charges is "how much will the article bear?" and as they usually put on all it will bear, when not in competition with water, it is likely that the effect of such a law would be to compel them to exercise greater care, instead of increasing the rate. But even if it should cause an increase of charges, the producer would then lose only the actual increased rate, instead of the undefined margin between 1 and 10 per cent. A congressional regulation of this kind would be peculiarly applicable to freight lines which are organized for the express purpose of carrying on interstate traffic.

3. Railway companies, freight lines, and other common carriers engaged in interstate commerce should be prohibited from discriminating between persons or places; and especially those engaged in carrying freights from one State into another, whose lines touch at any river or lake port, should be prohibited from discriminating against such port. One of the serious evils now complained of is that by an unfair adjustment of charges the public is denied the advantages of the cheaper transportation afforded by water-routes, and in many cases the business of such river ports is seriously impaired by reason of such discriminations. The remedy for this evil is largely within the power of the States. For instance, freights starting from the interior of Iowa for the East are exclusively under the jurisdiction of that State until they cross the Mississippi River, and any unjust discriminations against river towns within her borders must be corrected, if at all, by the authorities of that State. But freights from Nebraska, destined for the East, which pass through the State of Iowa, must be regulated in this regard, if at all, by the General Government. It is, in my judgment, clearly within the power of Congress to remedy unjust discriminations in the case last mentioned and in all others involving a passage through two or more States.

Other matters in which congressional regulation would probably effect beneficial results are discussed in the report I have submitted, and will be referred to in the "summary of conclusions and recommendations" to which I will presently refer.

While I am thoroughly convinced that the relief required in the matter of cheap and ample commercial facilities is not to be obtained by any form of direct congressional regulation of rates and fares, I am equally well assured that many of the evils and abuses incident to our present systems of transportation may be remedied by this means. Hence it is, in my judgment, of the utmost importance that some means should be adopted for procuring accurate information on which intelligent action may be based. The Constitution having confided to the General Government the regulation of interstate commerce, it becomes a matter of great public concern that Congress be fully advised upon the subject.

I am therefore in favor of the establishment of a Bureau of Commerce in one of the Executive Departments of the Government, which shall be charged with the duty of collecting full and detailed information on the subject of internal commerce to be annually laid before Congress, and to this end such Bureau should have authority, under regulations to be prescribed by the head of the Department, to require sworn returns to be made by all railways and other common carriers engaged in transporting persons or commodities from one State into or through another. I shall take occasion at an early day to introduce a bill for this purpose, when with the indulgence of the Senate I will explain more fully its objects and the necessity for its organization.

I will say, in passing from this branch of the subject, that in my judgment the public service would be greatly benefited by the organization of a new Department, to be called the "Department of Industry," the head of which should have equal rank and emoluments with other Cabinet officers, and be charged with the supervision and care of the agricultural, commercial, manufacturing, and mining interests of the country, in so far as the same have been confided to the national Government by the Constitution. In every other commercial nation these great interests are intrusted to the care of one or more ministers of Cabinet rank who study their necessities, their relations to each other, and the best means for their promotion and encouragement. France has ten departments, one of which has charge of the interests of "agriculture, commerce, and public works." Great Britain has thirteen cabinet ministers, one of whom is "president of the board of trade," and another is "president of the board, of public works." Duties which in England are considered of sufficient importance to require the services of two cabinet officers are in this country confided to subordinates and clerks, or wholly neglected.

It is true that under the limited powers of our Government such a Department would exercise less control than in European nations, but its usefulness in promoting the great industrial interests of the people, on which the prosperity of the country depends, would be incalculable. The organization of a department of industry has not, however, been recommended by the committee, and I will therefore defer its further discussion until some future occasion.

Believing that competition among railways, when governed by private interests, is wholly unreliable and utterly inefficient; that direct congressional regulation of rates and fares may cure certain evils and abuses, but will never provide such commercial facilities as the necessities and best interests of the country demand, let us inquire, by what means may they be obtained?

I answer, they are to be obtained only through competition under governmental control, and operating through cheaper means of transport than are now provided; and such cheaper means of transport can only be provided by the construction of double-track freight railways, or by the improvement and creation of water-routes.

The solution of the problem of cheap transportation is therefore narrowed down to the consideration of these alternative propositions, namely: Freight railways under governmental control, or water-routes open to free competition.

3. INDIRECT REGULATION BY MEANS OF ONE OR MORE DOUBLE-TRACK FREIGHT RAILWAYS TO BE OWNED OR CONTROLLED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

In the report submitted the committee have discussed at considerable length the merits and advantages of a double-track freight railway between the Mississippi River and New York City, and have come to the conclusion that such a railway honestly constructed and operated, and performing an amount of business reasonably to be anticipated, could pay all expenses, together with a fair return on its cost, at rates for transportation of fourth-class freights not exceeding 7½ mills per ton per mile. At this rate a ton of wheat could be carried from the Mississippi River to New York for about $8.25, or at the rate of 25 cents per bushel. The average cost during the last five years by rail has been about $16.50 per ton, or at the rate of about 50 cents per bushel. All the data on which this conclusion is based will be found in full in the evidence and report submitted by the committee. The construction of such a line would doubtless be of incalculable benefit to a large section of the country, but other sections would be entitled to equal consideration, and if one such road should be built at Government expense, fair dealing toward those sections not directly benefited would require the construction of at least two additional lines, costing in the aggregate from two hundred and fifty to three hundred million dollars. The heavy expenditure required, and other considerations of a political and economic character mentioned in the report, have induced the committee to content themselves with a statement of the probable advantages to be derived from such improvements, without making any recommendations on the subject, excepting in so far as they have suggested railway portages, to connect natural water-routes, where canals may be considered impracticable, or where it is believed that comparatively short freight railways will do the work more cheaply than it can be done by water.

This brings me to the consideration of the alternative measure above stated, namely:

4. "THE IMPROVEMENT AND CREATION OF WATER-ROUTES."

A careful and thorough investigation of the relative merits of water and rail transportation, both in Europe and in this country, has convinced me that for all cheap, heavy, and bulky articles, where cost is a more important element than time, water affords the cheapest and best known means of transport. In making this comparison, and in the conclusions deduced therefrom, I shall rely wholly upon testimony drawn from actual operations by water and by rail. The verdict of commerce itself, pronounced upon various routes and under diverse circumstances, is recorded in the following facts:

On the through line from the Ohio River to Boston, composed of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the Boston Steamship Company, the earnings were divided as 4 to 1 in favor of water, counting the actual distances operated by each.

On the line between Baltimore and New York, consisting of railway, canal, and open water, and involving payment of tolls on the canal the earnings were prorated by allowing the vessels 125 miles for an actual distance of 230 miles—making nearly 2 to 1 in favor of water.

The Erie Railway Company, and the steamers from New York to Boston, have a prorating arrangement equivalent to 3 to 1 in favor of water.

From Parkersburgh and Cincinnati the arrangement between the railway and the river steamers allows the latter for 250 miles by water as the equivalent of 125 miles by rail, being 2 to 1 in favor of the river.

The arrangements between the Erie Railway Company and the lake steamers is that the railway shall furnish terminal facilities at Buffalo and Dunkirk, and the steamer lines terminal facilities at Milwaukee and Chicago; and the actual distance of 1,000 miles is prorated at 212 miles, making nearly 5 to 1 in favor of the lake.

The Central Vermont Railway and the Northern Transportation Company (steamer line) constitute a through line from Chicago to Boston and other places in New England. The distance by water is 1,365 miles, and the distances by rail average about 500 miles. The earnings are divided equally, being nearly 3 to 1 in favor of water. This comparison is the more valuable, because the officers of the railway company own a controlling interest in the stock of the steamship company, and hence may be supposed to divide according to actual cost of service. Mr. Diefendorf, agent of the steamboat company, testified that this division of earnings "is predicated upon the cost of transportation."

The Chesapeake and Ohio Railway prorates with vessels on the Ohio River upon the basis of 2 to 1 in favor of the river.

The gross earnings on the through line from Chicago to New Orleans, via the Illinois Central Railway to Cairo, (365 miles,) and thence by the Mississippi River to New Orleans, (1,050 miles,) are divided, three-fifths to the railroad and two-fifths to the river; making, on the charge of $7 per ton from New Orleans to Chicago, 2.7 mills per ton per mile for the river, and 11.5 mills per ton per mile by the railroad, or over 5 to 1 in favor of the Mississippi River, against the current.

From the Kanawha coal mines to Huntington, West Virginia, the distance by rail is 67 miles, and the minimum charge for transporting coal 75 cents per ton; from the same coal mines to Cincinnati, by the Ohio River, the distance is 275 miles, and the charge per ton for coal transportation is 50 cents; being at the rate of nearly 2 mills per ton per mile by river, and 11.2 mills per ton per mile by rail; nearly 6 to 1 in favor of the river. The river rates include the return of the boats to the coal mines.

From Pittsburgh to New Orleans, via the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, 2,400 miles, coal is transported during high water for $1.60 per ton, or at the rate of $\frac{2}{3}$ of 1 mill per ton per mile. This is done in barges, and in very large quantities.

The New Orleans Chamber of Commerce furnished to the committee a detailed statement of the actual expenses of a tow-boat with five barges, (each barge of 1,500 tons' capacity,) from Saint Louis to New Orleans, (1,250 miles,) from which it appears that the expense was $\frac{7}{10}$ of 1 mill per ton per mile, or at the rate of $\frac{5}{8}$ mills per bushel of wheat for the entire distance. Also a statement of the actual expenses of the steamer John F. Tolle, 1,650 tons' capacity, value $65,000, showing a cost per ton per mile of 3.47 mills, or at the rate of $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per bushel of wheat for the whole distance. Neither of the last two cases include any profit to the carrier nor interest on the cost of vessels.

The average cost of freight from Cincinnati to New Orleans by water is stated by a joint committee of the board of trade and chamber of commerce of the former city to be $3\frac{1}{4}$ mills per ton per mile. The same average charge exists from Louisville to New Orleans. Even on the Tennessee River, which is hardly navigable for want of proper improvements, the charge between Knoxville and Chattanooga is only about 6 mills per ton per mile.

The following comparison between the Erie Canal and competing railways summarizes a portion of the benefits conferred upon the country by the former: From 1854 to 1864 the total number of tons moved one mile by the New York Central Railroad was 2,132,073,612, and by the Erie Railroad 2,587,274,914 tons; by the New York canals 8,175,803,065 tons; and the average charges of the Central Railway were 2.6 cents, Erie Railway 2.22 cents, and the canals .91 cent per ton per mile. Had the freights which were carried by canal for the ten years been carried by rail the additional freight charges would have amounted to $122,637,045.97.

Hon. Joseph Utley, president of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, furnishes the committee with the data from which the following comparison of charges is made.

Comparative charges for the transport of grain to Chicago by rail from points 100 miles distant on five different railroads:

Average charge per 100 pounds for 100 miles.

	Cents.
Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific	8
Chicago, Burlington and Quincy	14
Chicago and Northwestern	18
Chicago and Alton	12
Illinois Central	16

The first-named road is the only one affected by water competition.

Perhaps the most unsatisfactory and defective kind of navigation known is that of the Ohio canals, from which arguments have been adduced against artificial water-ways. But even the Ohio canals, only 40 feet wide, 4 feet deep, partially filled with mud, and capable of passing vessels of only 65 tons burden, are by no means an entire failure. True, they do not compensate the lessees who operate them, nor do they pay dividends to the State; but they do, to a very considerable extent hold the railways in check and regulate their charges. Hon. Benjamin Eggleston, who has been connected with those canals in various ways for thirty years, testified before the committee that the opening of those very inefficient canals reduces railway rates from 25 to 15 cents per hundred between Cincinnati and Toledo. He adds that the canals would long since have been controlled by the railways, but for the fact they belong to the State of Ohio, and by law the lessees are prohibited from increasing tolls. The practical effect of nearly all the canals in this country, however small and defective, has been to regulate and reduce railway charges. Where they are susceptible of being worked at all, they exercise a potential competition, which always prevents exorbitant rail charges, and thereby indirectly confer upon the public the benefits of reduced cost of transport.

Many other illustrations on this point may be found in the evidence submitted with the report of the committee; but these, taken from all parts of the country and from all kinds of water carriage—by ocean, lake, river, and canal—will suffice to show the relative economy of the two modes of transportation for heavy and cheap commodities, and to indicate the means by which cheap transportation may be secured.

The experience of other countries accords with our own upon the relative cheapness of water and rail transport and the effective competition between them. In England various parliamentary committees, after seeking in vain for means of obtaining competition among railways, report that they can find no practical means of securing that end, and that the only effectual and reliable competition which can be expected is between railways and artificial water lines. In France, where competition has always been discountenanced, it has been found necessary, in some cases, in order to prevent it, to authorize the railways to purchase the canals. Throughout the commercial world the unvarying testimony of practical results is that water is the natural competitor and only effective regulator of railway transportation.

In view of all these facts, and particularly of the beneficial results produced by competition afforded by the great northern water-route; of the verdict of commerce itself as expressed in the prorating arrangements between railways and water lines; and of the reduced rates caused by even the most inefficient artificial water channels, (such as the Ohio canals,) the conclusion is that for all coarse, cheap, and heavy commodities water is much the cheapest known means of transport; and that for long distances, in which a large proportion of the value of a commodity is consumed by the cost of carriage, water channels will always be an element of prime importance in any successful solution of the transportation question.

The president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in his recent report, pronounces canals "a failure," and assures his stockholders that they "have nothing to fear from this threatened rivalry."

It is quite certain he did not always entertain that opinion; for the canals of Pennsylvania, 360 miles, have been purchased or leased by his company, either to prevent their competition, or because they can carry cheaper than the railroad. Some of them have since been improved at large expense, and even those which run parallel with the Pennsylvania Railway are now operated by it. That company can hardly be accused of the blunder of sustaining an effete mode of transportation.

The efforts which have been made by the New York Central Company to obtain control of the Erie Canal is also indicative of the estimate which railway managers place upon these "failures."

The Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company transports freight (principally iron, coal, and other minerals) at less cost per ton per mile than any other railroad in the United States, yet this company also operates two canals.

It is true that canals of small size, which do not connect natural navigable waters, or which have not the facilities for transporting a large amount of heavy freights, have failed to be remunerative to their owners; a few canals badly located have been abandoned, but it is also true that hundred of miles of unremunerative railroads have been built in this country, and millions of dollars have been lost to those who embarked in their construction.

I now beg leave to present to the Senate, in the language of the report, a brief

SUMMARY OF THE CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE COMMITTEE.

First. One of the most important problems demanding solution at the hands of the American statesman is, by what means shall cheap and ample facilities be provided for the interchange of commodities between the different sections of our widely extended country.

Second. In the selection of means for the accomplishment of this object, Congress may, in its discretion and under its responsibility to the people, prescribe the rules and regulations by which the instruments, vehicles, and agencies employed in transporting persons or commodities from one State into or through another State shall be governed, whether such transportation be by land or by water.

Third. The power "to regulate commerce" includes the power to aid and facilitate it by the employment of such means as may be appropriate and plainly adapted to that end; and hence Congress may, in its discretion, improve or create channels of commerce on land or by water.

Fourth. A remedy for some of the defects and abuses which prevail under existing systems of transportation may be provided through direct congressional regulation; but for reasons stated at length in the report it is seriously doubted if facilities sufficiently cheap and ample to meet the just and reasonable requirements of commerce can ever be obtained by this method.

Fifth. The attempt to regulate the business of transportation by general congressional enactments, establishing rates and fares on 1,300 railways, aggregating nearly one-half the railway mileage of the world, and embracing an almost infinite variety of circumstances and conditions, requires more definite and detailed information than is now in the possession of Congress or of your committee. Believing that any ill-advised measures in this direction would tend to postpone indefinitely the attainment of the desired object—cheap transportation—the committee deem it expedient to confine their recommendations in this regard to such measures only as may be enacted with entire safety, reserving other matters of legislation for further inquiry and consideration. They therefore recommend for present action the following:

1. That all railway companies, freight lines, and other common carriers, engaged in transporting passengers or freights from one State into or through another, be required, under proper penalties, to make publication at every point of shipment from one State to another of their rates and fares, embracing all the particulars regarding distance, classifications, rates, special tariffs, drawbacks, &c., and that they be prohibited from increasing such rates above the limit named in the publication without reasonable notice to the public to be prescribed by law.

2. That combinations and consolidations with parallel or competing lines are evils of such magnitude as to demand prompt and vigorous measures for their prevention.

3. That all railway companies, freight lines, and other common carriers, employed in transporting grain from one State into or through another, should be required, under proper regulations and penalties to be provided by law, to receipt for quantity and to account for the same at its destination.

4. That all railway companies and freight organizations receiving freights in one State to be delivered in another, and whose lines touch at any river or lake port, be prohibited from charging more to or from such port than for any greater distance on the same line.*

5. Stock inflations, generally known as "stock-waterings," are wholly indefensible; but the remedy for this evil seems to fall peculiarly within the province of the States who have created the corporations from which such practices proceed. The evil is believed to be of such magnitude as to require prompt and efficient State action for its prevention, and to justify any measures that may be proper and within the range of national authority.

6. It is believed by the committee that great good would result from the passage of State laws prohibiting officers of railway companies from owning or holding, directly or indirectly, any interest in any "non-co-operative freight line" or car company operated upon the railroad with which they are connected in such official capacity.

7. For the purpose of procuring and laying before Congress and the country such complete and reliable information concerning the business of transportation and the wants of commerce as will enable Congress to legislate intelligently upon the subject, it is recommended that a Bureau of Commerce, in one of the Executive Departments of the Government, be charged with the duty of collecting and reporting to Congress information concerning our internal trade and commerce, and be clothed with authority of law, under regulations to be prescribed by the head of such Department, to require each and every railway and other transportation company, engaged in interstate transportation, to make a report, under oath of the proper officer of such company, at least once each year, which report should embrace, among other facts, the following, namely: 1. The rates and fares charged from all points of shipment on its line in one State to all points of destination in another State, including classifications and distances, and all drawbacks, deductions, and discriminations; 2. A full and detailed statement of receipts and expenditures, including the compensation paid to officers, agents, and employés of the company; 3. The amount of stock and bonds issued, the price at which they were sold, and the disposition made of the funds received from such sale; 4. The amount and value of commodities transported during the year, as nearly as the same can be ascertained, together with such other facts as may be required by the head of such Bureau, under the authority of law.

Sixth. Though the existence of the Federal power to regulate commerce, to the extent maintained in this report, is believed to be essential to the maintenance of perfect equality among the States as to commercial rights; to the prevention of unjust and invidious distinctions which local jealousies or interests might be disposed to introduce; to the proper restraints of consolidated corporate power, and to the correction of many of its existing evils, yet your committee are unanimously of the opinion that the problem of cheap transportation is to be solved through competition, as hereinafter stated, rather than by direct congressional regulation of existing lines.

Seventh. Competition, which is to secure and maintain cheap transportation, must embrace two essential conditions: 1. It must be controlled by a power with which combination will be impossible; 2. It must operate through cheaper and more ample channels of commerce than are now provided.

Eighth. Railway competition, when regulated by its own laws, will not effect the object; because it exists only to a very limited extent in certain localities; it is always unreliable and inefficient; and it invariably ends in combination. Hence additional railway lines, under the control of private corporations, will afford no substantial relief, because self-interest will inevitably lead them into combination with existing lines.

Ninth. The only means of securing and maintaining reliable and effective competition between railways is through national or State ownership, or control, of one or more lines, which, being unable to enter into combinations, will serve as regulators of other lines.

Tenth. One or more double-track freight railways, honestly and thoroughly constructed, owned or controlled by the Government, and operated at a low rate of speed, would doubtless be able to carry at much less cost than can be done under the present system of operating fast and slow trains on the same road; and, being incapable of entering into combinations, would no doubt serve as a very valuable regulator of all existing railroads within the range of their influence

Eleventh. The uniform testimony deduced from practical results n this country, and throughout the commercial world, is, that water-routes, when properly located, not only afford the cheapest and best known means of transport for all heavy, bulky, and cheap commodities, but that they are also the natural competitors and most effective regulators of railway transportation.

Twelfth. The above facts and conclusions, together with the remarkable physical adaptation of our country for cheap and ample water communications, point unerringly to the improvement of our great natural water-ways, and their connection by canals, or by short freight-railway portages under control of the Government, as the obvious and certain solution of the problem of cheap transportation.

After a most careful consideration of the merits of various proposed improvements, taking into account the cost, practicability, and probable advantages of each, the committee have come to the unanimous conclusion, that the following are the most feasible and advantageous channels of commerce to be created or improved by the national Government, in case Congress shall act upon this subject, namely:

First. The Mississippi River.

Second. A continuous water line of adequate capacity from the Mississippi River to the city of New York, via the northern lakes.

Third. A route adequate to the wants of commerce, through the central tier of States, from the Mississippi River, via the Ohio and Kanawha Rivers, to a point in West Virginia, and thence by canal and slack-water, or by a freight railway, to tide-water.

Fourth. A route from the Mississippi River, via the Ohio and Tennessee Rivers, to a point in Alabama or Tennessee, and thence by canal and slack-water, or by a freight railway, to the ocean.

In the discussion of these four existing and proposed channels of commerce we shall, for the sake of brevity, designate them respectively the "Mississippi route," "Northern route," "Central route," and "Southern route."

THE MISSISSIPPI ROUTE.

The improvements necessary on the Mississippi route are—

First. The opening of the mouth of the river, so as to permit the free passage of vessels drawing 28 feet. Estimated cost, $10,000,000.

Second. The construction of reservoirs at the sources of the river—(if upon a careful survey they shall be deemed practicable.) Estimated cost, $114.000.

Third. Improvements upon a system to be provided by the War Department at all intermediate points, so as to give from 3 to 5 feet navigation above the Falls of Saint Anthony; from 4½ to 6 feet from that point to Saint Louis; and from 8 to 10 feet from Saint Louis to New Orleans, at the lowest stages of water. Estimated cost, $5,000,000.

The total cost of the Mississippi improvements may, we think, be safely estimated at $16,000,000.

THE NORTHERN ROUTE.

The improvements suggested on this route are—

First. The Fox and Wisconsin River improvement, by which 5 feet of navigation will be secured, during the entire season, from the Mississippi River to Green Bay, thereby affording the shortest and cheapest connection between the centers of wheat production and the eastern markets, and a continuous water channel from all points on the Mississippi River and its tributaries to the Atlantic Ocean. Estimated cost, $3,000,000.

Second. The construction of the Hennepin Canal (65 miles long) from a point on the Mississippi River, near Rock Island, to the Illinois River, at Hennepin, thereby affording the shortest and cheapest route from the largest areas of corn production to the East, and a connection by water between the river system of the West, the northern lakes, and the Atlantic Ocean. Estimated cost, $4,000,000.

Third. The enlargement and improvement, with the concurrence of the State of New York, of one or more of the three water-routes from the lakes to New York City, namely: the Erie Canal from Buffalo to Albany; or the Erie Canal from Oswego to Albany; or the Champlain Canal from Lake Champlain to deep water on the Hudson River, including such connection as may be effected with the co-operation of the British provinces between Lake Champlain and the Saint Lawrence River. Estimated cost, $12,000,000.

Total cost of Northern route from the Mississippi River to New York City, $19,000,000.

The enlargement of the Welland Canal, now in progress, with the construction of the Caughnawaga Canal and the proposed enlarge-

*This provision, it is believed, will prevent the discriminations now practiced against such ports, and will enable States which are separated from water lines by intervening States to reach such lines at reasonable cost. Congress has no power to regulate commerce wholly within a State, and hence States bordering upon such water lines will regulate the rates to ports within their own territory.

ment of the Champlain Canal, will enable vessels of 1,000 tons to pass from western lake ports to ports in Vermont and to New York City. The Erie Canal, enlarged as proposed, will pass vessels of about 700 tons.

The necessary improvement of the connection between Lakes Superior and Huron, and between Lakes Huron and Erie, should also be pressed to a speedy completion.

THE CENTRAL ROUTE.

The plan of improvement for this route contemplates—

First. The radical improvement of the Ohio River from Cairo to Pittsburgh, so as to give 6 to 7 feet of navigation at low-water. Estimated cost, $22,000,000.

Second. The improvement of the Kanawha River from its mouth to Great Falls, so as to give 6 feet of navigation at all seasons. Estimated cost, including reservoirs, $3,000,000.

Third. A connection by canal or by a freight railway from the Ohio River or Kanawha River, near Charleston, by the shortest and most practicable route through West Virginia, to tide-water in Virginia; the question as between the canal and freight railway to be decided after the completion of careful surveys and estimates. If by canal and slack-water, the estimated cost is $55,000,000; if by a freight railway, the cost would probably not exceed $25,000,000.

The total expenditure necessary for the improvement of the Ohio and Kanawha Rivers is estimated at $25,000,000. The amount necessary to complete the connection of the Ohio with tide-water depends upon the nature of the improvement, as above stated.

THE SOUTHERN ROUTE.

The plan suggested by the committee for the Southern route contemplates—

First. The improvement of the Tennessee River from its mouth to Knoxville, so as to give 3 feet of navigation at lowest stages of water. Estimated cost, $5,000,000.

Second. A communication by canal, or freight railway, from some convenient point on the Tennessee River in Alabama or Tennessee, by the shortest and most practicable route, to the Atlantic Ocean. The railway, if constructed, will be about 430 miles long; the question as between the canal and railway to be decided after a careful survey and estimate of both shall have been completed. If by canal, the cost will be about $35,000,000; if by railway, probably about $30,000,000. All of these routes are considered at length in the report of the committee, and the advantages, cost, and practicability of each is fully discussed.

SURVEYS RECOMMENDED.

Large portions of all of the above routes have been surveyed and careful estimates prepared by the War Department. It is recommended that appropriations be made at the present session of Congress for completing the surveys of the entire system of improvements proposed, in order to determine accurately the cost of each route and to enable the Government to enter at once upon the work, if the same shall be deemed practicable and expedient, after such surveys shall have been completed.

In presenting this general plan of improvements the committee wish to be distinctly understood that the ordinary annual appropriations for other important works in aid of commerce should not be omitted.

AGGREGATE COST.

The cost of the entire improvement will depend upon the decision to be hereafter made between the canals and the freight-railway portages on the Central and Southern routes. If the canals be constructed, the total cost will be about $155,000,000. If the railways be chosen, the total cost will be about $120,000,000.

An expenditure of from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 per annum will be required for six years, when the whole work can be completed. The resulting benefits will for all time annually repay more than the entire cost.

In view of the fact that private companies invariably combine with each other against the public, it is recommended that no aid be given to any route to be owned or controlled by private corporations, but that the four great channels of commerce suggested shall be improved, created, and owned by the Government, and stand as permanent and effective competitors with each other and with all the railways which may be within the range of their influence.

The committee believe that the water-routes suggested should constitute free highways of commerce, subject only to such tolls as may be necessary for maintenance and repairs. If, however, Congress shall deem it expedient to require them to provide interest on the cost of construction, and the means for ultimate redemption of the principal, the whole improvements will involve only a loan of Government credit.

NATIONAL CHARACTER OF THE WORK.

By reference to the map of the United States, it will be seen that the completion of the system of improvements proposed will provide four great competing commercial lines from the center of the continent to the Atlantic sea-board and the Gulf of Mexico. It will also be observed by reference to the crop-maps, republished with the report, that all of these routes lead directly from or through the greatest areas of production to those sections which constitute the greatest areas of consumption, thus dividing their benefits equitably between producers and consumers, and contributing to the development and prosperity of the whole country. The Great Architect of the continent seems to have located its rivers and lakes with express reference to the commercial necessities of the industrious millions who now and hereafter shall occupy it. The plan of improvements suggested by the committee merely follows the lines so clearly indicated by His hand.

The proposed improvements are so located as to distribute their benefits with great equality among all of the States east of the Rocky Mountains. Twenty-one of those States are situated directly on one or more of said routes; two States, Kansas and Nebraska, are so situated as to enjoy the full benefits of reduced cost of transportation from the Mississippi River by all of the proposed lines. Eleven States, namely, Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey, North Carolina, Florida, and Texas, nearly all of which consume largely the food of the West, and most of which are to a great extent dependent upon the West for a market for their manufactures and other products, are directly connected by the waters of the ocean with their several termini. The proposed improvements will, therefore, connect by the cheapest known means of transport every one of the thirty-four States east of the Rocky Mountains with all the others, and but one State in the Union will be without water connection with the whole world. The accomplishment of so great a result, by an expenditure of money comparatively so small, illustrates the wonderful provisions of nature for cheap commercial facilities on this continent.

These four great channels of commerce under public control, and hence unable to combine with each other or with existing lines of transport, will, by the power of competition, hold in check all the railways radiating from the interior to the sea-board, and by affording cheap and ample means of communication will solve the problem of cheap transportation. If local railways discriminate against them, it will be in the power of the States whose boundaries they touch to prescribe regulations for the correction of such discriminations. A law of Congress prohibiting discriminations against river or lake ports will enable the other States not directly upon any of said lines to reach them at reasonable rates. The committee submit that no plan of public improvement could be more eminently national in its character, nor diffuse its benefits more generally and equitably, than the one proposed, and they believe that the entire system of improvements indicated should be considered and acted upon as a whole.

I will now state more specifically, and as concisely as possible, the benefits and advantages anticipated from each route, and from the combined effects of the whole system when completed.

BENEFITS AND ADVANTAGES ANTICIPATED FROM THE NORTHERN ROUTE.

In the section of the report devoted to the Fox and Wisconsin River improvement and the Hennepin Canal, the committee have shown that by these improvements the cost of transport between the Mississippi River and the lakes can certainly be reduced an average of 10 cents per bushel, from all points west of the river, north of the parallel of Quincy, Illinois. This will include the whole of Minnesota, Iowa, and Nebraska, and a large part of Dakota, Kansas, and Missouri.

The following table, based upon the actual average railway charges in 1872, and upon an assumed charge of 6 mills per ton per mile down the Mississippi River and through the Fox and Wisconsin River improvement and 8 mills per ton per mile up the Mississippi, shows the saving that may be effected by the contemplated improvement from Prairie du Chien to Green Bay.

Table showing the actual cost of transportation by rail to Chicago, and the estimated cost (upon above basis) by the Fox and Wisconsin improvement from the river ports named to Green Bay.

From—	Actual cost per bushel of sixty pounds to Chicago by rail.	Estimated cost per bushel of sixty pounds to Green Bay via the Fox and Wisconsin improvement and the Mississippi River.	Saving by the improvement.
	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
Saint Paul	19.3	8.7	10.6
Winona	18.4	6.5	11.9
La Crosse	18.4	5.9	12.5
Prairie du Chien	18.4	4.8	13.6
Dubuque	17	5.1	11.9
Savannah	18	7.5	10.5
Fulton	17.5	7.9	9.6
Rock Island	15	8.8	6.2
Burlington	12	11.5	.5
Average	17.1	7.4	9.7

The rates estimated are higher than those which usually prevail upon similar water-routes—nearly double the average rates from Cincinnati and Louisville to New Orleans; and yet the average saving shown from all the ports named is 9.7 cents per bushel; from all of Minnesota and Northern Iowa ports the saving will amount to 12 cents per bushel.

Estimating the reduction to be effected by the Hennebin Canal upon the same basis, namely, 6 mills per ton per mile down the Mississippi, 8 mills up the river, and at 1 cent per ton per mile through the canals to Chicago, the saving is shown by the following table:

Table showing the actual cost of transport by rail to Chicago in 1872, and the estimated cost from the ports named by the proposed water-route.

	Actual average rail rates per bushel.	Assumed water rates per bushel.	Water rates less than rail rates.
	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
Saint Paul to Chicago	19.3	12.7	6.6
Winona to Chicago	18.4	10.5	7.9
La Crosse to Chicago	18.4	9.9	8.5
Prairie du Chien to Chicago	18.4	8.8	9.6
Dunleith to Chicago	17.0	7.8	9.2
Savannah to Chicago	18.0	6.3	11.7
Fulton to Chicago	17.5	6.2	13.3
Rock Island to Chicago	15.0	5.8	9.2
Burlington, Iowa, to Chicago	12.0	7.6	4.4
Average	17.1	8.4	8.7

If the river charges be estimated at the rates which actually prevail on the Mississippi during high water, or at the average rate charged from Saint Louis to New Orleans, the average saving would be about 9½ cents per bushel. With the Mississippi improved and the use of steam on the canal, I have no doubt the reduction will average at least 10 cents per bushel from all the river points named, and that competition of the canal will largely reduce the railway rates as far south as Saint Louis. It is therefore safe to say that the construction of these two improvements will reduce the charges from all points on the Mississippi River above Quincy, Illinois, from the present average of 17 cents to 7 cents per bushel.

It is believed by those who are best informed on the subject that the enlargement of the New York canals so as to pass boats of 600 to 1,000 tons will reduce the cost of transportation on that part of the line 50 per cent. The effects of the former enlargement of the Erie Canal was to reduce the cost of transportation one-half, and as the proposed improvement will more than treble its capacity, and permit the passage of boats of 690 tons instead of 210 tons as at present, there seems to be no reasonable doubt that the anticipated reduction will be accomplished. The establishment of reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, which shall induce the construction of the Caughnawaga Canal, (if such an arrangement can be made,) and which will encourage Canadian ship-masters to compete for the carrying trade on the lakes, will also materially cheapen the cost of transport to New England. The evidence taken by the committee fully justifies the opinion that by the enlargement of the New York canals, the construction of the Caughnawaga Canal, and the use of the enlarged Canadian canals, the cost of transport from Chicago to Burlington, Vermont, and to New York City will not exceed from 12 to 15 cents per bushel, making the entire cost from the Mississippi River to Burlington, Vermont, or to New York, not more than 22 cents per bushel, against the present cost of 43.6 cents by water and 50½ cents by rail. We may, therefore, reasonably estimate that by the proposed improvements upon this route a saving can be effected of 20 cents per bushel, or $6.70 per ton, on all the vast tonnage moved between that river and the East.

BENEFITS AND ADVANTAGES ANTICIPATED FROM THE CENTRAL ROUTE.

Assuming a charge of 4 mills per ton per mile on the Mississippi River and on the improved Ohio and Kanawha Rivers, a charge of 8 mills per ton per mile on the James River and Kanawha Canal, and 6 mills per ton per mile on the slack-water improvement, the following statement will represent the cost of transport from Cairo, Illinois, to Richmond, Virginia, by the central water line:

Cairo to Great Falls of the Kanawha, 790 miles, 4 mills per ton per mile	$3 06
From Great Falls to Richmond the distance (equating each lock at one-half mile of canal) is 509 miles, of which 348 is canal (equated) and 161 is slack-water:
Canal, 348 miles, at 8 mills per ton per mile	$2 78
Slack-water, 161 miles, at 6 mills per ton per mile	96
Total per ton for entire distance	6 80

Equal to 20.4 cents per bushel of sixty pounds.

If the freight railway from the Kanawha to tide-water be adopted, instead of the canal and slack-water improvement, the cost of transport from the Ohio River to the ocean will, it is believed, be substantially the same as above stated.

The Central route would be closed by ice only about thirty days each year, and hence it would be an active competitor with all the railways from the Mississippi River to the Atlantic, at times when competition is now suspended by reason of frost on the northern water-route. The effect of such a regulator of railway charges would be to greatly reduce the present winter rates, and, by the constant competition it would maintain, to compel uniformly low charges on all rail and water lines from the interior to the eastern and southern sea-board. Its advantages would be greatest, however, to the central tier of States. Four of the largest interior cities of the continent—Saint Louis, Cincinnati, Louisville, and Pittsburgh—are situated directly upon it. The trade of these cities, together with the other towns and cities on the Ohio River, is now far in excess of our entire foreign commerce. A vast area of the richest agricultural and mineral country in the world is directly tributary to it, and only awaits reasonable facilities for transportation to develop a commerce the magnitude of which it is difficult now to conceive.

It is due to this route to say that the estimated cost of transport is fully 50 per cent. higher than the figures relied upon by its special advocates. The committee have adopted them from superabundant caution, preferring to understate, rather than to risk an exaggeration of its advantages.

The evidence taken by the committee shows that the average charges on the Ohio and Mississippi are only 3½ to 4½ mills per ton per mile, and in some cases only 2 mills. The estimated cost for the Central route is lower than has been assumed for the Fox and Wisconsin improvement, or for the Hennepin Canal, the reason for which is that the season of navigation will be much longer, and hence vessels can be more constantly employed.

The saving to be anticipated from the Mississippi River to Richmond, Virginia, as against the present water-route to New York, estimated upon the basis just stated, is 23 cents per bushel, and against the all-rail route about 30 cents per bushel.

BENEFITS AND ADVANTAGES ANTICIPATED FROM THE SOUTHERN ROUTE.

Assuming the same rate of charges as in the estimate just made for the Central route, namely, 4 mills per ton per mile on open river, 6 mills per ton per mile on slack-water navigation, and 8 mills per ton per mile by canal, the following will represent the cost of transport by this route from Cairo to the ocean:

Open river, 980 miles, 4 mills per ton per mile	$3 92
Slack-water, 70 miles, 6 mills per ton per mile	42
Canal, 325 miles, 8 mills per ton per mile	2 60
Total per ton for entire distance	6 94

Equal to 20.8 cents per bushel of 60 pounds.

It is believed that a freight railway from the vicinity of Guntersville, Alabama, or Chattanooga, Tennessee, would enable this route to accomplish very nearly the same results. This route will never be obstructed by ice, and hence will afford unfailing competition throughout the year. Its greatest advantages, however, will be found not so much in furnishing a highway of commerce to the seaboard, as in opening up a valuable connection between the grain-growing States of the West and the cotton plantations of the South, whereby each section will have the full benefit of those crops for which its soil and climate are best adapted. It will connect with various southern rivers, penetrating a very large portion of the cotton districts of the South. It is believed that eventually inland navigation will be obtained at small expense along the coast of South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida, connecting with the rivers in those States which flow into the ocean. By this route the center of the cotton-producing districts can be reached from the center of the corn area, at a cost not exceeding 15 to 18 cents per bushel; and hence, in addition to the creation of a new competing avenue to the sea, the home market for food that will be developed, and the increased production of cotton that will be induced, will vastly more than compensate for the entire cost.

The same remark should be made with reference to this line as with regard to the Central route, namely, that the estimated cost of movement is much in excess of what is expected by its special friends and advocates. It will be observed that the saving to be effected on through freights to the sea-board is about the same as by the Central water line.

BENEFITS AND ADVANTAGES ANTICIPATED FROM THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENTS.

The evidence submitted with the report justifies the conclusion that, upon the completion of the entire improvement of the Mississippi River, wheat and corn can be transported from Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, and other States above Cairo, to New Orleans for an average of 12 cents per bushel, and that the cost from Saint Paul will not exceed 17 cents. The average rate from New Orleans to Liverpool in 1872 was about 27 cents, (currency,) which can be reduced, as shown by the evidence submitted by the committee, to 18 or 20 cents by the improvement at the mouth of the river. Estimating the cost from Saint Paul to New Orleans at 17 cents, the two tranfers at Saint Louis and New Orleans at 1 cent each, and the charge from New Orleans to Liverpool at 20 cents, the total from Saint Paul to Liverpool will be 39 cents per bushel. The charge, in 1872, from Saint Paul to Liverpool, including tranfers and terminals at Chicago, Buffalo, and New York, by the cheapest route, averaged 67.5 cents per bushel. The saving to be effected by the improvements of this route may, therefore, be estimated at 28 cents per bushel from Saint Paul to Liverpool, with a proportionate reduction from all other points on the river.

COMBINED BENEFITS AND ADVANTAGES OF THE PROPOSED SYSTEM OF IMPROVEMENTS.

In view of the benefits and advantages to be derived from each of the four proposed routes, and from their combined effects when in constant competition with each other and with the railroad system of the country, it is entirely safe to say that the completion of the system of improvements suggested will effect a permanent reduction of 50 per cent. in the cost of transporting fourth-class freights from the valley of the Mississippi to the sea-board, and that the cost of carrying a bushel of wheat or corn to the markets of the East, and of the world, will be reduced at least 20 to 25 cents per bushel below the present railway charges, and that a similar reduction will be effected on return freights.

The actual movement of grain to the eastern and southern markets in 1872, as shown by the carefully prepared statistics submitted with this report, amounted to about 213,000,000 bushels. An average saving of 20 cents per bushel on the surplus moved that year would have amounted to over $42,000,000. But for the fact that large quantities of corn were unable to find a market, on account of the high transportation charges, the amount moved would have been very much greater. Hence, in addition to the saving in transportation above named, a benefit perhaps equally great would have been conferred upon the producer in affording him a market for his surplus products.

To this must be added the enhanced value which such reduction would give to the improved lands of the West, amounting, in the eight Northwestern States of Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska, in 1870, to 55,841,000 acres. Estimating the productive capacity of these lands at an average of only 20 bushels per acre, (the average of corn, oats, &c., being, in fact, very much greater,) an addition of only 10 cents per bushel (one-half the estimated saving) to the value of the cereals those States are capable of producing, would give a net profit of $2 per acre, which is the equivalent of 10 per cent. interest on a capital of $20, and hence equal to an increase in the value of lands to that extent. Twenty dollars per acre added to the value of improved lands, in those States, would exceed an aggregate of $11,000,000,000. This calculation assumes that one-half of the reduction inures to the benefit of the consumer and the other half to the producer.

Add to all this the increased value of farms in other States, the increased value of unimproved lands, the enhanced value of cotton plantations, the benefits to accrue from reduced cost of movement of the products of the mine, the foundery, the factory, the workshop, and of the thousands of other commodities demanding cheaper transportation, and some conception may be formed of the vast additions to be made to our national wealth and prosperity by the system of improvements under consideration. In comparison with the great benefits and advantages reasonably to be anticipated, their cost is utterly insignificant.

The probable effect of such reduction in the cost of internal transportation upon our exports and foreign balances of trade is also worthy of the most careful consideration. America and Russia are the great food-producing nations of the world. Great Britain is the principal market. For many years America and Russia have been active competitors for the supply of that market. Until recently the farmers of the West have had the advantage of the wheat producers on the Don and the Volga; but a few years ago Russia inaugurated a system of internal improvements by which the cost of transporting her products from the interior to the sea-board is greatly reduced. The result is shown by the importations of wheat into the United Kingdom during two periods of five years each.

Imports of wheat from Russia and America into the United Kingdom from 1860 to 1864, compared with the imports from 1868 to 1872.

1860 to 1864, inclusive.		1868 to 1872, inclusive.
From—	Wheat.	From—	Wheat.
	Bushels.		Bushels.
Russia	47,376,809	Russia	117,967,022
United States	127,047,126	United States	116,462,380

An increase during the latter period as compared with the former of 70,590,213 bushels from Russia, and a decrease of 10,584,746 from the United States.

The cheaper mode of handling grain by elevators has not yet been adopted by Russia, but doubtless will be very soon. When this shall be done, and her wise system of internal improvements, which have already turned the wavering balances in favor of our great competitor, shall be completed, she will be able to drive us from the markets of the world, unless wiser counsels shall guide our statesmanship than have hitherto prevailed. In fact, as the increased size of ocean vessels is constantly decreasing the cost of ocean transport, and our wheat-fields are yearly receding farther westward from the lakes, it is not impossible that when she shall have driven us from the markets of Europe she will become our active competitor in Boston and Portland, if cheaper means of internal transport be not provided.

The value of American wheat in the British markets is about 7 cents per bushel over the average from all other countries, and about 5 cents per bushel above that imported from Russia. With this advantage in our favor, and with a reduction of 20 cents per bushel in the cost of internal transport, we might successfully demand the right to supply the markets of the world with food.

Our cotton exports are quite as unsatisfactory as the exports of other agricultural products. High transportation charges from the grain-fields of the Northwest to the cotton-fields of the South have compelled the planter to devote his cotton lands to the production of wheat and corn, for which they are by nature unsuited, thereby reducing the product of cotton and diminishing the market for grain. The effect upon our cotton exportations is shown by the following statement:

Receipts of cotton in Great Britain in 1860 compared with 1872.

1860.		1872.
From—	Cotton.	From—	Cotton.
	Pounds.		Pounds.
United States	1,115,890,608	United States	625,600,080
All other countries	275,048,144	All other countries	783,237,392

The cotton exports of the United States have fallen off nearly 50 per cent., while other countries have gained nearly 300 per cent. This is doubtless largely due to the war, which stimulated the production of cotton in India, but it is also attributable to a great extent to the causes just mentioned, and to the system of internal improvements inaugurated by Great Britain in India, for the express purpose of rendering herself independent of us for the supply of cotton. Every cent unnecessarily added to the cost of transportation is to that extent a protection to the cotton planters of India and the food producers of Russia, against the farmers of the West and the cotton planters of the South.

The murmurs of discontent which come from the overburdened West, the demand for cheaper food heard from the laboring classes at the East and from the plantations of the South, and the rapid falling off of our principal articles of export, all indicate the imperative necessity for cheaper means of internal communication. If we would assure our imperiled position in the markets of the world, reinstate our credit abroad, restore confidence and prosperity at home, and provide for a return to specie payment, let us develop our unequaled resources and stimulate our industries by a judicious system of internal improvements.

A reference to the expenditures of our Government since the adoption of the Constitution will show that in some matters we have been sufficiently liberal, but in appropriations for the benefit of commerce and for the development of our vast resources most parsimonious For public buildings, including those in the District of Columbia, and custom-houses, post-offices, and court-houses in other parts of the country, we have expended over $62,000,000; while for the improvement of the twenty thousand miles of western rivers, through which should flow the life-currents of the nation, we have appropriated only $11,438,300. For the improvements of these great avenues of trade, which were designed by nature to afford the cheapest and most ample commercial facilities for the teeming millions who inhabit the richest country on earth, we have expended an average of $133,100 per annum; while for public buildings we have appropriated an average of over $750,000 a year. Is it not high time that all expenditures not absolutely necessary be suspended, and that the imperative necessities of the country receive attention?

The people of the United States are excelled by none in public spirit and enterprise. In the development of our country through corporate and individual effort they may successfully challenge comparison with the most progressive peoples of the world. Through State efforts and independent corporate enterprises they have accomplished more in one century than any other nation has achieved in five hundred years. The difficulty is that the grand highways of commerce which have thus been created, and which have contributed so largely to the wealth and prosperity of the country, are rapidly passing under the control of a few individuals, who regard them only as instruments of personal and corporate aggrandizement, and who combine among themselves to exact from our industrial interests the last dollar they will bear. Let the Government, within its sphere, supplement the enterprise of the people, and rescue them from the grasp of corporate power, by opening up to free competition the four great natural avenues of commerce the committee have indicated, and the second century of the Republic will dawn upon a period of prosperity and advancement unequaled in its past history.

It may be said that in the present financial condition of the country, and with our heavy burden of indebtedness, we cannot afford to enter upon the system of improvements suggested. I answer that we cannot afford to postpone them.

It is true our debt is large and our industrial enterprises are temporarily deranged, but our resources are immeasurable, and need only a liberal and wise statesmanship to insure their full development.

The public debt of a nation is great or small according to the proportion it bears to the public wealth and to the commercial prosperity of the people who have it to pay. A debt that would have crushed the United States in 1800 would now scarcely be felt. In the exact proportion that our wealth increases the burden of our debt diminishes. In 1840 the entire national wealth was estimated at $3,764,000,000. At the close of the rebellion our national indebtedness had reached $3,300,000,000. Hence to have paid the debt of 1865 in the year 1840 would have required 90 per cent. of all the property in the country. On the 1st of March, 1874, our debt was $2,154,880,066. Our national wealth is estimated at over $30,000,000,000. While, therefore, the debt of 1865 would have consumed almost the entire property, public and private, owned in the United States in 1840, the payment of our present debt would require only about 7 per cent. of our present wealth. It is therefore apparent that the burden of the debt of 1874 is less than one-twelfth as great on our present property as the debt of 1865 would have been in 1840. If by the development of our resources we can maintain the same ratio of increase during the next twenty-five years that we have since 1850, the debt of the nation (if no further payments be made) will amount to only about 1 per cent. on our property in 1900. In other words, with the full development of our resources, which it is in the power of wise statesmanship to induce, the entire debt can be paid in the year 1900 by the assessment of a tax but little greater than is now required to meet the current expenditures of the Government. If it be true, then, that the burden of a nation's debt diminishes in exactly the same ratio as its wealth increases, is it not the dictate of wisdom and sound policy to pay only so much of our debt as may be necessary to keep our faith and maintain our credit, and to devote whatever surplus revenues may remain to such improvements as are required for the full development of our unequaled resources?

The most advanced nations of ancient and modern times have always regarded their highways of commerce of the first importance, and in exact proportion to the excellence of those highways have been the development of national resources and power and the augmentation of national wealth.

France has expended on her water communications $240,000,000. England, with a debt much larger than ours, with a smaller population, with a far less ratio of increase in population, wealth, and annual products, with a standing army nearly ten times the size of ours, and with a current expenditure 50 per cent. larger than ours in order to build up her manufacturing interests at home, guaranteed interest on an expenditure of $440,000,000 for the construction of railroads in India. Shall we hesitate to expend one-third of that sum in order to revive the drooping interest of agriculture, to give cheaper food to our manufacturing and laboring classes, to rescue the people from the power of monopolies, to regain our position in the markets of the world, and to restore our credit at home and abroad?

But I am asked, "How is the money to be raised for these improvements?" I reply, by a system of rigid economy in all expenditures not absolutely necessary, by which money enough can be saved for this purpose; second, by the issue of public-improvement bonds; or third, by taxation. If the latter policy be adopted I suggest that a restoration of the tax on tea and coffee will produce about $20,000,000 per annum, which will be sufficient to complete the entire works in six years. The repeal of that tax has caused but little, if any, reduction in the cost of those articles, and its restoration would not materially increase it. The reduction which would be effected in the cost of bread would more than compensate the consumer for any additional tax he would pay for his tea and coffee, and the enhanced profit to the producer would be greatly in excess of any loss he would suffer from such taxation.

At the end of six years the tax could be repealed, and these great public works would stand forever as monuments to the wisdom of the present Congress. I do not believe, however, that it would be necessary either to issue bonds or to levy additional taxes. The inauguration of the system of internal improvements indicated would so stimulate the business energies of the country that we would find it easier to raise the additional revenue required than it now is to meet existing obligations. The country is suffering from stagnation. A great nation such as ours cannot afford to stand still; much less can it afford to let its great industrial interests languish for want of proper facilities for development.

I have no patience with that class of political croakers who are always prophesying national bankruptcy. If the speeches that have been made in the Senate this winter were read abroad and believed our credit would be utterly ruined.

National bankruptcy! No, Mr. President, there is no danger of bankruptcy, except through the cowardice and lack of faith of those who guide the affairs of this great Republic. Let us cease talking of inability to meet our obligations, and go to work like men to increase our national wealth and utilize our immeasurable resources, and the people will take care of the national honor. What we most need to-day is statesmanship honest enough to stop all needless expenditures, broad enough to recognize and appreciate the present necessities and possible future of the country, and courageous enough to inaugurate and execute measures adequate to its highest development and prosperity.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask the Senator from Texas to withhold his motion for a moment.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to inquire whether an order has been made to print the report made by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM?]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No such order has been made, but it will be printed as a matter of course.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order that it may be sent to the Committee on Printing, I move that one thousand extra copies of the report be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Ohio will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

COLORED SOLDIERS' BOUNTIES.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to have the Senate take up at this time for consideration a bill which ought to be passed promptly; it is House bill No. H. R. No. 2868.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent to postpone the pending order informally and take up the bill referred to by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill (H. R. No. 2868) to render available an unexpended balance of appropriation for collection and payment of bounty, &c., for colored soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that the balance of appropriation, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for collection and payment of bounty, prize-money, and other legitimate claims of colored soldiers and sailors, unexpended at the expiration of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, may be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War for the payment of expenses incurred in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, in the collection and payment of bounty, prize-money, and other legitimate claims of colored soldiers and sailors.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. LOGAN. A bill was introduced and referred to the Committee on Patents in relation to the Haines harvester; and I was requested this morning by one of the parties to ask of the Senate to have the bill and papers withdrawn. Can that be done?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can move to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. And then ask leave to withdraw the papers?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will then be in the custody of the Senate and can be withdrawn by order.

Mr. LOGAN. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE SYSTEMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from Professor Joseph Henry, chairman of the Light-house Board, dated the 22d instant, covering the report of Major George H. Elliot, engineer, secretary of the Light-house Board, of his tour of inspection of the light-house establishments of Europe in response to a resolution of the Senate of March 30.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that that be referred to the Committee on Printing, and that the resolution which I send to the desk be referred with the report.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That two thousand copies of the report of Major George H. Elliot, of the Light-house Board, of a tour of inspection of European light-house systems, be printed for the use of the Treasury Department.

The resolution was referred, with the report, to the Committee on Printing.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3093) to relieve David A. Telfair from political disability was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Now I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 24, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KNAPP. I ask unanimous consent that there be a session of the House to-night for debate only as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, no business whatever to be transacted.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I object.

Mr. LOWE. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I would prefer to wait until the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GARFIELD] is present before any such order is made. Then, if it is the general desire of the House, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The matter can be brought up again.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I hope the House will go into Committee of the Whole at once upon the pending appropriation bill, and see if we can get through with it to-day.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. There are only——

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that we go at once into Committee of the Whole on the appropriation bill.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I was about to make that motion, even in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I am sure every member of the House is very anxious to have the appropriation bill disposed of. Certainly we cannot adjourn before next winter unless we make more rapid progress with the appropriation bills.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. There are only about sixteen pages more of the legislative appropriation bill; and if we work upon it to-day steadily, we can probably dispose of it, and have it out of the way. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of that bill.

Mr. CONGER. We had a session last night for the purpose of furthering action on the appropriation bill so that we might have the morning hour to-day. I have no objection to going on with the appropriation bill immediately after the morning hour; but I do think we shall progress faster with the business of the House by having the morning hour than by going on at once with the appropriation bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the House will let us go at once into Committee of the Whole. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the legislative appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. That motion is pending.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 91, noes not counted.

REFUND OF DUTIES ON FRUITS.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution, to which I think there will be no objection:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish to the House all correspondence between the Treasury Department and C. A. Arthur, collector of the port of New York, and George Bliss, jr., district attorney of said district of New York, relating to refunding custom duties on fruits, and copies of all orders given by the Treasury Department relating thereto.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest that the gentleman add "and all other correspondence."

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I suggest that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. RANDALL. There can be no objection to this.

Mr. MYERS. I believe that this matter has been settled.

A MEMBER. No, it has not.

Mr. MYERS. It has been settled so far as Congress is concerned.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 200) for the relief of the settlers on the Cherokee strip, in Kansas;

An act (H. R. No. 668) relative to private contracts or agreements made with Indians prior to May 21, 1874;

An act (H. R. No. 1039) for the relief of John B. Weber, late colonel of the Eighteenth Regiment Corps d'Afrique;

An act (H. R. No. 1575) for the relief of Richard H. Swift;

An act (H. R. No. 1581) for the relief of George S. Wright, administrator of the estate of John T. Wright, deceased; and

An act (H. R. No. 2193) to ratify an agreement with certain Ute Indians in Colorado, and to make an appropriation for carrying out the same.

GUBERNATORIAL CONTEST IN ARKANSAS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the papers called for by the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 20th instant, requesting all correspondence by telegraph or otherwise between the persons claiming to be governor of Arkansas and myself relating to the troubles in that State, together with copies of any order or directions given by me or under my direction to the military officer in charge of the garrison or in command of the United States troops at Little Rock.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, April 23, 1874.

The message, with accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

NATURALIZATION OF INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draught of a bill to enable Indians to become citizens of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF NAVY PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to an appropriation required for the payment of Navy pensions during the remainder of the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SUPERINTENDENT OF EDUCATION OF INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, recommending an amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 2343) providing for the appointment of a superintendent of education for the Indian Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary nf the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the House of the 18th instant, in relation to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, of this city; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

THOMAS LANNON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to the claim of Thomas Lannon for Indian depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MRS. MYRA CLARK GAINES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to certain private land claims in Louisiana, in the name of Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

RED RIVER BRIDGE.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the bill (H. R. No. 153) to authorize the construction of a wagon-road and foot-passenger bridge across the Red River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

J. H. COSTELLO.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the act of May 29, 1872, the claim of J. H. Costello for Indian depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, until Tuesday next on account of sickness in his family, and to Mr. HERNDON for three weeks.

HEIRS OF JONATHAN HAINES.

On motion of Mr. MCNULTA, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of the bill (H. R. No. 1472) for the relief of the heirs of Jonathan Haines, no adverse report having been made.

DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SWANN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3095) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made the special order immediately after the post-office appropriation bill, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve all points of order.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MELLISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a statement mainly personal to myself, but which I deem of considerable importance.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not object if the gentleman will state what time he will occupy.

Mr. MELLISH. I will occupy only a few minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. MELLISH. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to the report of the proceedings in the House on Wednesday as published in some of the New York papers yesterday. I do not complain of any intent of unfairness in the report, nor do I believe there was any on the part of the accomplished correspondent or reporter who furnished it. It is nevertheless true that readers of the account, and among them my constituents, might be misled in regard to my position upon a very important question, and in a way that it seems to me might prove exceedingly damaging to my political reputation. I therefore beg the indulgence of the House for a very few minutes to a statement of facts which shall place me right on the record. I certainly cannot remain serene and content under the express or implied stigma of being an "inflationist."

I quote from the report in the Tribune of the debate on the general appropriation bill:

Mr. CONGER (republican, Michigan) replied to Mr. TREMAIN in a tone of bitter sarcasm, first ridiculing the figure of speech in which the latter spoke of dew as following a beautiful storm. That, he said, was just as logical as the previous argument of the gentleman to prove that the prostration of all the vital industries of the country, and the stagnation of all business, and the eating up of the hoarded savings of the poor, would enable the people to pay higher taxes.

Mr. MELLISH (republican, New York) made a remark to the effect that the proposition was not to increase salaries, but only to continue them at their present rates.

Mr. CONGER thereupon turned upon Mr. MELLISH, whom he characterized as his "mellow mellowish" friend from New York, and assured him that, in not very dulcet notes, nor in very mellow tones thereby, thirty-nine millions of the American people would speak to him and his hard-fisted, money-grabbing comrades.

A VOICE. He is an inflationist. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. It may be that he is an inflationist. God knows; we cannot tell from one day to another what side high men or low men stand nowadays, and we cannot tell, either, what kind of influences creep around in this land to influence my friend from New York or other men in this matter.

A VOICE. Speak of the White House.

A correspondent of the Tribune gives the following account:

On an amendment to increase the salary of the chief clerk in the assay office at New York, three speeches were made which referred more or less directly to the veto. Mr. PARKER said, now that the glimmer of hard money could be seen, there ought not to be any talk about increasing salaries. Mr. TREMAIN eulogized President Grant, as the great chief who had proved himself equal to the emergency, and hoped that the inflationist majority would have the wisdom to follow him. It remained for Mr. CONGER to give expression to the doleful feelings of the "cheap money" party. In dismal tones he spoke of the prostration of the vital industries of the country and of the stagnation of business, and said he wished that the laboring men of the land might hear the House discussing propositions to increase salaries, while their last hope of gaining a livelihood was destroyed. He saw days of distress looming up; the people were groping in darkness and want. In reply to a question by Mr. MELLISH he showed that he did not understand the latter's position on the currency question, and when corrected he said it was not easy to know how men stood nowadays. He could not tell "what kind of influences were creeping around in this land to influence the conduct of the gentleman from New York, or other men, in this matter." The "other men" was obviously intended by Mr. CONGER to include the author of the veto message.

Now, as to the gratuitous and cowardly and characteristic insinuation of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] that my motives have been improperly influenced in this matter, I can well afford to pass it by unnoticed and treat it with the silent contempt which is warranted when we consider the source from whence it emanated. I will simply raise the inquiry in passing, (but I wish it distinctly understood that I make no such charge,) if the making of such an allegation, without the slightest foundation therefor in fact, does not constitute conduct unbecoming a member of this House or a gentleman?

The gentleman has called me his "mellowish friend from New York." Suppose I were to catch his disease of epithets, and viewing his extraordinary and unapproachable feats of mental agility, were constrained from the unparalleled exhibition to call him "my Conger-oo" (not to say kangaroo) "friend from Michigan," how would he like it?

But I desire emphatically to deny that I am an "inflationist." My speeches and my votes on this floor will bear out this assertion. I voted against what is known as "the Senate bill." I am rejoiced that President Grant has added to his long line of distinguished and meritorious services to the country (which envy and malice may carp at and attempt to belittle, but whose luster, as seen through the unprejudiced vision of a patriotic people, they cannot dim or diminish) by putting his veto on this "bill of abominations." I spoke and voted against the House bill presented by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and which is a vastly more mischievous measure than the one vetoed.

And to show that under the present circumstances I am opposed alike to contraction or expansion, I send to the Clerk's desk a brief extract from my speech of the 24th ultimo, as it appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

If the plan I have proposed cannot succeed, it seems to me that the best thing we can do is to fight for the statu quo, by opposing other schemes. My belief is that whatever other new scheme shall be adopted will be unpopular, because it will look to and will be expected to bring about specie payment, or what is called resumption, and will surely fail and disappoint and offend everybody.

Let us not fly to extremes and merit the epitaph of the valetudinarian, "I was well, wished to be better, took physic, and here I lie."

How to keep the purchasing power of money the steadiest possible is a difficult and important problem. That and just taxation are now the most vital questions of our experiment of popular government.

It is true that with any volume of currency that you can mention there will be plenty of individuals who have none, or too little. It is beyond the power of human invention to devise legislation which shall put money in every man's pocket. When you shall have by law filled the purses of all the people with money, you will have repealed the ancient beneficent ordinance, sometimes called curse, that by the sweat of his brow every man shall eat bread, and have taken away all the stimulus and main incentives to enterprise, industry, and frugality. Fix your currency so that any man who earns any shall have it of good quality. It is in vain by congressional legislation to provide one section with larger amounts of currency than another. You cannot well place currency by law. It will flow to the pockets and quarters of those who own it. You give one section arbitrarily an increased percentage and it will immediately float off to other sections where the industry and enterprise of the people are such as to entitle them to have it.

If we may believe the newspapers—and it is safe in thus referring to some of them to use the subjunctive mood—Congress may be assured that the very worst feature of the financial situation now consists in the fact that Congress is still considering it and discussing it. Perhaps it ill becomes me to say it, but I will venture the remark that it is a subject upon which "a few brilliant flashes of silence" would be true eloquence, excepting only the utterance of an emphatic and sonorous "no" upon nearly all bills and proposals to meddle with the currency.

We are tending toward appreciation of paper with gold by the operation of the laws of trade as fast as we can afford. Let well enough alone. Do not change for the sake of change. Should we not oppose alike schemes of inflation and schemes of contraction?

During the war we coined the credit of the nation into more than four thousand millions of credit capital, or credit money: United States bonds, United States bills, State bonds, county bonds, city bonds, town bonds, and bank bills. The expansion was tremendous. We were or became a vast credit balloon; and rose, and rose accordingly. We are now descending rapidly enough without the aid of Congress; and we must take care not to come down with a rush, lest when we do strike terra firma we may burst up the whole concern.

There has been great shrinkage of values, so that now there is not 12 per cent. between gold, the standard of the world, and greenbacks, the standard of the United States. The laws of production and trade will soon dispose of the 12 per cent. difference, and slide into a state of redemption as soon as the business of the country will stand it, if Congress will but let alone a matter which Congress cannot mend, except, as I believe, by establishing a national currency receivable for public and private dues, excluding only interest on bonds payable by their terms in gold.

Specie payments cannot be resumed until the banks can resume specie payments. It is not a question of intention or will, but of power. It is very easy for a doctor to say to his patient, "It is your duty to get well, and you ought to do so for the sake of your family." But if the patient is already dying, how is he to heed the advice of the doctor? We are told that the words, "Arise, take up thy bed, and walk," were spoken by the Son of God; if they had been uttered by a mere mortal, they would have had as little effect as a law of Congress decreeing resumption of specie payments would now have upon the banks.

Resumption will come silently, quietly, and gloriously, like the dawn of day, when most of the animated world is sound asleep, if we do not disturb the natural and universal laws of currency, production, accumulation, and distribution of wealth, which are, in fact, the laws of God implanted in the nature and impulses of the human family.

It would seem that the supply of paper money should be proportioned to the trade of the country, and from the nature of things the amount of Treasury notes in circulation must find its level in the public wants. Still the plea which is made that the wants of commerce—business transactions—require more currency may be no safe guide; for how can the sum required for such purpose be defined? Is not commerce likely to be insatiable in its demands? The question is not so much what amount of currency the wants of commerce can employ as the quantity that can remain in the channels of circulation without depreciation. Is there any safer rule than that the value of the paper dollar should be not less than the value of a dollar in gold? In other words, can any better rule be adopted than the one compendiously stated by Ricardo, to the effect that "if the commerce of a country increases, that is to say, if by its savings it is enabled to add to its capital, such country will require an additional amount of circulating medium; but under all circumstances the currency ought to retain its bullion value; that is the only sure test by which we may know that it is not excessive."

If gold be not the test by which to estimate depression of greenbacks, what is?

Can we find a safer guide, one more satisfactory to the public in general, than that an excessive circulation is indicated by its depreciation below the par value of gold coin, dollar for dollar?

If so, then it follows that paper currency, when below par as compared with gold, should not be increased in volume and thereby further depreciated. It certainly must be regarded as an excess of paper in fact when we find an increased price of commodities solely arising out of and occasioned by an increased amount of the circulating medium. Is there not an excess of paper in circulation while it does not pass at gold value dollar for dollar?

It was in accordance with these views that on Monday last I voted in favor of the proposition of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, [Mr. DAWES,] "that hereafter the total amount of United States notes in circulation at any one time shall not exceed $356,000,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to withdraw from circulation and to cancel whatever amount of such notes as are now in circulation beyond that sum as soon as the same can be done consistently with the exigencies of the Treasury." And what I have said will also explain why I voted against fixing the amount of legal-tender notes at $400,000,000, which was passed by the vote of 168 to 77.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I move that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] be permitted to reply.

The SPEAKER. The House is in Committee of the Whole.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WOODFORD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last evening the pending question was on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to strike out the following paragraph:

Bureau of Education:

For Commissioner of Education, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; one clerk of class four; one statistician, with the compensation of a clerk of class four; one clerk of class three; one translator, with the compensation of a clerk of class three; one clerk of class two; four copyists, at $900 each; one messenger, $840; and one watchman; in all, $18,360.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of very great, I will not say supreme, satisfaction to me that my friend from New York [Mr. MELLISH] has had an opportunity before the United States Government, that is, before this branch of the Government, and not in the Committee of the Whole, as I have to reply to him, to say whatever he may have to say in regard to myself and to apply such affectionate epithets as suit his temper in regard to me and my mode of attack. I am the last man in the world who will deprive any gentleman of this House of the privilege of exercising his cultivated and æsthetic taste in the choice of epithets to myself. I always object to an interruption of it when used in regard to others. My friend has gratified his vanity. It is barely possible, although I never dreamed so amiable a looking gentleman could have any malice to gratify personally against me; but he has had the opportunity of gratifying his taste, whatever it may be, in the use of epithets perhaps undeserved and perhaps deserved, and there I leave the matter.

I misunderstood his remarks the other day, to which I responded jocosely and with the kindest feeling in the world and in the way of that which is called the lowest kind of wit—and I acknowledge it to be so—punning. He had friends around him who said, while I was speaking the other day, that he had always been an inflationist, which he denies this morning. It was the fault of those who intruded themselves in his defense here to me while I was speaking. In the same manner some amiable gentleman suggested to him to make some remarks at the close of his speech as he thought to my prejudice. Let me say to the gentleman from New York we always have around us very loving friends who are willing to make us the cat's-paw with which they can haul the chestnuts from the fire. He was the victim in that case; I may be in the other. I suggest to him that we do not allow ourselves to be used by these officious friends around us to bring us into ridicule any oftener than the necessities of the case require. Our mutual afflictions require me to join hands with my friend from New York for our mutual protection; and for one I trust if there was any little accretion of bile in the gentleman, that having worked it off in the proper, legitimate, constitutional, and legislative way, and in a judicial way too, I apprehend there will be no further occasion for the old cause of complaint to renew any acrimonious debate on this subject, especially in regard to a matter that was, to say the worst of it, a foolish and innocent amusement.

Mr. MELLISH. I desire to clasp hands with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr CONGER]—whose ability, eloquence, wit, and faithfulness in the discharge of his duty I have never questioned; indeed, they have always excited my admiration and respect—across, not a "bloody chasm" warm with passion and crimson with carnage, (for a Poland, even a Poland of Vermont, is between us;) and if there were any "hard feelings" on my part they would be healed and reconciled in the sweet oblivion of the rhetorical flowers with which he has encompassed this our second greeting. To change the figure, I am amply recompensed for any slight misunderstanding that may have occurred by the mental exhilaration I have experienced while devotedly sitting here beneath the arrowy sleet of his gay rhetoric so profusely showered in derisive benedictions upon my shimmering frame.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the committee will now come to a consideration of the pending question. Will the Chair state what that question is?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] to strike out the paragraph relating to the Bureau of Education.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The motion I made being liable to the point of order, that it is contrary to existing law, I withdraw it, and move to amend the paragraph by striking out the words "one clerk of class three."

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Chairman, I propose making some general remarks on the subject suggested by the bill now under consideration. The Bureau of Education was established by the Fortieth Congress, and then $6,000 was considered ample for its purposes. Now nearly $40,000 are required to carry out the functions of this Bureau. While I would not oppose a small appropriation, for I concur in the general object and original purpose for which it was originated, that is, for the collection and dissemination of statistics and other useful information on educational topics, I deem it unwise and dangerous to expand its powers, and entirely unnecessary to appropriate more than will sustain it within its original scope. To that extent I will sustain it, for I approve of all legitimate means and necessary expenses to encourage and advance an interest so vital as the cause of education. I maintain that it is a duty incumbent upon the citizen and public authority, and the most beneficent exercise of the power confided to Government, to protect and foster every legitimate scheme of popular education. But the grave question is presented of the power of the Federal Government to exercise control over the educational institutions of the country, as the tendency of this Bureau is to extend its operations and to assume an authority beyond the sphere of its original purpose.

Under the operation of the spirit of consolidation which animates the party in power, a bureau can soon expand its dimensions, amplify its functions, and grow into a department, and the rapid growth of this Bureau foreshadows in the early future a determination to extend its jurisdiction over the whole system of public education and to absorb all the authority now exercised by the several States. The different measures which have been presented for the consideration of Congress, extending aid to the States for the purposes of education, no matter in what form or upon what condition, have all the same inherent tendency, if not deliberate object, to regulate by Federal authority the educational institutions of the country and to establish a national system of education. It is claimed that the constitutional right of the General Government is ample and complete, and the advocates of this proposition are bold enough to demand not only the right, but they assert that it is the duty of the Government to regulate and control the means of popular education. The Bureau of Education, howsoever proper and useful in its original purpose, affords the opportunity for this interference with our municipal and State systems, and in this view all efforts to extend its authority or erect it into a department must be opposed. No considerations of the importance of secular education should influence us in so unconstitutional an act as investing the General Government with the functions of the States. The rankest consolidationist could desire no more effective means of establishing on the ruins of free government the unification of the nation. One by one the safeguards of republican liberty perpetuated by our Federal system have vanished. The war power of the Government was claimed as the warrant for the gross usurpations which have made the executive arm strong enough to set aside the will of the people and make a State subservient to the illegitimate authority of a governor and Legislature foisted into power by Federal bayonets. When the General Government by act of Congress seizes control of the education of the people, the last vestige of free institutions will have been yielded to the remorseless demand of centralization and despotism.

I am led to these remarks, Mr. Chairman, at this time when appropriations are sought to perpetuate this Bureau, because I desire to reprobate and condemn the policy which seeks to accomplish by indirect means the centralization and consolidation at the capital of all authority over the first and strongest incentive to liberty, the right of the citizen to free education. The precedents of the past history of our Government do not bind the republican party, and through its avowed leaders it claims the right, and assumes that the power of the General Government is ample to say how the people of a State shall be educated. No such authority was ever claimed by the fathers. Among the constitutional grants to the Federal Government no authority was given to establish a bureau or department to manipulate the institutions of learning and concentrate the authority to educate the people in the agents of the Federal power. In the great discussion which took place in Congress in accepting the fund left by Smithson, which led to the erection of the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, the great men of that day asserted that no authority could be claimed by the Government to interfere with the State educational systems. Mr. Adams in his speech in 1846 said that "there was no way in which the States could more degrade themselves than by relying on foreign aid or on the General Government for the education of their children." This was the doctrine and the principles of the statesmen who framed our Constitution, and for nearly a century maintained it unsullied by the innovation of amendments, under the shadow of which the greatest crimes against the independence of the States and the liberties of the citizen are perpetrated and justified.

Whatever the effect of other measures which have been introduced into Congress looking to the control of the railroads, commerce, the telegraph, and savings-banks, and to what greater or less extent the governmental control of these vast interests would enlarge its functions and be dangerous to the reserved powers of the States, there can be no pretense or object in centralizing the authority to educate the people but to unify the nation by a complete subjugation of the powers of the States, and thus render the central Government supreme and the cardinal principle of the republican party, consolidation, a successful achievement.

I ask attention to a few of the unconstitutional and centralizing powers already seized upon, or proposed by the Administration and the republican party in Congress; the measures which have revolutionized our form of government, bankrupted the Treasury, destroyed public confidence in the integrity and honesty of official life, and substituted for patriotism and love of country a thirst for gold, a lust of official power, and a total disregard of public morality and personal honor. Under their operation, constitutional restraints have given way before the rapid expansion of personal government. The Executive authority keeps pace with the jurisdiction assumed by Congress; republican simplicity vanishes before the etiquette of the court circle; profligacy and vain display embellish the illegitimate fortunes that spring up in a day, the chiefs of the Executive Departments, the princes of the state, mid the splendid retinue of their clerical attachés, regale their hours of leisure planning some new scheme to fetter the people and introduce the reign of absolutism.

The recent amendments to the Constitution, under the sanction of which so much infamous and oppressive legislation has been enacted, mark the transition of our Government from the domain of Federal authority to the sphere of supreme power. They were adopted at a time when, inflamed with the hate and rancor of the civil war, with many of the States unreconstructed, the country was in no fit condition looking to its welfare to enact measures permanent in their character and so radical and inimical in their effects on the States of the South.

Following in the line of these amendments, we behold the exercise of executive usurpation so wanton in its character as to claim no warrant in law or constitution; arbitrary edicts, the arrest, imprisonment without trial, and conviction without evidence of citizens in the Southern States; men guiltless of crime denied the benefit of defense before the judicial tribunals of their respective domiciles, but sent to swift punishment in foreign prisons by sentence of United States courts, whose judges were but the instruments of political partisanship. Then we have laws passed to destroy the freedom of local and State elections; the Army called into play to carry a State in the interests of the dominant party, that its influence may be felt at the presidential election. Where is our boasted liberty when fraud and intimidation are seconded by bayonets to defeat a free expression of the people, when in a time of peace, bullets, not ballots, secure the election of the officers to fill the high offices of State?

Following all this, and worse in their effects on the morale of the people, come the fraud, oppression, and espionage practiced in the execution of the laws; the wholesale corruptions in every department of the Government; the illegal and profligate expenditures of the public money; the ostentation and regal splendor of equipment of public servants, and this at a period when every industry is languishing, commerce departed from our waters, trade from our streets, and the honest mechanics and workingmen by thousands are parading our cities and starving for bread.

It may be asserted, Mr. Chairman, that these are evils inseparable from the operations of government. Why, then, are they the offspring of the present? Are they not the outgrowth of the rule of the republican party? Had they existence in democratic times? Then economy ruled in the councils of the nation, the public debt was scarcely an item for consideration. Now, while the Treasury is bankrupt; our reserves illegally squandered; our paper dishonored, and a new issue of millions of irredeemable paper money demanded, public expenditures are increasing; official salaries augmented; the revenues of the Government dissipated and stolen by millions for division among the rings and predatory hordes that infest the capital, and much more wasted in investigating committees originated to whitewash offenders.

RULE OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

Before proceeding to consider the educational question I desire to say a word in regard to the public service. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, made an admirable speech last month on the general financial condition of the country. The profligacy of the administration was confessed, and the abundant need of reform and retrenchment admitted. He stated that the total expenditures of the Government, including all outstanding appropriations for which the Government was then liable, were $393,846,650.74, against available resources amounting to $341,780,001.49; so that, if the Government were called upon for all appropriations, there would be at the end of the year a deficit of $52,066,649.25. He further stated that the actual expenditures for 1873 were $290,345,245.33, and the appropriations for 1874 $319,000,000. He demanded that economy should be practiced, and as an illustration of the waste of public money gave a statement of some of the expenditures in the public service. In the customs department, in thirty-two ports where there were no receipts, the pay of the employés was $75,259.78, and in fourteen ports where the receipts aggregated about $2,000, the pay of employés was over $72,000, But, sir, other gentlemen would prefer increased taxation to reduced expenditures. They lament the repeal of the duty on tea and coffee, which yielded so large a revenue to the Government. Why is it, Mr. Chairman, that economy is unpopular on the other side of the House, but that the rings of the party, the wealthy corporations, the monopolists, desire no economy? Their time of harvest is when extravagance prevails and millions are illegally dispensed to sustain measures that impoverish the people and drain the life-blood of the nation.

GENERAL EXPENDITURES.

Figures, Mr. Chairman, are more reliable than words, and I therefore ask the attention of the House in respect to some of the matters to which I have adverted. I quote from official statistics. The expenditures for the year 1874 estimated in the report of the Secretary amount to $321,477,616.35; while the receipts amount to $291,910,000, leaving a deficit of $29,567,616.35 to be made up by one of three means: borrowing, and thereby adding to the public debt, now so onerous; by taxation, or by retrenchment. To meet this deficit increased taxation is proposed; but, sir, the country in unmistakable language demands retrenchment, and that is the predicament in which the republican party is placed; this is the problem I commend for their solution. How will they retrench in the face of the corrupt influences controlling the party? One means I suggest for their consideration—reorganize the Departments of public service, disestablish many of their Bureaus, which are not required and were only created during the press of business growing out of the necessities of the war, decimate the army of office-holders whose employments are sinecures and whose mental capacities are only tested by the patience required to await the monthly return of pay-day; retire from the rolls of your Army and Navy the supernumeraries of every grade not necessary to officer these arms of the service; reduce your Army to a peace footing, and instead of quartering it in the Southern States or in the useless fortifications on the sea-coast, let it be employed in protecting the fontier and maintaining peace on the plains. By these and like means we may return to something like a standard of expenditures that will justify a further reduction of taxes and give relief to the people.

But, Mr. Chairman, judging by the past rule of the republican party, I have no expectation of speedy reform. When I consider the expansion of the powers of government under its rule, the vast increase of officers, who are yearly multiplied, and have become as the locusts of Egypt, devouring the substance of the people and absorbing the revenues of the Government, I am forced to the conclusion that the régime of corruption and oppression will be perpetuated and enforced until a change of administration shall be wrought by an indignant country.

I give a statement of the number of employés of the Government in the several years named:

1859	44,527
1861	46,049
1865	53,167
1867	56,113
1871	57,605
1873	86,660

. It is apparent from this table that while the office-holders before the war were 44,527, and the number in 1867, after the enormous labors of the Departments growing out of the war had been mainly discharged, was 56,113, that over 30,000 new offices have been created under the present Administration, for the number for 1873 is 86,660, and constantly increasing. Comment is unnecessary. This statement is so extraordinary, that only official figures which I have given would verify so grave a charge.

Now, sir, let us see the rate of progression in expenditures in some of the Departments:

EXPENSES IN THE INDIAN BUREAU.

In 1868 the Indian account was	$3,998,353 59
In 1873 it had increased to	7,951,704 88

This is the result of the so-called peace-policy dealing with the wards of the Government, and does not include the Army and other expenses incident to the management of the Indian Bureau. Our military Executive deemed it wise to employ a board of civilians to take care of the Indians on the christianizing principles in vogue in the other branches of the public service. What is the effect of this unexampled statesmanship?

It reminds me of the wonderful results of certain missions to other Indians under the rule of our cousins across the Atlantic. By this policy the Indians have become more warlike and defiant, and I hazard the statement that only extermination will secure peace, while the corrupt agents of the Government rob and plunder them to the extent of millions and attempt reconciliation by the charitable dispensation of rifles and whisky. As an example of this rule I give an extract from Bishop Whipple's letter on the pine-timber contracts in Minnesota:

> Over one-half of our vast territory once belonged to the Chippewas. It was an Indian paradise. Its lakes and rivers were filled with fish, and each autumn brought the wild rice, God's manna, for the red man. The forest and prairie were full of game, and gaunt famine never came to the hunter's wigwam. We bought it all for a few cents an acre. We made pledges of everything a Christian people can do for a heathen people. I will not speak of the way human cupidity was enriched by the treaty. We did not keep our faith. Our politicians made the agencies the reward of political favorites.
>
> We not only permitted dishonesty and fraud, the fire-water flowed like a stream of death into their country; their wives and daughters were corrupted, and the heathen were dragged to a depth of degradation their fathers never knew. Worse than this; while we permitted every evil to destroy them, we left them wholly without law. No white man has ever been punished for the robbery, seduction, or murder of an Indian. We have never attempted to give them law to protect the innocent or punish the guilty. They have killed each other on the streets of our cities and villages; no questions were asked. We have never attempted to redress any wrongs.

NAVAL EXPENDITURES.

The naval expenses were in 1868	$16,288,244
The amount demanded for 1874	22,276,257

I do not object to the reasonable increase of expenses of the Navy for the current year, because of the extraordinary demands growing out of the seizure of the Virginius and prospective war with Spain. Yet it is pertinent to inquire what we have to show as a return for the expenditure of over one hundred and twelve millions in six years of profound peace. My colleague, [Mr. ARCHER,] in his speech on naval affairs demonstrated that our Navy was utterly inefficient; and, counting rotten ships, disabled iron-clads, and our entire resources in that line, we were in no condition to defend our commerce, and in case of war our ports would be at the mercy of even so weak a power as Spain. The explanation, Mr. Chairman, is easily found. While I believe that the naval appropriations are not too extensive for the service and to maintain the honor of the country, it is no less true that the corruption fund receives a heavy re-enforcement from this source. In time of elections it does good service. Our navy-yards become vast asylums for the training of men skilled in the science of the ballot and the bludgeon, and through the force and energy of this ready arm of the service battles are won which decide the fortunes of a State, and, it may be, the result of a presidential election.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Before examining the estimates of the Post-Office Department I concluded that its exhibit would be an exception to the rule of increased expenditures. The head of that Department in his reports to Congress demanded the repeal of the franking privilege upon the plea that then the Department would be self-sustaining.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the wisdom and prophetic vision of that officer has been illustrated by the fact that notwithstanding the repeal of the franking abuse the deficiency in his Department is greater than ever.

The expenditures of the Post-Office Department were—

In the year 1868	$22,730,592 65
In 1870	23,998,837 63
And for 1874, (estimated)	33,929,912 00

Showing an increase in six years of 50 per cent. The deficiency for the present year is over four million dollars.

These figures demonstrate the fact that the Postmaster-General reasoned from wrong premises when he foretold that the Department would yield a revenue to the Treasury instead of requiring an annual appropriation of many millions to sustain it. He omitted in his calculation to take into account the necessity of keeping the Department up to the standard of party progression; let me remind him of the fact that in two years, from 1871 to 1873, the office-hunters were accommodated to the number of seventeen thousand increase with easy places and good salaries in this most economical Department. The amount of frauds in contracts charged against the post-office will doubtless account for many millions more of expenditures.

EFFECT OF REPUBLICAN RULE.

Without enumerating the increase in expenditures in the other departments of the public service, I repeat that the republican party in its governmental policy has grievously oppressed every section of the country; it has perpetrated fearful wrongs to secure partisan triumphs; it has allowed the high officers of the Government to misappropriate and illegally disburse the public money; it has permitted them, in the execution of the laws, by a system of violent intimidation and blackmail to exact immense sums of money not due to the Government; it has, by the use of the Army, despoiled sovereign States of their legitimate government and established the despotism of the sword, while unprincipled adventurers have been allowed to grow rich on the plunder of the people. It has failed to give protection to our citizens who have been brutally treated and imprisoned in foreign lands; it has allowed American citizens to be inhumanly sacrificed to the Moloch of Spanish malignity without redress, and finally it has permitted the obligations of the country to be dishonored, and it has destroyed the faith and confidence of the people in the highest judicial tribunal of the Republic.

MEASURES OF CENTRALIZATION.

There are other important measures pending before Congress which would be more centralizing in their effect than the legislation already enacted. They have received the approval of the Executive Departments, and have been reported by or are being considered by committees of the House. The theory of the Postmaster-General that Government control of the telegraph as an auxiliary to the post-office would conduce to the public advantage is in keeping with the statesman-like views he puts forth whenever he rushes into print. It would certainly increase the magnitude of his Department and be a most desirable adjunct when a little coercion was needed to convince the people of the sublimity of submission to renewed usurpation. Besides, sir, it would be a valuable re-enforcement in the creation of a new and numerous army of office-holders, whose pleasure would consist in drawing salaries and magnifying their chief.

POSTAL SAVINGS-BANKS.

When we consider this proposition, in connection with the establishment of postal-savings banks, its startling nature becomes apparent. In the savings-banks of the country are deposited over one thousand millions of money belonging to the people, mainly the poorer classes. The control of even a liberal proportion of this amount and its investment by Government agents would afford an ample field for the cultivation of the arts and devices whereby the people are fleeced of the profits of daily toil, and the stock-jobbers and Treasury agents, being the victors, are entitled to the spoils. The Postmaster-General is prolific of ideas, and this one concerning Government control of the telegraph is a borrowed one. The monarchical institutions of England have been fortified by a telegraph monopoly, but they have found it unprofitable; and after exhausting the revenues of the telegraph department they drew on the deposits of the postal savings-banks (another British institution) to the extent of $4,000,000. When this maladministration was exposed, the postmaster-general was forced to resign. I much fear that in a similar state of circumstances, surely to follow our introduction of these schemes, our Postmaster-General would, on the principles of the republican party, be entitled to immediate promotion.

The bill to regulate interstate commerce, Mr. Chairman, which has passed this House and is now before the Senate, is a dangerous remedy for assumed local evils, and as wild an exercise of doubtful, if not unconstitutional, power as was ever attempted by Congress. No such authority was ever delegated to the Government nor claimed until now. The writings of American publicists and the decisions of our courts have uniformly negatived any such paramount authority in Congress as the regulation of the tolls and fares and the general management of railroads. The meaning of the words "to regulate commerce among the several States," in section 8 article 3, of the Constitution, can be best ascertained by examining contemporaneous writings of those who framed that instrument. From these it is apparent that the power only referred to the laying of duties on imports in regard to foreign nations and prohibiting restrictions of trade and commerce between the several States. In 6 Law Register Mr. Justice Grier decided that "Congress has the exclusive power to regulate commerce; but that has never been construed to include the means by which commerce is carried on within the States." Canals, railways, &c., have heretofore been exclusively subject to legislative control, and Congress should have hands off. This control is attempted for the purpose of cheapening transportation at the demand of the grangers, and a board of nine persons is to be constituted to hold this power over the railroads and to compel them to exact only reasonable and uniform rates. Why, Mr. Chairman, no one who understands the persuasive power of railroad influences can doubt for a moment that ere this measure becomes a law the same manipulations which it is said elect Legislatures and control Congresses may have dictated the appointments to fill the board of commissioners. I fear the grangers will find this bill a word of promise to the ear broken to the hope. But, Mr. Chairman, I regard it as only another of the usurpations of power by which the republican party seeks to maintain its ascendency and revolutionize our form of government. The demand of the West for cheap transportation is thus made the excuse for the passage of this bill, which derides the authority of the States, monopolizes a vast and increasing power for partisan political ends, and insures the further subjugation of the people.

It is not my purpose to inquire further into the unconstitutionality and the constant menace of these kindred schemes of legislation. It is sufficient to point out their operation and effect. They are at best dangerous innovations of the well-settled principles of the Constitution as hitherto sacredly regarded by the country, and are arbitrary and unwarrantable invasions of private rights, having no precedents in the history of our Government, and are at war with the spirit of republican institutions.

NATIONAL EDUCATION.

I have thus briefly referred to the many abuses of the Government under the auspices of the republican administration, and have attempted to point out particular measures which have relation to my argument. My desire is to show the tendency and spirit of a policy which adheres to and sustains every proposition that withdraws our Government from the rule of the Constitution as interpreted by the great statesmen of a past, and, I think, a purer age, to show wherein we are approaching an epoch when the liberties of the people will be completely absorbed in the will and authority of the Government at Washington, and when all other sources of power will be subjected to executive caprice and dictation.

I now return, Mr. Chairman, to my main proposition, which is that it is the design of the leaders of the republican party to establish national education.

I ask attention to the statesman-like convictions of the successor in the Vice-Presidency of the eminent Christian statesman, Schuyler Colfax. They are tersely expressed in the following words, taken from a late contribution to the literature of the country:

> From the adoption of the Constitution this Government has been an absolute despotism, with only the forms of liberty.

Again:

> That for the first time since the adoption of the Constitution is the Government of the United States consistent with its creed, or the nation a republic in anything but name.

In this article Mr. WILSON reviews the progress of the Government, the changes in our organic law, and heralds the mission of the republican party to be the unification of the nation, through the medium of national education, and to that end he recommends the passage of all laws that will prostrate the States, denude them of their reserved rights, and make the American citizen the subject of a centralized empire.

If the Vice-President be authority, then the mission of the republican party is to be achieved by laying violent hands on what I have characterized as the dearest privilege of the citizen—to elect how and where his children may be educated. The State free-school system, which has so strongly commended itself to our different communities, is to be superseded by a system, national in its character, whereby the Government or its Bureau or Department shall direct all its operations, select or publish the books of instruction, books compiled and edited on the Massachusetts system, that will impress our children with the modern ideas of purity and integrity on the principle of "addition, division, and silence." Future generations will be taught a new history of the Republic; and while Grant will be elevated to the position of the saviour of his country, Washington will be remembered only as an officer of some military reputation born in the rebel State of Virginia. They, sir, will be taught new and false ideas of the Constitution and our form of government, paving the way for a complete subversion of civil liberty and a permanent overthrow of the social order and free institutions upon which all hope of republican freedom depends.

The article from which I have quoted is entitled "New departure of the republican party." New departure from what? From the Constitution? From our republican form of government? From the federal system of State sovereignty and a central government of powers limited by the organic law, certainly, for Mr. WILSON says that our Government under the Constitution has been an absolute despotism with only the forms of liberty, and therefore it is the duty of the republican party to depart from its teachings, to cast it aside, and erect a new government of liberty and law on the basis of the unification of the nation. To use his own words, "Who can overestimate or exaggerate the magnitude or importance of such a revolution? Who can appreciate the changed condition of affairs, and estimate aright the full significance of such an overturn in the structure of American society and in the administration of the Government of the nation?" I reply, Who, but they who have experienced the beneficent results of such government? And need we go far to find a people basking in the sunshine of such a rule as Mr. WILSON desires to see erected as a substitute for the government established by our fathers? Need we travel to any of the oppressed nationalities of the Old World? No, Mr. Chairman, unhappily our own country affords vivid illustrations to the discredit and dishonor of the American name. Look at the picture presented by Louisiana and South Carolina under the rule of the usurper, the spoiler, and the negro. Ruin and desolation, not only threatened but inevitable, for both communities have well-nigh exhausted all hope of relief except by violent revolution. The corruption, embezzlement, and open, shameless robbery practiced by the usurping government in Louisiana, and by the debased and ignorant negro vampires of South Carolina, have ended in practical confiscation of all the property of the respective States.

No people on earth live under a rule as lawless, malignant, and despotic, and I assert that these examples are the legitimate and certain results of the form of government that will be inaugurated in this Capitol if the people do not awaken to the consciousness of the designs of the republican leaders, and give to them a "new departure" from the stations of power which they have so long dishonored.

Mr. WILSON goes on to say:

The two great necessities of the country at the present time are unification and education.

They stand or fall together. In other words, to unify the nation, centralize its power, the Government must control the education of the people. He proceeds:

What, then, is the present duty of this great national (republican) party? Its first great duty is administration. Intrusted by the nation with the seals of office and scepter of power, it is responsible for their faithful use. Having proclaimed its public policy and received the nation's emphatic indorsement, it must carry it out to a successful issue, especially so much as is embodied in the constitutional amendments and their consequent legislation, * * * the party should commit itself to appropriate legislation. There can be no question of either the necessity or legitimacy of legislation that contemplates the unification and education of the people.

"Now that, with the general rejection of the State-rights heresy, State lines are becoming fainter and State individuality is being more and more absorbed into national unity, it is apparent that the educational policy of the States which have hitherto sustained free schools should be substantially adopted by the nation; the Bureau of Education should be strengthened, and Mr. HOAR'S bill for the establishment of a system of national education or something tantamount thereto should receive the immediate attention of Congress and the undivided support of republicans. By so doing the party will add to its many claims on the gratitude and support of the nation.

It will be seen that the twin ideas of Mr. WILSON, the two theories which he contemplates as working to the end he has in view, are the absorption of all power by the General Government and the establishment of a system of national education. The power and authority now exercised by the States is an element in the consolidated power he seeks to establish, and the system of education is an element of strength to promote and perpetuate the central power. He reasons from no false or undefined premises, for it will be admitted that with the authority to educate the masses, to direct their thoughts, and measurably control their principles and convictions, the exercise of this all-important and inestimable authority will be directed to the perfection and consummation of that absolute government which alone can be erected on the ruins of our Federal system. It is often asserted that the intelligence of the people is the basis of republican institutions, and that upon the education of the people depends the future destiny of the Republic. While this is true in the abstract, it is no less certain and undeniable that a man's future life is to a great degree regulated by the manner of his education. John Stuart Mill, a great modern philosopher, and regarded by many as one of England's most gifted sons, an opinion in which I take no part, was educated not only in irreligion, but was taught by his father to abhor the principles of christianity. His youthful mind, as a twig, was bent in a direction repugnant and at variance with the divine economy of the Christian dispensation, and when he grew in years his life was a practical development of his early education, the tree inclined as the twig was bent, and we find his great intellect enslaved by an adherence to doctrines which seek the destruction of the whole social and moral order of civilization and, in his later years, his mind a prey to the disorders of socialism and the commune. The individual is the type of the community, and a false system of government, political principles adverse to republican liberty as well as pernicious doctrines in the moral order, may be promoted by a system of education that is controlled and directed by a partisan political authority.

While I do not doubt the honesty of the convictions of those who unite in this scheme of propagandism of national unity, I view their deep sincerity as the more dangerous, and therefore ask attention to a brief review of the great means through which it is contemplated to attain this unification of the nation. The bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts, to which Mr. WILSON refers, is entitled "A bill to establish a system of national education," and was offered in the last Congress.

BILL OF HON. GEORGE F. HOAR.

In the preamble to the bill it is asserted that the education of all citizens is an object of national interest and concern, and an adequate provision for their education is one of the first and most important duties of government. No one will deny that it is the right and duty of a State to afford ample means for the proper training of youth. This it is that contributes to the greatness of a people, maintains their prosperity, and is the surest guarantee of the perpetuity of the State. The education of the people at public expense may well be called the American system. It prevails in all the States, and many of the States have vast revenues from their public lands which are only available for the promotion of free education. Why, then, invade and overthrow the authority of the States? The first section of the bill provides for the appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, within and for each State, a State superintendent of national schools at a salary of $3,000 per annum, to hold office for four years unless sooner removed by the President. The second section provides for a division inspector of the national schools for each congressional district of each State, at an annual salary of $2,000. The third section provides for the division of the congressional districts into school districts according to the number of children, and for a local superintendent of national schools for each school district, at a salary of three dollars a day for the time employed in the duties of his office. The fourth section requires a number of schools in each school district as may be required. Section 5 provides for the purchase or hire of school-houses. The bill further provides for the engagement of teachers by contracts, the discipline of the schools, invests the Commissioner of Education with authority to direct the books to be used, establishes rules and regulations governing reports to Congress, and makes an appropriation of $50,000,000.

This comprehensive scheme may well excite amazement; its proportions are only limited by the vast extent of country and population which would pass under its yoke. The countless offices to be created, the legions of teachers dependent upon the appointing power, centralized in this capital, would constitute the mightiest political machine that was ever used to compass the downfall of the liberties and rights of a people.

It may be alleged that this measure was not intended to interfere with the existing State systems of education, or rather with the right of the State, if it provided education for all children within its limits; and that view may be predicated upon the nineteenth section of the bill. That section says that if any State provides before a given day for the education of all the children within its borders between the ages of six and eighteen years, and proves the same to the satisfaction of the President, the bill will be inoperative in said State; but if in the opinion of the President any State shall fail to do so within twelve months the bill will be operative therein thereafter. This section is a subterfuge, and would only result in excepting from the operations of the bill Massachusetts and one or two other States. None of the Southern States—not even Maryland, whose State school system is equal to that of any State in the Union—could immediately provide for the free education of all its children; and therefore the national schools, had the bill become law, would now be extending their sway over all these States, and the most odious feature of the civil-rights bill would have its practical development; that is to say, the exclusion of all white children from the free schools of the country. I little doubt but that a political millennium would be then considered as at hand.

Mr. Chairman, our country has been spared so great an evil; our deliverance for the time is a matter of thanksgiving. And now the Forty-third Congress is to encounter the enemy in a new form—the same measure under a thin disguise, which cannot deceive even the most unwary. We have a new combination—the two elements converge to the same end; both emanate from the same State, Massachusetts, which has given birth to so many ideas of a progressive character which have left their stain on the history of the present. One is the civil-rights bill; the other the bill "to establish an educational fund, and to apply the proceeds of the public lands to the education of the people."

SECOND BILL OF HON. GEORGE F. HOAR.

The object of this bill is evidently to obtain control of education in the Southern States, and while it provides for all children, it is mainly in the interest of the colored race. Its provisions, in their applicability to the several States, are unequal and unjust, and in violation of the Constitution. It invests the Commissioner of Education with almost exclusive authority over the fund provided for the several States, enabling him to determine whether or not a State has complied with the conditions required, and it constitutes the United States courts the tribunals to exercise jurisdiction over all officers who may commit certain offenses in relation to the disposal of said fund. These officers are to hold their places under direction of the Federal Government, and thus the whole machinery becomes an active instrument in the hands of the political party possessed of the powers of the General Government.

The first section of the bill provides that the net proceeds of the public lands are forever consecrated and set apart for the education of the people.

The second section directs the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain each year the amount of receipts from sale of the public lands.

The third section provides for the investment of one-half said amount as a perpetual fund, to be known as the national educational fund.

The fourth section requires the apportionment of the other half to the States, &c., upon the basis of population, provided that for the first five years the apportionment is to be made according to the population of ten years old and upward who cannot write.

The fifth section requires that a State to receive its share shall make provision for the free education of all children between the ages of six and sixteen years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the mockery and absurdity of the sentiment of the first section, "the consecration of the proceeds of the public lands for the education of the people," is so palpable when the other sections of the bill are considered, that the whole scheme would be ludicrous were it not a matter of the highest importance. What a proposition! What kind of legislation is this? By what authority can Congress give away the public property in unequal division among the States because more children in one State can write than in another? This is a shallow pretense, an attempt to be generous at somebody else's expense; a bait to the South, which on account of its ignorant colored population would obtain a larger share of this "consecrated fund;" a weak and abortive insult in the guise of a benefaction. Does the author of this bill, or its friends, suppose that any State would be willing to accept such a pittance as would be obtained under this bill, or any sum, and with it yield control of the education of its people to the agents of Congress? I do not believe any such opinion is held; but there is a covert design, a snare, in the bill that its authors think may be unseen. Besides, sir, which of the Southern States is equal to the task of the education of all its children, after being pillaged and devastated by the hordes of carpet knights-errant sent out by Massachusetts to carve their fortunes by knavery and theft? If this imported system of national education is to educate the negro up to the standard of the South Carolina legislator, he had better remain ignorant of such literary blessings.

From the sixth to the tenth section of the bill ample provision is set forth in detail for reports and the general working of the new system.

I remark that by the eighth section the Commissioner of Education is vested with unlimited authority to determine whether or not any State has complied with the conditions of the bill, and upon his certificate alone can the amount allotted to a State be received. There is of course an appeal to Congress, and if at the session following the appeal Congress fails to act, which would be very probable in the multitude of public affairs, then the State in that instance forfeits its claim.

The eleventh section imposes penalties for misappropriation of funds by the Federal officers to be appointed in the several States to carry out the provisions of this bill, and very unjustly holds the States severally responsible for any misappropriation by these officers. If the officers, who are responsible alone to the Government or Congress, do wrong, the State is to suffer and it may be forfeit its whole proportion of the fund. This responsibility, without the power of appointment, is so manifestly unjust that argument would make it no plainer. This section also gives authority to Congress to modify or add to the conditions binding the States. The twelfth section gives jurisdiction exclusively to the United States courts. I have thus, Mr. Chairman, briefly but substantially set forth the provisions of this bill, through which, by appealing to the popular sentiment in favor of education the gentleman from Massachusetts would take away the control of education from the State governments and bestow that authority on the General, or, as it is practically, the National Government. The evil of this measure is also apparent in the fact that at least one-half of the States would be unable for years to come to comply with its conditions, and the national fund would be absorbed by the other States, which have no need of Government assistance to educate their children. Many of the Western States have received large grants of land, and have now immense revenues dedicated to the cause of public instruction. The new England States have abundant means for that purpose.

But, Mr. Chairman, this bill is compulsory in its nature, its object being the forced education of the negroes of the South at an expense entirely out of the power of any State which has a large negro population. Like its twin measure, the civil-rights bill, its aim is to have mixed schools established, or in other words to demand the education of the colored race by authority of the Government. In the interest of instruction for the negro it asserts the paramount authority of the General Government to go into the States of the South and establish national schools and impose the expense thereof on the States. This is usurpation unequaled by any act the Federal power has yet attempted. It is at variance with our system of government, wherein to the State is reserved all rights not granted by the Constitution to the Federal power. One of the early amendments to that instrument which has always been called the chart of our liberties, the safe-guard of our rights, is as follows:

> The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Keeping this doctrine in view, it is not rash to assert that Congress has no power over the subject of education in the States, at least no authority that can be interpreted to divest the States of the right to legislate upon the question. The Constitution nowhere, even inferentially, confers upon the General Government any privilege, right, or authority in the premises. And as the right to educate primarily belongs to the parent, the exercise of authority by the States confers no jurisdiction on the Federal Government. Nor is this power concurrent. The Federal power commences where the State authority terminates. It is not necessary, nor can the extent of State power be exactly defined. It is exerted, exercised, and as all the authority of the General Government is enumerated in the Constitution, there is no latitude for constructive right on this question.

The great minds, the jurists and statesmen who framed the Constitution and have expounded and commented on its provisions, are silent on any claim of right in the Government to invade the precincts of the States, or to legislate upon and administer affairs which concern alone their own citizens, nor can any new and modern doctrines propagated by these "wise men of the East" find any support in the writings of the eminent men who established our Government and gave to it character and form. I might adduce a multitude of authorities to sustain this position if it were necessary to my argument; but I dare challenge the production of a single authority, or a sentence from the writings of the fathers of the Republic, to the contrary. I therefore conclude, Mr. Chairman, that this measure to establish national education, whether considered as an independent proposition or judged by its provisions, is repulsive to the genius of our Federal system and tending to advance national consolidation.

Mr. Chairman, I have in the course of my remarks referred to the civil-rights bill. I do not propose at this time to discuss its effect upon the country if it should become a law. It has been wisely recommitted to the committee which gave approval to this most pernicious and virulent attempt to degrade the people of the South by an introduction of the vilest feature of social intermixture of the children of the two races. Political equality has been guaranteed to the negro by the amendments to the Constitution, and with that boon he must rest content; for laws or enactments of any character will ever be found ineffective to promote an assimilation of races which God and nature have designed to be forever separate. This denies nothing to the negro for which his condition, present or future, fits him. He never can become the social equal or companion of the white; and human laws which seek to enforce such a condition become impotent in face of the divine.

REVIEW OF REPUBLICAN MISGOVERNMENT.

Now, sir, I am convinced that the educational bill and the civil-rights bill are urged upon Congress and the country by the republican party without sincere regard for the true interests of the negro race, and I am also convinced that their adoption would destroy the system of free public instruction of State institution, aggrandize the powers of the General Government, and cause direct interference with, if not abrogate, the most sacred right of the citizen. The republican party has had full possession of the Government for thirteen years, and its only hope of continuing the control is through the votes of the negro population. At the presidential election of 1872 it had a minority of the white voters of the country, and knowing the insecurity of its tenure of office, rather than yield its official power, it would, to maintain its ascendency, change our whole structure of government, Africanize the South, oppress the people by unheard-of corruptions, infamous exactions, and shameless frauds, and impoverish the country by a system of finance which day by day is adding to the wealth of the opulent bondholder and rendering it more difficult for the honest toiler to earn his bread. Will not the present condition of the country more than sustain this assertion? The paralysis of trade, which is ignorantly attributed to the contraction of the paper money of the country, is only the revulsion which inevitably must follow the plethoric condition brought about by the financial blunders of the past eight years. By means of the inflated irredeemable paper-money policy bequeathed us as one of the blessings of the war, the people have paid over $1,500,000,000 in premiums on gold for importations, that is, the republican policy of government has exacted and plundered from the people that amount. The Western States are demanding further inflation and the South re-echoes the cry. Their representatives in the Senate and on this floor fail either in the manliness or statesmanship to tell them the truth, that their disease cannot be cured by further issues of currency—false promises to pay; that such a means of restoring prosperity is delusive, a dishonor of the credit of the country, and productive of renewed and worse disaster. The South, alas, has reason to feel the effects of paralyzed industry. It is not her heaviest burden. Oppressed with debt and taxation, she has not the power to rise, and even a season of patient waiting for the returning tide of prosperity affords no hope of relief. Mississippi, the Carolinas, Louisiana, and other States have been given over to the wolf; their luxurious soil and matchless resources yield no return; the life-blood has been exhausted to glut the vampire; their broad acres, productive in cotton, sugar, and rice, no longer enrich the planter and contribute to the general welfare. The South has ceased to be its own proprietor. By mortgages, bonded debt, and the demands of the tax-gatherer, the northern capitalists of Beacon street and Wall street have divided the spoils with the miscalled governments which have legalized their ruin.

HOPE OF THE FUTURE.

But, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the abject position of our internal affairs, I have unabated confidence in the return of the people to the principles of conservatism and free government. I do not despair of the future of our country. The returning tide, when it once sets in, will be rapid and deep. Our present adversities may bring reflection. The current may have already set. Cheering news comes from New Hampshire and Connecticut. I do not regard the changes there wrought so much a partisan triumph as an awakening of the people to a sense of their peril. The lethargic attitude of a decade is about to be succeeded by a consciousness of duty, a return of patriotism, a loftier sentiment than adherence to party when the vital spark of free government is about to expire. The independent press, being no longer fettered by the subsidizing influences of official station and power, has begun to sound the alarm. I give a short extract from a late issue of the leading republican paper of Massachusetts; a State at whose door lies great responsibility for the demoralization and discredit of the Government, and upon whose escutcheon rests the stain of a large share of the outrages and oppressions that have been inflicted on our people. The Boston Advertiser says:

> The pivot on which the history of this country has hinged is the tendency toward centralization. The history of the United States for the last ten years has been the natural sequence of the unchecked development of a single chain of ideas. Centralization has advanced with such strides as to have outgrown the wildest dreams of the founders of this Government, and to threaten the very existence of that system which it was designed to support. It is impossible to preserve the independence of States, if the national Government is allowed to regulate local affairs. The next step in the path which the country is now treading will be to reverse the whole theory of this Government and to change the United States into a consolidated power in which each State will form a province. It is not two years since a man whom no once supposed to be the popular choice was imposed on the people of Louisiana by national troops. If this thing is possible in Louisiana why not in Massachusetts? And how long will it be before the authorities at Washington practically appoint local officers? This means consolidation in its most dangerous and most insidious sense, for it comes under old and honored names and forms.

It would be almost a pleasure, Mr. Chairman, to have Massachusetts drink deeply of this chalice of Federal interference which she has so often commended to other lips, if she alone would be the sufferer. The lesson rightly learned may enable her people to appreciate the burning wrongs which the policy and fanaticism of her leaders and statesmen have brought upon many of the States of the Union. Are not her representatives in Congress to-day endeavoring to enact into law new forms of obloquy and abasement for the Southern States? Why should Maryland, my native State, be deprived of her established system of free education because she is as yet unable to offer all its advantages to every negro child within her borders; or why, at the dictation of Massachusetts fanaticism, shall Maryland be deprived of the right to regulate her own affairs and be compelled to submit to negro misgovernment? Your civil-rights bill will force the ignorant and often debased negro into the jury-box, or imprison her judicial officers if they be excluded. It forces the mixed-school feature on our people, which will inevitably impair if not destroy the schools already established. Under the terms of this bill the negro would be privileged to enter the State normal schools, Saint John's College, agricultural colleges, and every public institution of the State that receives a dollar of State aid. The races cannot be thus intermixed. Nature's law forbids it. Statutes of Congress will be found inoperative to advance such a social revolution, but an extensive field for malignant persecution and animosity between the races will be afforded.

Mr. Chairman, the rights and dignity of the States must be conserved. The functions of the Federal power must be restrained within the bounds set by the Constitution. The year 1876 will be the centennial of American independence. May it also witness the restoration of our country to the blessings of free government, administered by men whose integrity and ability will be a guarantee of the rights of the people inviolate and the dignity and honor of the Republic maintained.

Mr. MONROE. I had no desire, Mr. Chairman, to make a speech on this subject; but as my friend from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] has offered some objections of a general nature to the Bureau of Education, it is perhaps proper that in a word or two I should notice them. I understood the gentleman's objections to be of two kinds. In the first place he considers that the Bureau has grown beyond its proper dimensions; he thinks that we have come to a point where more money is expended upon it than is necessary for the objects proposed to be accomplished. And in the second place, I understand him to object to it on the ground that either improper use has been made of it politically or that such improper use is very liable to be made. These two objections, if I understood him amid the confusion prevailing in the House, come near covering the ground of what the gentleman had to offer in the way of opposition.

Now, sir, I do not know that there is any better way to answer both of these objections than to attempt in a few words—which will be very difficult in the five minutes allowed me—to explain to the committee just what the sphere of that Bureau is, what the necessity for it is, and what is the work which it does. I think that when this is understood these objections will be removed, and I cannot but consider that gentlemen in this House, whom I so much respect and who I know must feel a deep sympathy with the cause of education in this country, are objecting to this bill merely because they have not examined it. They have not visited the office of the Bureau of Education; they do not understand the great and useful work that is accomplished. If they did, I am sure that their objections would be withdrawn.

Now, sir, look at the facts. There are thirty-seven States in this Union; there are ten Territories; making forty-seven Commonwealths in all. Now, take for instance the item of common-school education by itself, (and that is only one of the items of work which this department undertakes to attend to,) and just look at what this Bureau of Education does in that respect. I was about to remark that in these forty-seven different Commonwealths common-school education is at every stage of development. In some of the newest there is no proper common-school system at all, as the census report shows; in some they are further advanced, the germs of a common-school system exist; in other States it is well advanced; and there are still other States of the Union where a good common-school system has been maintained for several generations, and where there are large results in the way of experience in connection with such a system.

It will strike every member of this committee at once that when there is such an immense variety of experiences and of development in the common-school system of the nation, it is of the very greatest importance as regards all the knowledge, all the valuable results of experience, all that has been learned in the States where the system is oldest and best developed, that there should be some agency which can gather up these fruits of progress and lay them down at the feet of the citizens who are endeavoring to establish common-school systems in those States that have made the least progress in education. Any one must see of what immense importance this agency must be. If in some State of this Union a common-school system is about to be introduced, a thousand questions at once occur to all the gentlemen who are engaged in such a work; to the county superintendents, to the school directors, to the teachers, to the citizens who are interested in education. There are a thousand questions that will occur to them at once in regard to the building of school-houses and their ventilation, lighting, heating, seating, &c.; in regard to the discipline and grading schools, and the training of teachers, which they would be glad to ask of somebody and have intelligently answered.

Now, sir, this Bureau of Education in the city of Washington is a great educational exchange. The law organizing the Bureau makes it the duty of that Bureau to gather up knowledge from every source throughout the Union, where, if I may use the expression, a surplus of it exists, and then diffuse it abroad in all those States where it is most needed. I think the mere statement of this fact shows that we must have an agency of that sort. We must have somebody to find out all the best results of experience in the older States and transmit them to parties interested in the States where the systems of education are new.

Mr. Chairman, if gentlemen would go into the office of the Bureau of Education and see how much of this work is actually being done, I think their objections would be removed. I will state a single fact. The Commissioner of Education has at the present moment seven thousand regular correspondents in the various States, and a very large proportion of them are gentlemen connected with the organization of the schools in the reconstructed States. And he is constantly engaged in the work of sending printed circulars containing late information on important subjects, and in the work of sending letters, carrying on all the correspondence which is so necessary for the development of a common-school system in the newer States. This is the work of his office and of the agencies of the Bureau. And I think gentlemen will at once see that there could not be a more important or a more valuable work for the people of the United States than this. I think they cannot fail to see that this is a sphere which needs to be filled.

Some gentlemen will perhaps say—some friend of State-rights will say—why does not each State that wants information write to the other States to get it?

Mr. O'BRIEN. If my friend will allow me a moment, I desire to say to him that my principal objection to this Bureau is not to its functions as at present administered, but I look upon it as the foundation upon which a large number of persons, and particularly the leaders of the republican party, desire to erect a system of national education; and, therefore, rather than it should be made the basis of a scheme of that character and magnitude, looking to the destruction of our State systems of education, I would strike it in its infancy.

Mr. MONROE. I cannot yield further, as I expect my time is about out.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I will move that it be extended.

Mr. MONROE. I am glad that my friend is pleased with the Bureau as it is at present conducted. That is something. It is testimony worth having. I am pleased with it myself, and so far we agree very well; but I put it to the candor of my friend whether it is worth while for him or myself to become alarmed in regard to imaginary evils of the future in a Bureau which at present works well?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MONROE. How long have I spoken?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has spoken seven minutes.

Mr. MONROE. I ask for a minute or two more, as I was interrupted.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I move that the gentleman's time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen misunderstand the rules. The time of a gentleman cannot be extended on motion; it is against the rules. When unanimous consent is given and where no objection is made the Chair follows the precedents and allows gentlemen to continue beyond the five minutes; but the Chair has been notified by three gentlemen that they object to further debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. I insist on a vote.

Mr. MONROE. I only want a minute.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will not object to my colleague being allowed a moment or two longer.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. STORM. I renew it.

Mr. MONROE. I believe I have not occupied as much time as my friend from Maryland did.

Mr. STORM. I yield the gentleman a part of my time.

Mr. MONROE. What I wish to say is, that it is not a valid argument against a Bureau or Department in Washington that it is capable of prostitution to bad ends. There is not a Bureau nor a Department in any government anywhere in the world that is managed by human beings that is not capable of such prostitution; but we must have Bureaus; we must have Departments. According to the gentleman's argument we could have no War Department, no Treasury Department, no Navy Department. We should have no Congress. Certainly that will have to be abolished at once if everything that is in danger of doing wrong and being perverted to bad ends must be abolished. I think the argument of the gentleman is rather too sweeping; and inasmuch as we agree that the management of the Bureau is all right at present, why I think we shall succeed probably in keeping this paragraph in the bill.

I have but a word more to say. I am asked by my democratic friends why, if the State of South Carolina for instance, wants information about common schools, her officers do not write to some other State? Sir, you cannot get the General Assembly of any sovereign State to go to the expense of establishing a Bureau in order to carry on correspondence with thirty-six other States and ten Territories. It would be a very clumsy proceeding. This Bureau, if I may use the expression, is a great educational clearing-house. It is a great labor-saving machine. Every State addresses itself directly to this Bureau, and gets at once from the Bureau just what it wants, and there is no superfluous machinery. The thing is in simple and compact shape; and it is one of the best and most useful, and I am bound now to say one of the best-conducted, agencies that this Government has.

Mr. STORM. Mr. Chairman, if the question is here as to the existence or continuance of this Bureau of Education it is one thing; but if it is as to making the necessary appropriations for the Bureau it is quite another thing. I am one of those who believe that the work done by the Bureau of Education could be as well done by another department of the Government already in existence. I have ever entertained the idea that the Bureau of Statistics and the Smithsonian Institution could accomplish all that is now accomplished by this Bureau. I am not here for the purpose of arraigning the Bureau; but I repeat that I believe that with the addition of a clerk or two in the Bureau of Statistics, together with what is done by the Smithsonian Institution, all the good accomplished by this Bureau could be accomplished by those departments.

I believe that General Eaton, the Commissioner of Education, has several times come to Congress and asked for an increase of appropriations both for clerks in his department and that he might be able to purchase certain books and periodicals, and I think my friend from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] is mistaken when he says that all of these appropriations have been advocated by the republican party and that none of that party have opposed them. If the gentleman had been a member of the Forty-second Congress he would have remembered that one of the most spicy and angry debates that ever took place in this House took plack on this very topic, when the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] made a gallant dash at the Bureau and General Farnsworth made an assault upon it more vigorous than was ever made by any democrat on this side of the House.

I do not forget, too, that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] made an abler attack upon the bill presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] than was ever made by any gentleman on this side of the House.

Now I say that if this Bureau is to be supported, (and this is quite a different question from discontinuing it entirely,) I believe these men are now paid a salary which should not be reduced; that it is at the lowest possible figure. It is true the salary of the Commissioner of Education is the same as that of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, of Pensions, of Agriculture, and of the Land Office. I believe that last night the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office was raised.

Mr. GARFIELD. It was not.

Mr. STORM. Then the salary of this Commissioner is the same as that of all the other Commissioners except of Patents, who I believe receives $4,500 a year. But there would be an objection in my mind to raising the salary, although I believe the Commissioner of Education earns more pay than he receives, because it would furnish a leverage by which the other Commissioners would come in and claim to have their salaries raised. I think there should be no reduction in the salary if the office is to be continued, and I think it would be of doubtful propriety to raise the salary.

Mr. Chairman, this question comes up every time this appropriation bill comes up in the committee. But the fight heretofore has been to prevent any expansion of this Bureau, by either increasing its functions or its force. Such a fierce attack was made upon its pretensions and claims to a larger recognition in the last Congress, that I think the Commissioner himself does not believe that any increased appropriation can be made this year. The sooner this Bureau realizes its functions in collecting statistics and giving information, the sooner will it have rest from these annual attacks.

As no demand is made, as I understand, for a larger appropriation, I hope the bill will stand as reported by the committee.

Mr. BECK. I rise to oppose the amendment. I moved last night to strike out this paragraph; I withdrew it afterward as I did not want to go to that extent. I agree that there ought to be some means of collecting information on educational subjects, but I do not want another great department established. In 1868, after this Department had been established and kept up for some years after the war, Congress deliberately reduced it to a Bureau by the following proviso in the appropriation bill:

Provided, That from and after the 30th day of June, 1869, the Department of Education shall cease, and there shall be established and attached to the Department of the Interior an office to be denominated the office of education, the chief officer of which shall be the Commissioner of Education, at a salary of $3,000 per annum, who shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, discharge all such duties and superintend, execute, and perform all such acts and things touching and respecting the said office of education as are devolved by law upon said Commissioner of Education.

The idea then was to make it a Bureau to collect general information and statistics for the use of the educational institutions of the States, and to limit it to that. The largest amount ever appropriated was, I believe, $20,000, up to that time, and the next year the committee reported $9,000, which was increased by the House. The struggle has been going on from that time until now to make it a great department. We are now called upon to give over $35,000 to run this Bureau for one year. My objection to magnifying this Bureau is the same which I have heretofore often made to increasing any of the subordinate Bureaus of the Department, giving them hordes of useless retainers to support their dignity. The moment you put any of them, such as the Indian Bureau, or, indeed, any other Bureau, upon an important footing, it at once begins to expend money in the most profligate manner; it at once begins to usurp authority not intended to be given it. I could instance cases where that has been done time and again in the most outrageous manner, but I cannot do it in five minutes.

I will give one that occurred the other day, which will serve to illustrate how these things are managed. Some years ago Congress appointed a Comptroller of the Currency. See what he has done. He has held back about $4,000,000 of national-bank currency in the interest of the great banks of the Eastern States, and tells the President that so much of the $54,000,000 authorized by the act of July 12, 1870, has not been taken, and has thus led the President to send a false message to Congress, based upon false information from that Bureau, the meaning of which is that this currency had not been applied for. The officers of that Bureau all knew better. I have before me now a letter addressed to my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. BRIGHT,] by the Comptroller of the Currency, and there are dozens of like letters in the hands of members, in which he states that there are now pending one hundred and twenty-eight applications for that little balance of $4,000,000.

The following is the letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, April 16, 1864.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 15th instant, you are informed that the whole amount of the $54,000,000 authorized by act of Congress of July 12, 1870, remaining to be issued to banking associations, is $4,315,528.

The whole number of applications on file awaiting action of Congress is one hundred and twenty-eight.

Very respectfully,

JOHN JAY KNOX,
Comptroller of Currency.

Hon. JOHN M. BRIGHT,
House of Representatives, Washington.

The Comptroller knew his duty, as the following extract from his last report shows; and he is wholly without excuse when he allows pretended or fraudulent applications to tie up the balance of $4,000,000, with all these applications pending, in the interest of the great eastern bankers. He says:

The act of July 12, 1870, further provides that when the fifty-four millions of additional circulation "shall have been taken up," "the Comptroller of the Currency shall, as additional circulation may be required by the banks having less than their proportion, make a requisition for such an amount, commencing with the banks having a circulation exceeding $1,000,000 in States having an excess of circulation, and withdrawing their circulation in excess of $1,000,000, and then proceeding pro rata with other banks having a circulation exceeding $300,000 in States having the largest excess of circulation, and reducing the circulation of such banks in States having the greatest proportion in excess, leaving undisturbed any States having a smaller proportion until those in greater excess shall have been reduced to the same grade, and continuing thus to make the reduction provided for by this act until the full amount of twenty-five millions provided for shall be withdrawn; and the circulation so withdrawn shall be distributed among the States and Territories having less than their proportion, so as to equalize the same."

These requisitions will be made upon the banks located in the following States and cities:

Four in the city of New York	$5,018,000
Thirty-seven in the city of Boston	13,320,000
Twenty-one in the State of Massachusetts	2,659,000
Seventeen in the city of Providence	2,818,000
Fifteen in the State of Connecticut	1,185,000

This will reduce to $1,000,000 the circulation of all banks in the city of New York having an excess over that amount, and the circulation of all banks in Massachusetts and Rhode Island to $300,000.

I assume, of course, that the President would not send a veto to Congress without consulting as to the facts with the Comptroller of the Currency. Yet he or somebody makes the President say to Congress that there are $4,000,000 of national-bank currency not yet taken; when the truth is that it has been withheld by the Comptroller of the Currency with the wrongful purpose of retarding, if not ot preventing, the execution of the law, because he knew that as soon as the whole of that $54,000,000 is taken the Comptroller will be compelled to withdraw $25,000,000 from his friends in the East and give it to the States in the West which have not their proportion; and that he evidently does not intend to do as long as he can prevent it.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Will the gentleman allow me to correct a misquotation he has made?

Mr. BECK. I will.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The President does not say that $4,000,000 has not been called for, but that it has not been taken.

Mr. BECK. That is what I said.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The gentleman says that the President has erroneously or falsely stated to Congress that it has not been applied for.

Mr. BECK. No; that it had not been taken. I do not charge the President with stating a falsehood. I say that he has been imposed upon, and having been so has imposed upon the country, inadvertently, if you please. What does the country understand, what must it understand, by that language? Certainly that this $4,000,000 has not been taken, because nobody wants it. The Comptroller has deceived the President and he has thus deceived the country. Sir, the Comptroller wrote a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House the day the currency bill was on its passage, for the purpose of defeating it, saying that it meant contraction. Yet the President in his message says that it may be inflation to the extent of $100,000,000. I say that the President has been again deceived when he tells us that there may be an inflation of $100,000,000, because in the very worst aspect it can only inflate the currency $90,000,000; and in fact it cannot swell the currency more than $64,000,000. If $44,000,000 of greenbacks are added to the $356,000,000 which all agree are legally outstanding, and $46,000,000 is added to the national-bank currency—and that is all the bill vetoed ever proposed—$90,000,000, and not $100,000,000 as stated by the President, is all the increase possible. With $382,000,000 of greenbacks now out with the consent and by the act of the President and his Secretary, $64,000,000 is all that is in fact possible. But I see my time is already out.

Why, sir, should we build up Bureaus that will not give truthful information? Why not confine these Bureaus to their legitimate purposes? Make this Commissioner what he is, a mere Bureau officer, and give him clerks enough to do his legitimate work, and no more.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on the pending paragraph.

The motion was agreed to, there being—ayes 109, noes 49.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WOODFORD reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that when the Committee of the Whole resume the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill all debate upon the paragraphs relating to the Bureau of Education be limited to five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit that motion if there be no objection, but he would not wish it to be drawn into a precedent. It is not competent to close debate on more than one paragraph at a time. If there be no objection the Chair will submit the motion in the form in which it is made.

Mr. CLYMER and others objected.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move, then, that debate on the pending paragraph be terminated in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WOODFORD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a very strong opposition made to the Bureau of Education on the ground that education is dangerous. Now, education may be dangerous to a certain political party and to certain political principles; but the Bureau of Education, I take it, is one of the most beneficent departments of the Government as at present existing. I think this is the conviction of all classes of men engaged in education throughout the country. Educational conventions of teachers and friends of education in at least twenty States of the Union, including many of the Southern States, have pronounced on this subject most emphatically. I will read a resolution adopted by the teachers' convention of the State of Missouri, held but a few months since:

Resolved, That we recognize the great value of, and most fully indorse, the work of the United States Commissioner of Education; and we respectfully ask our legislators and representatives in Congress to render the Bureau of Education every possible facility for collecting and distributing the important facts and statistics embraced in the circulars and annual report of the Commissioner.

The value of testimony like this from men engaged in the task of education in a great State like Missouri (and I might say in every State in the Union) cannot possibly be overestimated. In regard to the value of this Bureau for its educational influences there can be no mistake. The conductors of every college and other institution of learning in the land have, in various ways, for the last several years, expressed their views on this subject. They are in constant correspondence with the Bureau of Education, and derive from its labors very beneficial information and assistance in the fulfillment of their duties. They regard it as of the very highest value. Let me read the language of the democratic superintendent of schools in the State of Virginia, Mr. Ruffner, who in a late report says, (and the superintendent of education in Tennessee, also a democrat, has recently stated the same facts even more strongly:)

Those who have to deal practically with this matter of State education know what need there is of some central depot of information, where educational facts from all parts of the world may be gathered, digested, and distributed over the country, as is done by the present Bureau of Education. This is a work too large and costly for any State office, and yet is important to all. This Bureau is intended to occupy a position on educational matters similar to that occupied in their respective spheres by the Bureaus of Agriculture and of Statistics, and should never be allowed to go beyond this.

The unanimous testimony of every friend of education in the land, of every teacher and professor, of all who wish to remove the vast cloud of ignorance which darkens our political horizon and endangers the future of our nation, of every earnest, enlightened patriot, is and must be, continue to give us the mighty aid of the Bureau of Education, enlarge its means and resources, and so increase its vast influence for good. It collects from all parts of the world information on every point connected with the advance of education and the increase of knowledge, and conveys it to the homes of the people and to every school and college in the land. Every fountain of learning, every institution for man's intellectual advancement on American soil, feels its quickening and inspiring influence. To strike it down or curtail its influence and power would be folly and madness. Our country cannot afford to lose its great aid to the enlightenment of the nation; its beneficent influences cannot be dispensed with.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement embracing a few educational statistics.

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

According to the census of 1870 the total expenditure for education in the United States was $95,000,000. On this basis the cost of the Bureau last year was about ⅛ of 1 mill for each dollar of expenditure in 1870.

The school population of the country is between thirteen and fourteen millions. The cost of the Bureau for this class was about 2½ mills per capita.

The number of teachers in the common schools is at a low estimate 220,000. The cost for this class, which is constantly seeking the information presented in the report of the Bureau, was about 15½ cents for each teacher.

The cost on the total taxable property of the country is too small to be appreciable.

The amount of the gifts for educational purposes in 1873, according to information collected by this Bureau, at present costing the country $35,000, was over $11,000,000. Can the people of this country, so liberal, so munificent to all classes of educational institutions, begrudge the pittance asked to sustain an agency constantly appealed to by school officers and by educators throughout the country for the information it gathers bearing on education at home and abroad?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN.]

Mr. O'BRIEN. I withdraw it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of Florida, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $2,500.

Mr. WALLS. I move to amend by adding after the clause just read the following:

For the completion of the surveying of the United States lands in the State of Florida, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall discontinue the said office on or before the 30th day of June, 1875, or as soon as the said surveys are completed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order that the amendment changes existing law in proposing to discontinue an office established by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order as to so much of the amendment is good. The part making the appropriation is in order.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman offers the amendment as a whole.

Mr. WALLS. I withdraw that part relating to the discontinuance of the office. I will state my object in offering the amendment. Some time ago the Commissioner of the General Land Office told me in conversation that he had for several years tried to get the Committee on Appropriations to report an appropriation to finish up this service in Florida and discontinue the office. To my own personal knowledge the existing office there is now useless; and to appropriate $7,000 merely to pay men for sitting in their offices at Tallahassee is not in my judgment true retrenchment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of California, $3,000; and for the clerks in his office, $11,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend the clause just read by striking out "$11,000" and inserting "$20,000." We are satisfied that we have cut down this appropriation too much. Last year the appropriation was $28,000; we now propose to make it $20,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the amount proposed in the amendment exceed the estimate?

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir; the estimate is higher.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move in line 1361 to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so it will read, "for surveyor-general in the Territory of Idaho, $2,000." I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations how it is that $3,000 are allowed as the salary for the surveyor-general of the Territory of Idaho, while but $2,000 are allowed for the surveyor-general of Kansas and also of Dakota, where certainly there must be more lands to be surveyed than in the Territory of Idaho? Why should $2,000 be provided for one class and $3,000 for another?

Mr. GARFIELD. I will observe, in reply to the gentleman from Minnesota, that he will notice there is a group of these officers who receive $3,000; those are upon the Pacific coast or in the mountains. According to the policy heretofore pursued by the Government they have been allowed large salaries for similar service in consequence of the higher price of living. This is arranged by law, and has been so from year to year. We simply follow the law and the usage in former appropriation bills.

Mr. DUNNELL. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

For compensation of the Postmaster-General, $8,000; three Assistant Postmasters-General, at $3,500 each; superintendent of money-order system, $3,000; superintendent of foreign mails, $3,000; topographer of the Post-Office Department, $2,500; chief of division for the office of mail depredations, $2,500; chief of division of dead-letters, $2,500; superintendent of Post-Office building and disbursing officer, $2,300; chief clerk to the Postmaster-General, $2,200; one chief clerk to each Assistant Postmaster-General, at $2,000 each; one chief clerk in money-order office, $2,000; one chief clerk in office of superintendent of foreign mails, $2,000; superintendent of blank-agency, $1,800; assistant superintendent of blank-agency, $1,600; four assistants, at $1,200 each; fourteen clerks of class four; sixty-three clerks of class three; fifty clerks of class two; seventy-one clerks of class one; fifty-seven female clerks, at $900 each; one messenger of the Postmaster-General, $900; one messenger to each Assistant Postmaster-General, at $840 each; four assistant messengers; captain of the watch, $1,000; and nine watchmen and twenty-five laborers; one engineer, $1,600; one assistant engineer, $1,000; one carpenter, $1,252; one assistant carpenter, $1,000; one fireman and blacksmith, $900; two firemen, at $720 each; three female laborers, at $480 each; one stenographer, $1,800; and for temporary clerks, $10,000; making, in all, $439,412.

Mr. TYNER. I move in line 1410, on page 58, to strike out the word "each" and to insert "two assistants at $900 each;" so it will read, "four assistants at $1,200, and two assistants at $900 each."

That the committee may understand the purport of this amendment I also move, in line 1418, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-three;" so it will read "twenty-three laborers." The purpose is to appropriate for twenty-three laborers, at $720, and for two additional assistants to blank-agency, at $900, in order to comply with what has been heretofore done in the Post-Office Department. We have had that number of assistants in the blank-agency, but by reason of an omission in the fixing up of the last appropriation bill they were authorized two less, and in consequence the superintendent of the blank-agency was compelled to draw on the laborers of the Department to make up the deficiency.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYNER. I move in line 1423 to strike out "two" before "firemen" and insert "one;" and in line 1424 to strike out the word "each" and insert the words "one fireman and steam-fitter, at $900;" so it will read "one fireman, at $720; and one fireman and steam-fitter, at $900."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAZELTON, of New Jersey. I move in line 1411 to strike out the word "sixty-three" and insert "sixty-four;" so it will read "sixty-four clerks of class three;" and in the same line to insert after the word "three" these words: "including the stationery clerk;" so it will read "sixty-four clerks of class three, including the stationery clerk."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I make this motion in order that the stationery clerk may be included in class three. He occupies a very important position. He is obliged to receive all the stationery coming into the Department, and to keep an account of that and of every article going out of the Department, embracing between one and two hundred articles.

The gentleman occupying this position is a man of ability, a good accountant, and I think the House will see the propriety of including him in class three.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the amendment will not prevail, as it is an increase of the force.

Mr. HAZELTON, of New Jersey. It does not increase the force at all. It merely transfers a clerk from class two to class three. It does not increase the number of clerks at all.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 65.

So the amendment was disagreed to, no further count being demanded.

Mr. STONE. I move in line 1416 to strike out "four assistant messengers," in order to inquire why there is no salary attached here?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not necessary, as their pay is fixed by law at $720 each.

Mr. STONE. I withdraw my motion, and move to insert "at $720 each."

Mr. GARFIELD. That is not necessary, as the aggregate at the end covers it.

Mr. STONE. I insist on my amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no objection; but it is only surplusage.

Mr. RANDALL. No; it is not. If their salary is fixed by law at $720 each there can be no good ground of objection to insert it at this place as in the case of all other officers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to oppose the amendment, for the purpose of saying a word or two on the pending paragraph generally. The growth of the salaries of this Department is something frightful. For the purpose of comparison I will take the last legitimate appropriation bill, that for the year ending June 30, 1873, for I do not call the appropriation bill of last year legitimate.

Mr. GARFIELD. Why not?

Mr. HOLMAN. That bill certainly was not legitimate, because the people have made you repeal your action on it. The increase of salaries in this Department, by this one paragraph, since 1873, amounts to the sum of $43,712. The appropriations made for salaries in this Department for the year which terminated 30th of June, 1873, was $395,700. The appropriations in this bill amount to $439,412, being an increase, as I have said, since 1873, within the period of a little over a single year, of $43,712.

I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, when this bill shall be completed, in comparing it even with the legislation of the 3d of March, 1873, we shall find that in but one single case has there been a reduction of any moment, while there has been a multitude of increases in the various Departments, where salaries are involved. That one decrease will be found to be mainly confined to the reduction of the Army. Here, sir, without a word of explanation, we are called to vote an increase of salaries to the amount of nearly $44,000. Notwithstanding that, we have heard a great deal said upon the subject of severe economy in the appropriations of this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWANN. I offer the following amendment:

In line 1417 strike out "$1,000" and insert "$1,200;" so that it will read, "captain of the watch $1,200."

This amendment is for the purpose of equalizing the salaries of this class of officers, where they perform the same duties. This captain of the watch is receiving $200 less than other captains of the same class performing the same duties. I therefore move that the salary be made $1,200, so as to equalize all these officers. This is the case of a meritorious officer, and I do not think we ought to make this difference where there is no reason for it. I offer this amendment with the consent of the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Department of Agriculture:

For compensation of Commissioner of Agriculture, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; entomologist, $2,000; chemist, $2,000; assistant chemist, $1,600; superintendent of experimental gardens and grounds, $2,000; statistician, $2,000; disbursing clerk, $1,800; superintendent of seed-room, $1,800; librarian, $1,800; botanist, $1,800; four clerks of class four, five clerks of class three, six clerks of class two, seven clerks of class one; engineer, $1,400; superintendent of folding-room, $1,200; assistant superintendent of experimental garden and grounds, $1,200; assistant superintendent of the seed-room, $1,200; three copyists, at $900 each; two attendants in museum, at $1,000 each; chief messenger, $850; two assistant messengers; one carpenter, at $960; three watchmen; and nine laborers; making in all, $75,390.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment to correct a clerical error:

On line 1451, after the words "botanist, $1,800," insert "microscopist, $1,800."

This was in the estimates and in the law of last year, and was left out of this bill by mistake.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether this was purposely omitted, or whether the omission arises merely from a typographical error?

Mr. GARFIELD. It was not purposely omitted. I suppose the omission occurred in the printing of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was pleased in looking over this paragraph relating to the Agricultural Department to see that a saving of at least one salary was proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. I was in hopes that I would have been able to congratulate them on this evidence of a tendency to economy. But I find they do not deserve any such congratulation.

Mr. GARFIELD. We have reduced the whole amount.

Mr. HOLMAN. By about $300. The appropriation last year was $75,690, and the appropriation this year is $75,390; so that all the reduction upon this item amounts only to $300. And at the same time the fact is before the country that Congress is not even so much as printing the reports of the Agricultural Bureau.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I offer the following amendment:

In line 1449 strike out "$1,800" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,200;" so that it will read, "superintendent of seed-room, $1,200."

I understand the Committee on Appropriations consent to that amendment.

Mr. HAYS. I must object to it, and I send to the Clerk's desk to be read a letter from the Commissioner of Agriculture in reference to this matter. It is one of the most important offices in connection with the department, and the compensation is not sufficient now. This man is engaged the whole year round in the discharge of his duties, and they are more onerous, I believe, than those of any other officer in the department. I ask that the letter from the Commissioner of Agriculture be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 23, 1874.

DEAR SIR: The superintendent of the seed-room is the most important position in the department. He must be, and is, perfectly conversant with the character of seeds, the climate where they are grown, and that to which they are adapted here. The kind of seed, particularly grass, adapted to particular localities. He and his assistant are the persons who select all seeds adapted to carry out the objects of seed distribution. He is well posted in the names and location of all seed growers in this country and in Europe, and especially is he conversant with prices of all seeds, and where they can be obtained. He is wholly indispensable; and Mr. Glass's place would be most difficult to supply. And that he is employed only a portion of the year is absolutely untrue. There is not a day but that his services are required.

The engineer is a skilled mechanic in charge of the furnace and engine, requiring great responsibility. Besides, he is a mechanic, who keeps all things requiring mechanical skill in repair about the department.

The assistant superintendent of the seed-room. The duties of this person could not be performed by a woman. The selection, care of, and adjustment of the large amount of seed distributed requires the work of a man. A woman would be of no use in such a place.

Respectfully,

FREDERICK WATTS,
Commissioner

Hon. CHARLES HAYS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I desire to make a brief statement in relation to this amendment. The letter which has been read, though it gives this man a pretty high character, does not satisfy me that he should have any such compensation. The order of his work is not, I think, of a character to entitle him to it. According to the information which I have received since I came here, and which, I believe, is reliable, he is engaged but a portion of the time, and his work requires about as much skill as to measure potatoes.

Mr. HAYS. I think the Commissioner of Agriculture, whose letter has been read, understands the necessities of the department as well as most members on this floor can do. I know his duties, and I believe he is an efficient officer, and I think what he says in this letter ought to be regarded by the members of this House. As the head of the department he has certainly had more experience as to what is required there than any gentleman here can have. He knows what is indispensable to his department, and his views have been communicated to the committee in the letter which has been read. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of profound regret that there can be found gentlemen upon the floor of this House who are willing to strike blows, direct and indirect, at the great agricultural interests of our country. Against large and constantly increasing expenditures of public money for the erection of public buildings, the beautifying of public grounds, for the encouragement of commerce and the building of ships, for the erection of forts and cleaning out of rivers, and indeed for all species of improvements, permanent or projected, no clarion voice of reform is lifted. But when the Department of Agriculture, for the dissemination of useful knowledge, for the distribution of valuable seeds, and for the general promotion of the farming interests of the country, asks an appropriation not at all adequate with the wants of the people, but cut down in view of the financially depressed condition of the country, instantly a howl for retrenchment is set up by honorable gentlemen who know more of Blackstone than they do of the needs of the agricultural portion of our country, and who embrace this "golden opportunity," as they term it, to set an example of economy and frugality. Every civilized nation that has been guided by a spirit of wisest economy is endeavoring to promote this great interest, in which more than one-half the world is actually employed and upon the success of which the other portion is dependent. Every operation of this department is so naturally connected with the diversified pursuits of practical life, that it aids to a greater or less extent the farmer, the gardener, the merchant, and the miner, by furnishing him with useful concentrated knowledge. Let any gentleman take the trouble to examine the letter-books of the Agricultural Department, or even of the Committee on Agriculture of our own House, and he will not fail to observe the awakened and constantly increasing demand for the uses of this practical department of our Government. Letters of inquiry asking for seeds and "farmers' documents" are received by the basketful daily from all parts of the country. Instead of decreasing the appropriation for this much-neglected branch of public service, justice to the farming and laboring interests of the country rather demand that you should increase it. Congress, by act of July 2, 1862, provided "for the establishment of colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, thus recognizing the absolute necessity for the foundation of a system of education to the farmer which would "elevate him to that standard of intelligence which now distinguishes the other professions of life." The province and the practice of this special Department of Agriculture is to foster the increasing spirit of kindliness to the farmer and practically assist those who need knowledge and help. Strike it down, sir, and you strike a blow at the best and staunchest friends of our country; those whose sturdy toil gives us bread, and whose stalwart arms have ever been raised for the help of the country in her darkest and most imperiled hours. The gleam of satire, the blade of tutored wit, and the foolish help of ridicule may win the applause of an hour, but the "farmer boys are marching;" banners and men are springing up from the wheatfields of the West and North, and prudence and policy at least should teach us that lessons of reform and economy had better be taught to the rich banker of the East than to the poor farmer of the West. These people are in no humor to be trifled with on subjects so seriously affecting their material prosperity and personal happiness. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the fight may be a square one. Let us know who is the farmer's friend and who is his enemy.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question before he sits down. I have seen a report furnished by the Department of Agriculture—I have not got it now—giving an account of the way in which these seeds are distributed. My recollection is that nearly half of these packages of seeds distributed by the department are distributed not to members of Congress and not to agents of the department, but are distributed to other persons.

Mr. HAYS. I have not seen that report. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] that I suppose he is aware of the fact that the Agricultural Department has correspondents all over the United States from whom they are collecting information, and that seeds are disseminated among those correspondents in order that they may experiment with them.

Mr. BECK. Yes; but this report shows, if I recollect right, that more of these seeds are distributed to other persons than are distributed to members of Congress and the agents of the department.

Mr. LAMPORT. Here is the report to which the gentleman refers. [Handing it to Mr. BECK.]

Mr. HAYS. The persons who write letters to the department, conveying information to it, are certainly entitled to recognition, and have a right to receive these seeds.

Mr. BECK. Here is the report. I read from it. There were distributed to Senators and Members of Congress 273,776 packages; to agricultural societies 153,344; to statistical correspondents 111,901; to meteorological observers 20,012; and to miscellaneous applicants 255,532. Thus it will be seen that the miscellaneous applicants received nearly as many packages as Senators and Members of Congress. Now why should he give these seeds to Tom, Dick, and Harry, around Washington here or anywhere else?

Mr. HAYS. I deny the charge; he does not give them to persons around the capital here.

Mr. BECK. Where do they go, then?

Mr. HAYS. They are sent to different parts of the United States; all over the South, the West, and the East.

Mr. BECK. To miscellaneous applicants?

Mr. HAYS. Yes; and they have as much right to them as you have, as citizens of the country.

Mr. BECK. Then I want it understood that these seeds are not distributed through representative men and agents of the Department to be sent to the people of the country generally; but are distributed by the chief of the Bureau, and that each individual now has as much right to get from him anything he sees fit to give him as the Representative of one hundred and thirty thousand people has. Is that the intimation of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. HAYS. I do not quite understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. BECK. You say that each individual man has as much right to these seeds as I have as a Representative of my district.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen must address the Chair, and speak one at a time.

Mr. BECK. I ask the question in all kindness.

Mr. HAYS. Parties in the South, in the East, and in the West who desire seed can certainly address communications to the Commissioner of Agriculture and get a few seeds for the purpose of experiment. They are entitled to them. I do not say that the Commissioner of Agriculture has a right to send out the seeds promiscuously. He is only applied to by a few persons for them. He certainly has to keep up his correspondence with parties throughout the country for the purpose of experimenting, so as to find out what seeds are suitable for different localities.

Mr. BECK. The table that I have read from shows that these miscellaneous applicants who get their seeds through him without the action of any representative man or authorized agent get 255,532 of these packages; while all the Senators and Members of the House together get only 273,776 packages. Now I ask, ought the head of any Bureau to be the absolute master of all these appropriations to distribute to whom he pleases?

Mr. HAYS. I would ask the gentleman if there are not agricultural colleges all over the country?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir; there are.

Mr. HAYS. Have we not agricultural societies all over the country?

Mr. BECK. We have.

Mr. HAYS. Have we not botanical societies and scientific societies of that kind throughout the country which call upon this department for information and seeds?

Mr. BECK. The miscellaneous item in this list excludes all the agricultural societies and all the statistical societies. What I complain of is that the miscellaneous applicants get nearly as much as all the Senators and Members together.

Mr. LAMPORT. The gentleman from Kentucky I know does not wish to do injustice to the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. HAYS. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. BECK. If I had the floor I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LAMPORT.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time belonged to the gentleman from Alabama, but it has been exhausted in the dialogue between him and the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LAMPORT. I am sure the gentleman from Kentucky desires to know the facts.

Mr. BECK. I do.

Mr. LAMPORT. Frequently requests come to me from farmers asking me to send them seeds, and I send those letters to the Commissioner indorsing them "please accommodate the applicant." He puts all such cases down as miscellaneous. I presume many members do the same thing.

Mr. BECK. I have done it myself, and have been always treated kindly.

Mr. LAMPORT. That will explain the matter. In addition to the distribution to each congressional district, the department furnishes many packages of seeds in this way upon applications indorsed by members to accommodate persons who have written to them.

Mr. SHANKS. I notice in the communication from the Commissioner of Agriculture that he condemns the proposition to employ a lady in the department for the distribution of these seeds, and winds up with the very peculiar language that a lady in that department would be of no value.

Mr. HAYS. I think the gentleman has misunderstood the communication.

Mr. SHANKS. If I have, the letter will show. I say that whoever, male or female, has been for years past distributing seeds in that department, he or she has been utterly worthless. If there is any man in this country who knows what climate any particular seed that comes from that department is best adapted to, or in what soil it would best prosper, he has obtained that information from some other source than from the department. If there is any man there so wise and well informed as we are told in the paper which has been read here that this man is, any one who is able to tell what soil or climate will best suit the seeds that are sent out, he certainly keeps that information closely locked up; it does not get to the farmers of the country.

Of all the seeds which I have ever received, and I have received my share as a member of Congress, I never yet learned, from any instructions which accompanied any package of them, what soil or climate they would do best in. The major part of the seeds which I got were something that would grow down on the Mississippi instead of on the Wabash, where I live. If there is such a man in the department as this letter of the Commissioner would indicate, I am glad to know it, and I hope that hereafter he will tell the people something about the seeds which he sends out. My opinion is that if there is any woman in this country who does not know as much about the distribution of seeds as the one who has had charge of it for some years past, then she would indeed be worthless in that or in any other department.

Mr. LAMISON. I desire to say a single word somewhat in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] in regard to the distribution of these seeds. I am one of those who do not believe that there is either efficiency or economy in the conduct of this Department of Agriculture. I conceive it to be utterly useless for any purpose for which it was created originally, and for one I am in favor of abolishing it entirely.

Now in relation to the matter referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky I will say that about fifteen years ago there was a young lawyer in my town who at the time was secretary of an agricultural society, which place he held for a single year. Yet from that time on he has been in the regular receipt of packages of seeds from the Agricultural Department, and at one time and another I have seen bags and bags of those seeds piled away in the back part of his office, and not used at all. A like condition of things exists in other portions of my district. These seeds are sent to parties who care nothing about them and who never use them. Some years ago I went over to the Agricultural Department and notified them that those seeds which they sent to these parties were not used, but were laid away uncared for. But the department still keeps up the practice of sending them to the same parties. I think there is neither efficiency nor economy of any kind in the management of this department, and for one I hope it will be abolished.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying that I cannot agree with the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. LAMISON] that the Department of Agriculture is a useless institution. So far as my experience has gone, it has proved a truly useful one.

I am somewhat like the lawyer of whom my friend from Ohio [Mr. LAMISON] spoke, a member of an agricultural society. I have had large consignments of seeds made to me, and I have scattered them among the farmers of my district. They have come to me in repeated instances and stated that the new seeds I had distributed to them, emanating from the Department of Agriculture, were a very valuable acquisition to the seeds in my county. It is a good thing in every agricultural district to change the seeds used there. It is not always right or proper that the seeds of one climate should be distributed in that climate. It is well to change them to different climates and in different soils in order to prevent deterioration. I have noticed of my own knowledge and observation that such a change as that is an improvement in the great cereals of the country.

And another thing; there is nothing for which I am more frequently asked than the monthly report that emanates from this department, now that the annual reports have ceased to be published. Within the last four months there has been scarcely a day that I have not received one or more letters from my constituents asking for the Agricultural Reports of 1872 and 1873. I think we did a very unwise thing for the agricultural interests of the country when we ceased to publish the annual reports which have been so eagerly sought for by the farmers in every portion of the Union, and which I know have proved in my district to be very valuable. My constituents seek them earnestly. They frequently ask me for them at home. And I trust the time will soon come when there will be a change of the policy which seems to have been adopted here, and when we will publish these reports and send them broadcast throughout the land for the benefit and the improvement of the agricultural interests.

The introduction of a single new seed or vegetable becomes very frequently, in the course of a year or two, sufficiently valuable to the people of the country to pay for all the expenditure that may be incurred in the publication of the annual report.

Mr. LAMPORT. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to see in this House a prejudice against the Agricultural Department. Many gentlemen here seem to take but little interest in this department, and indeed express their disapprobation of it. My esteemed friend from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] complains that seeds are sent to different parts of the country without an essay to inform the farmer to what particular soil they are adapted. That idea is utterly impracticable. The Commissioner of Agriculture frequently sends out seeds to persons that call for them, although they are not adapted to the particular places to which they are sent. But he has sent out cereals and other seeds that have been of vast benefit to the country. I recollect myself receiving from the department some fifteen years ago a kind of wheat called the "Mediterranean wheat." Our crops had been almost destroyed by the midge. We took that sample of wheat, and it has now become the wheat of Western New York. Thus those seeds have been worth millions of dollars to the State of New York.

The Commissioner of Agriculture has within the last two years sent to North Carolina and other States wheat from the State of Pennsylvania called the "Fultz wheat." The planting of this wheat in these other States has increased the crop 10, 15, and even 20 per cent., so that that seed has proved to be worth thousands of dollars. No doubt some gentlemen have received vegetable seeds and flower seeds that have not quite come up to their expectations; but in other cases the seeds received from the department have proved of immense value.

I very much regret that members of this House have taken so decided a stand against the agricultural interests of the country. I have not forgotten the fact that forty-three gentlemen here not long ago voted to abolish this department, and my esteemed friend from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] almost went into fits because we asked for the printing of the Agricultural Report. I hope to have an opportunity to pay my respects to that gentleman at a proper time.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that this House will not be so unjust to the agricultural interests of the country, upon which our prosperity so largely depends, as to go back upon these small appropriations for this department. I recollect that the first speech I ever heard on this floor—and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] now on his feet reminds me of it—was made by that gentleman against a little appropriation to complete the building for the Agricultural Department. He stated that he regarded the concern as a "mere fancy." Undoubtedly the gentleman thinks so. But, sir, if I should make a remark that Blackstone was a "mere fancy" he would not think me very wise; nor do I think him very wise in opposing the agricultural interests of this country and in denominating them a "mere fancy." Such a remark from me in regard to Blackstone would show my ignorance; and the gentleman's remark in regard to the agricultural interests shows his ignorance in that direction.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAMPORT] were directed to me particularly, but I wish to correct the misapprehension which seems to prevail here that this amendment antagonizes the Agricultural Department. Why, sir, it is as far as possible from doing any such thing. So far as I am concerned I am in favor of the distribution of seeds; I am in favor of agriculture; I am almost a "granger," although I do not happen to have any "grangers" in my district. I know what it is to farm. I am unfortunate enough to own a farm. I am not against the farming interests of the country, and I do not want to destroy the Agricultural Department; but I desire to reduce it to the same basis to which all the institutions of the Government ought to be reduced.

Now because I propose a reduction of the salary of this particular officer it does not follow that I am in favor of destroying the Agricultural Department, or that I shall ultimately be against the publication of the Agricultural Report. This man is not worth $1,800. It was as a plain, practical, business proposition that I put the matter to the House. Twelve hundred dollars is more than he is worth. If gentlemen will read on a little further in the bill they will see an appropriation for an assistant superintendent of the seed-room at a salary of $1,200. Both of these salaries are too much.

Mr. BURCHARD. When my colleague [Mr. WARD] says that this officer is not worth $1,800, does he refer to the particular occupant or to the office?

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I mean the particular occupant and also the office itself. This amendment does not imply any antagonism on my part to the department. I am informed, and I believe it to be true, that while the predecessor of the present Commissioner was in office he did not employ such a man as this the year round; but during the season of the distribution of seeds he employed a proper man, paid him for the time he worked, and then discharged him. He was employed only three or four months in the year. This man really has no right to be employed any longer. He is not the fittest man in the world for the place at any rate. He is not fitted by education for the position. He has never followed such pursuits as would fit him for these particular duties. Twelve hundred dollars a year is really more than he is worth almost anywhere; it is certainly all he is worth in this place. It was only with this view that I offered my amendment. It is a plain, simple, business question of how much we will pay a man in the Agricultural Department to distribute these seeds—a duty that requires just about that kind of talent which it takes to measure potatoes.

Mr. BURCHARD. I wish to ask my colleague a question, and on the answer will depend my vote upon this amendment. Is it the duty of this officer merely to distribute the seeds and take charge of the seed-room, or is it his business, as claimed by gentlemen here, to purchase seeds?

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. He does not collect the seeds; he has not education or fitness for that. They are purchased by another gentleman whose name I could give. This man merely does the mechanical duty of seeing the seeds distributed after they are brought there for distribution. The whole clause ought to be stricken out. I would vote to strike out the whole clause relating to that officer quicker than for this amendment. I made this amendment because if he must be retained it is all he is worth. I offered it for that and nothing more.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, as one of the few practical farmers on this floor—and there are very few, I believe—I have listened with great pleasure to the talk of bankers like my friend from New York, [Mr. LAMPORT,] criticising the speeches made in reference to the Agricultural Reports and the Agricultural Bureau.

Mr. LAMPORT. Allow me to correct the gentleman; I am not a banker.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend's memory is failing him. I was in favor of the Agricultural Department from the beginning, but I have sustained it always as an Agricultural Department. My friend is mistaken in reference to the speech made by me to which he has alluded. I made no such speech against the Agricultural Department. When it was said, however, that an elegant green-house and conservatory ought to be established, and that it was designed for the purpose of cultivating economic textile plants and botanic plants, I then inquired whether azaleas, fuschias, and different varieties of the cactus family, and the numerous other varieties of rare exotics cultivated there in order to furnish members of Congress and others with beautiful bouquets, were to be classed with such economic and botanic plants. That is the speech to which he refers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the real agriculturists have always sought to make this an Agricultural Department. It has, however, been turned into the cultivation of fine flowering plants to adorn and beautify this capital and nothing more. It was never intended for any such purpose.

I am in favor of perpetuating the Agricultural Department, as I have always shown by my vote, but I am in favor of making it an establishment for promoting the interests of agriculture and not a mere fancy establishment. I am not in favor of appropriating $75,000 a year for salaries. I have an amendment to make; and if it be in order I will send it to the Speaker's desk to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment now pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withhold it then for the present. I propose to add $200 to the salary of chief clerk as disbursing officer and to strike out the salary of $1,800 a year now given to the disbursing officer.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right.

Mr. HOLMAN. I find there are but ninety-one persons to be paid in that department, and yet we are paying $1,800 a year to a clerk for that purpose. It is in harmony with all these other salaries, but I suppose my friend from New York and others like him have a fancy for farming just in that way. So it is that they run up a total of $75,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana to offer his amendment after the pending amendment is disposed of.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his amendment, and I will renew it.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I withdraw it.

Mr. KASSON. I renew it. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the committee on this subject, for I anticipate before long the chairman of the committee will be anxious to close general debate on this subject, that the difficulty with this Department of Agriculture is not at all in respect to the object of the Department when it was created. I have, I believe, known its history from the beginning, and have had a part to some extent in the appropriation by which it was founded. I wish to say our complaint is that the objects for which that Department was founded are not carried out. It has become a Bureau largely for comfortable places and for doing machine work never intended to be done when it was established. For example, we never intended establishing that Bureau of Agriculture to make the Government a competitor with every seed store in the country for hollyhocks, marigolds, and Pennsylvania rye, and Berks County oats, and all that sort of thing which is now sent out from that department of the Government to the country. Its object was to get new and unused seeds, and to enable the country to try them as experiments, and if successful then to establish a source from which they could be propagated over different parts of the country.

It has degenerated, and gentlemen around me know it has degenerated largely into the mere distribution of the common seeds which you can find at every corner-road store in the United States. Look at your lists of seeds and see what they recite when they come to you, and you find it is but a little pleasant bit of subsidy which we send out to our friends to save them the trouble of buying at the seed stores at their country county seats. I say, sir, that this is an entire contravention of the object of the Department of Agriculture as it was established. Under one of the former Commissioners they did introduce from foreign parts a very valuable and useful vegetable; perhaps two or three. The question of management I admit we cannot arrange here. The management must be good, or your department, whatever your laws are, will fail.

So much for the general character of the department; and now, coming to the provisions of this bill themselves, I would say that I find that in some cases the appropriations made for the Departments are not used with equal justice. I approve of the Commissioner sending out seeds to his correspondents who furnish him information that may be useful and report the results of experiments. But in regard to the payment of postage, I say that I do not like the Commissioner to pay the bills of members for postage in distributing their seeds in some cases and in others leaving the members to pay it for themselves. There should be a clear rule in regard to the use of this $52,000 of postage which the bill proposes to give to the Commissioner.

Again, sir, we have a chemist and assistant chemist. I cannot vote for both unless the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, or some competent authority, shows that one cannot do the work. Then I think there should be a change made in regard to this disbursing clerk, for the reason that in other Departments we pay a clerk of a certain class $200 extra and let him do the disbursements. There is not a large amount of disbursements in this Bureau so as to require a clerk at more than $1,800.

A MEMBER. Department, the gentleman should say.

Mr. KASSON. Yes; I believe that is the name of it. And when a former Pennsylvania farmer—for I believe Pennsylvania has had this department from the beginning—was there he would give us no peace, because he had not a seat in the Cabinet of the United States, to which he considered he was entitled on account of being at the head of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. DUNNELL. I renew the amendment for the purpose of saying a single word in reply to the gentleman from Iowa, in regard to the character of the seeds which are sent out from the Agricultural Department. Representing, as I do, a district entirely agricultural, I think I am able to bear testimony to the fact that, as a rule, the seeds which are sent from that department are selected with great care, and are of very great value to the farmers of that State. I do know that the very best kinds of wheat that we are raising in Minnesota were obtained from the Agricultural Department. Indeed the only wheats we now raise came from that department, and a kind of wheat distributed the present year has been sought for very eagerly by my constituents. If I had sent but one half-peck to each applicant for wheat, I would have required ten or fifteen bushels to answer the letters I have received. One kind of wheat has become the standard wheat of the State, and it was received from this department. The oats, also, that are now raised in our State with the most success were received from the Department of Agriculture.

I insist, therefore, that the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa are not correct. It is possible that the Commissioner of Agriculture may have palmed off some Berks County oats, and he may have queried whether the receiver could tell the difference between the new oats and the old that have for a long time been in use. But certainly there is no complaint in my State against this department. The Department of Agriculture is popular with the people of my State, and the seeds which are sent out there are gladly received. And, as I have said before, the people of that State desire that they should have not only the seeds but the Agricultural Report. I feel bound to say that I think it is unworthy of us, unworthy of people so largely agricultural, so largely dependent upon agriculture, that we should refuse to send out free and without cost to the farmers of our country, the tillers of the soil, the producers of our wealth, the Agricultural Report of our country. For two years the Report of the Agricultural Department has been unprinted. The order for printing has passed the House, and I think the Senate ought at once to respond to the expression of the House and take the necessary action to have the report printed. We ought to insist that that report shall go to the people free, without money and without price.

Mr. MERRIAM. I would like to ask the gentleman if his constituents did not petition for the repeal of the franking privilege? While I agree that it is very important for us to get these Agricultural Reports into the hands of the farmers, for my district is an agricultural district and I have demands for them continually, and there are many there who are farmers, to whom it is a real comfort and profit to get them and read them; and I think that there should be some method whereby we could get these reports into their hands; yet, notwithstanding that, my people petitioned Congress to abolish the franking privilege, and I ask the gentleman if it was not the same with his own constituents?

Mr. DUNNELL. I think my constituents through the friendly and kindly aid of the Postmaster-General were induced, very many of them, to petition Congress to repeal the franking privilege. If their unbiased opinion had been had in the matter they would have asked that the franking privilege be amended, modified, and not repealed. They are willing now that it shall be modified and restored.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last word. I think it is to be regretted, Mr. Chairman, that in the organization of the House there was not more care taken in the organization of the Committee on Agriculture. It is very evident that that committee has been very inadequately composed. I find at the head of it my excellent friend from Alabama, [Mr. HAYS,] who, I understand, is what they call a planter in his country, in other parts of the country a farmer on a pretty large scale, and I have no doubt that that impressed upon the Speaker the conviction that he would be a good man to put at the head of this committee; but it is very evident from the discussion which has been had here that the Speaker ought to have taken the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] or my equally distinguished friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] gentlemen of the law, gentlemen who are accustomed to briefs, to plaintiffs and defendants, to examinations and cross-examinations. They would have elevated the Agricultural Bureau, as it is called, I will not say disparagingly, by some, to the dignified position that it ought to occupy. They would have corrected this whole matter of seeds, Berks County oats, and I know not what else. We should then have had a proper and just distribution to the agricultural, horticultural, and floricultural interests of the country. A friend near me suggests "hay-seed;" I do not know about that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am accustomed to hear these periodical attacks on the Agricultural Department session after session, based upon nothing better than what we have heard to-day, and they have always come from some other quarter than from the Committee on Agriculture. In the last Congress it will be recollected that our old friend from Ohio, Mr. Wilson, stood as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, and championed the Department of Agriculture as my friend from Alabama [Mr. HAYS] has done on this occasion.

I know not why it is that gentlemen engaged as I am with the question of currency, and as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is with the subject of taxes and ways and means, and as my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is in the matter of claims, should be supposed to understand this question so much better, and to be able to inform the House so much more intelligently upon it than the gentlemen who have been required by the organization of the House to inquire into this matter, and obtain the necessary information in regard to it.

I have very little to say on this subject excepting from my own experience, and that is that there is no other Department that comes nearer to the business of those that I represent than does the Department of Agriculture, and upon no subject do I receive more letters than those which come asking for the distribution of the seeds, cuttings, plants, &c., of the Department of Agriculture. My opinion, from having seen that department originate in a mere clerkship in the Patent Office until it has gained the proportions that it now fills, is that it has been not only exceedingly useful, but that it has been very wisely and profitably administered; I mean profitable to the general agricultural interests of the country.

I know it is the custom to speak very disparagingly of the first Commissioner of the department; we have had a throw here to-day at the poor man who has been in his grave long enough to have turned to dust again. But that man had what is wanted by a great many of us, sound, practical, every-day common sense, and generally understood what was wanted in his department.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on this paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman that it would be economy of time if he were to ask unanimous consent to close debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. There are a number of other amendments to be offered, but if unanimous consent can be given to close debate I will not insist on my motion.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would like to say a few words.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I ask unanimous consent that at the close of the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa all debate upon this paragraph may cease.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I shall occupy but a minute upon this question. I thought I knew something about agriculture generally, and had given as much time as I could possibly spare from the other duties which have been imposed upon me by the House to try and become acquainted with this Department of Agriculture. I know that a great deal of ridicule is pointed at the head of this department, but nowadays a great deal of ridicule is pointed at everybody who becomes at all prominent. In my interviews with the head of this department I have not got the impression that the man was totally unfit for his position, as has been represented here. I think he knows a great deal about it; I think he knows at least as much as any other man you can obtain for the place at $3,000 a year. As regards the seeds that are sent out, I want to say this: I have found a great many seeds on the list that is usually furnished to members for distribution which are very valuable, just such seeds as are needed in the Northwest. Let me call your attention to one or two of these different kinds of seeds. If you will examine the report on commerce and navigation, you will find that in 1871 we bought five million bushels of barley in Canada and brought it into the port of Chicago. I went to the Commissioner and asked him if he had any new and rare specimens of barley, and he said he had. I asked him to send me all he could spare, which he did. I knew just what men to send it to in my district; men who would take it, cultivate it, and report upon it. If other gentlemen in the House do not know these facts, is Mr. Watts to blame?

Another thing: there is no subject on which the people of the West need information so much as the seeding down land into grass. I went to the Commissioner of Agriculture and asked him if he had any clover-seed that would not freeze out in winter. I wanted a kind of clover that came from a country where the frost was as deep in the winter as it is in Iowa. I wanted a kind of clover that would not freeze out in the winter. Are members here aware that the grass crop is the great crop of the United States? And is there any member in this House whose constituents do not need such information as I endeavored to obtain? I asked the Commissioner that question, and he furnished me some Alsyke clover, and I sent it home to my constituents.

The remark has been made here that you can find all the seeds distributed by this department at the corner grocery stores in the country. I tell you you cannot do so. It is a well-known fact that in hot countries where the thermometer rises to one hundred degrees in the shade, oats never come to perfection; and in order to maintain the vitality and strength of oats you must renew the seed from colder climates. Mr. Watts is doing that very thing. I judge from the tenor of the debate here that the work he is doing is not understood

I admit that I have received the impression that a great many men in the Departments of this Government have a great deal of leisure; I have honestly received that impression. I believe that one-third of the men in every Department of the Government here might very well be dispensed with, and then I would give reasonable salaries to those who are left.

The question was taken upon the amendment moved by Mr. WARD, of Illinois; and upon a division—ayes 27, noes not counted—it was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by inserting after the words "chief clerk, $2,000," the words "with an additional salary of $200 as disbursing clerk;" also to strike out the words "disbursing clerk, $1,800."

Mr. GARFIELD. I think that is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAZELTON, of New Jersey. I move to insert after the amendment in relation to microscopist the following:

Provided, That when the services of said microscopist shall be requested by any person or persons for the purpose of making an examination of fruits, fruit-trees, plants, seeds, vines, &c., they shall be given free; and that $1,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, is appropriated to pay the actual traveling expenses in attending to the above duties.

Mr. GARFIELD. I shall have to make the point of order on that amendment that it is a change of law in regard to the duties of this office.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken, and the amendment is ruled out of order.

Mr. KASSON. I notice that the Committee on Appropriations have reported as the compensation of the librarian of this department $1,800. Now, the price-current in the Departments for a librarian is only $1,200, so far as I know. I would ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether this librarian should not be put on a par with the others? I move to reduce the salary to $1,200.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will not object.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 37, noes 35.

Mr. HAYS. That is not a quorum, and I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. HAYS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 59, noes 36.

Mr. HAYS, (one of the tellers.) I do not ask for a further count; I give it up.

So the amendment was declared adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend in relation to the compensation of the chief messenger, so as to make it $840 instead of $850, as reported in the bill. That will make the pay the same as for messengers in the other Departments.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I also move to amend by inserting after the words "nine laborers" the words "at $740 each;" so that there may be no mistake.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I move to amend so as to reduce the salary of the engineer to $1,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I move to amend by making the salary of the engineer $1,200.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out the words "assistant superintendent of the seed-room, $1,200."

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For postage on seeds, reports, circulars, and letters, $52,000.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out the last word. I do not desire to create any debate on this subject; but I wish to learn from some member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads whether it is the fact, as I have been informed, that the entire cost to the Post-Office Department of conveying the annual Agricultural Reports, imposing on them their full share of the whole cost of carrying the mails, does not exceed ten cents, while the postage charged to us or our constituents upon these documents is forty cents.

Whatever may be the opinion of different gentlemen about the franking privilege, it seems to me a very great wrong that documents printed for distribution among the people should be to the Post-Office Department a source of profit to the extent of three times the actual cost of transportation. I would like to learn from some members of the Post-Office Committee whether ten cents apiece is not ample compensation to the Department for all the expense of conveying these documents through the mails.

Mr. PACKER. It would be utterly impossible to ascertain the precise cost of conveying any particular document through the mails. Contracts are regulated upon the railroads by the weight of the matter carried. But the railroads form but a small proportion of all the mail-routes of the country; and the contracts upon routes other than railroads, and upon which distance is a more important element, are not bid for according to the weight of the matter carried. Therefore it is difficult to ascertain with any degree of accuracy the net cost of transmitting any particular document.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I have understood from what I supposed to be a very high source that the expense of conveying these public documents, in addition to the existing demands for mail transportation, is very little. All the mail arrangements being made for other things, the addition of these public documents does not make any very considerable increase of expense. But that may not be a just way of considering the question. I understand, however, that taking the rate of the whole service throughout the Union, and imposing upon these documents their share of the entire cost, ten cents apiece is ample remuneration for their transportation. It is of course difficult to get at the cost exactly; but I understand that ten cents apiece is sure to cover the entire cost of conveying public documents of the size of the Agricultural Report. If that is so, it seems to me we ought not to impose on the people for the conveyance of these documents a charge which yields to the Post-Office Department a profit of 300 per cent.

Mr. PACKER. I think, sir, the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] is in the right direction. I have no doubt that there might properly be made a considerable reduction on the postage of this printed matter.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. Will my colleague permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PACKER. I would like first to answer the one that has already been put to me.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. Did it not appear conclusively before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads that if these Agricultural Reports were carried at the same rate at which the Post-Office Department carries such articles as the "screw" spoken of a month or two ago by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] that is to say, if the Post-Office Department would act as an express company for the Agricultural Department as it does for private citizens, and would carry these reports at the same rates, their transportation through the mails would be reduced to about thirteen cents a volume instead of forty-eight cents, the postage now charged?

Mr. PACKER. They are carried at the same rate as all other printed matter. For a short distance the charge made by the Department may appear very high, but when you come to calculate the distance across the continent it would be a very low rate. I believe, however, that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads have in contemplation, and will report when next called, a bill which will regulate this matter to some extent.

Mr. BURCHARD. I understand that the rate upon printed matter from Washington to Chicago, for instance, at one cent an ounce, would be sixteen dollars per hundred pounds, while the express charge for the same distance would be $4.25 per hundred pounds.

Mr. PACKER. The postage would be precisely the same from here to Chicago as from here to Baltimore.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out the pending paragraph. I desire for a few moments the attention of the House while I state the reasons which prompt me to make this motion. I have on one or two previous occasions attempted to change the vicious method that now prevails as to distributing public documents. As to seeds we have already changed the law, so far as the action of this House is concerned. I charge that the official stamps of the Government, furnished by the Post-Office Department to other Departments, have been used to transmit through the country documents that had no right to go free through the mails. I know what I am talking about; and I will be specific if it becomes necessary.

Mr. LAMPORT. I hope the gentleman will be specific. This is a serious charge.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I say that speeches made on the floor of this House, which no man has the right to frank, are sent by other Departments of this Government under the official stamps furnished by the Post-Office Department.

I wish to be fair, and will state to the House that I do not know but it is claimed they are sent in an envelope with some official communication and paid at a rate which would not be increased whether the speech was out or in. But it is the commencement of a vicious practice that will grow into an enormous wrong. I move then to strike out this appropriation in order that this Department, which I presume is all right in this respect, may not be tempted by and by, as other Departments have been, to take the speeches of my friend from Indiana, or any other friend in favor of this or that measure, and transmit them through the mails free under the official stamps of the Department furnished to it by the Post-Office Department, when it would not distribute my speech free in the same way.

Now then, Mr. Chairman, I repeat again that the speeches of gentlemen upon this floor in large numbers have been distributed free throughout the country, and the expense, if any is incurred, for I wish to be fair and will state it accurately, has been paid by these official postage-stamps furnished in the way the law provides for their being furnished.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will give us the names of the parties.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. It has been done in the Treasury Department.

Mr. RANDALL. Whose speeches have been thus distributed?

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. It has been done by the Comptroller of the Currency.

A MEMBER. By whom?

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. By Mr. Knox, the Comptroller of the Currency. It is no matter what they are; I think the speeches on the subject of finance have been considerable failures. There is no quarrel about that. What I say is that the speeches of members, such as they may deem proper to select out, have been distributed in great numbers by the use of the official stamps furnished to these Departments. Not having made any speech myself I have no right to complain, but others have who have made speeches and whose speeches were not distributed without cost to the members in some way.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will tell us whose speeches were distributed in this way.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. It is the first step in the growth of a practice which this Congress sooner or later must abolish, and I move early in the commencement of our legislation on this bill to provide against it hereafter. The point of order has been made, which is sustained, and it is doubtless all right, and I do not quarrel with it; but I call the attention of this House to this practice for the purpose of asking the House somewhere, at some time, upon this appropriation bill or somewhere else, to provide a method by which official documents and correspondence of the several offices shall be distributed without being open to this kind of abuse, this kind of favoritism, partiality, wrong—I almost said crime, for I believe it to be almost that—in attempting to distribute these documents clandestinely under the official stamps of the Government furnished to these Departments.

Mr. HAYS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he knows of any such thing having been done by this Department of Agriculture?

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. As I have already stated I do not know it of this department, and I make no charge against this department. If this department were to do the same thing, it might select the gentleman's speech and distribute it free through the mails under the official stamps supplied to that department, while it would not distribute mine if it saw fit.

Mr. RANDALL. It is hardly generous, however, in the gentleman to move his amendment and state the purpose he has in view in connection with this department. I wish to state that the subject-matter of which he complains has been called informally to the attention of the Banking and Currency Committee, if I understand it correctly.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I did not know that.

Mr. RANDALL. The abuse as stated was with the Comptroller of the Currency in sending out the speeches of members or some portion of the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency on the House currency bill through the mails to the various banks and persons to whom blanks were sent, and as a justification for that the Comptroller said—and if I am not correct some member of the Banking and Currency Committee can correct me—that it did not involve any greater expense to the Government than would the envelope with its inclosure without these speeches.

Mr. STORM. They must have been pretty light speeches, then.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. Would not the gentleman call that favoritism?

Mr. RANDALL. I believe it to be an abuse, but I do not like to individualize. The charge was that the Comptroller of the Currency, Mr. Knox, had sent free through the mails under the official stamp of his office speeches of members of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. MERRIAM. Let me say just here to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that none of mine ever went out under anybody's official stamp.

Mr. RANDALL. Let those who did have their speeches sent out free under the official stamp of the Comptroller of the Currency stand up and speak for themselves as frankly as the gentleman from New York has for himself.

Mr. KELLOGG. Were the speeches of anybody else than the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency sent out free by the Comptroller of the Currency?

Mr. RANDALL. So far as my knowledge goes, the charge does not extend beyond that—that it does not extend to anybody outside of that committee. I do not think the fault is in the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, but the fault is with Mr. Knox, Comptroller of the Currency, in having abused his official postage-stamps for any such purpose.

I move further to amend the paragraph by striking out "$52,000" and inserting "4,000;" so that it will read:

For postage on seeds, reports, circulars, and letters, $4,000.

This will make the appropriation here harmonize with the rest of the legislation on the same subject throughout this bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I trust the committee will come to a vote at once. I am in hopes that it is possible for us to finish this bill to-day.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire just to say that this will be enough to cover the cost of the printing of the stamps; and it will cut off this sending of speeches and seeds too.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 39; noes 77; no quorum voting.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for tellers. We have adopted a provision corresponding with this in every other part of the bill.

Mr. PACKER. The Commissioner cannot send out any seeds at all if we adopt the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GARFIELD, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. RANDALL.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 18; noes 87.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not ask for further count.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I offer the following amendment:

Add after the word "dollars" these words: "Provided, That hereafter the postage on Agricultural Reports shall not exceed ten cents each.

Mr. PACKER. I make the point of order that that changes existing law. If any amendment to the law is to be made it should be a general one. These official documents should all go free.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PACKER] raises the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas involves a change of existing law. The Chair is compelled to rule that it does, and that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. SENER. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. As I understand, no Annual Reports of the Commissioner on Agriculture have been printed for the year 1872 or the year 1873. It is well understood in this House that though the House has authorized the printing of those reports their action will not be concurred in by the other House.

Mr. HAYS. How do you know that?

Mr. SENER. I therefore call the attention of the committee to the fact that we are now providing by law for an appropriation for postage of $52,000 to send out $60,000 worth of seeds. In other words, one-third, nearly, of the whole expenditure of this department is for postage. Now, last year the same amount was allowed for postage in the contemplation that a large part of it, or a certain part of it, would be expended in sending out these annual reports. None were sent out, as I understand it, save such as were left over from former years. I think, therefore, if it is probable that there will be none of the reports printed, that this appropriation ought to be cut down to such a sum as will pass the correspondence of the department and the seeds through the mails. Let us not make our appropriation bill a dollar larger than is absolutely necessary. I appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to respond to that suggestion.

Mr. GARFIELD. We appropriate in this bill as in other bills according to the ordinary expectations of life. We have no reason to assume that the Agricultural Report will not be printed. On the contrary, this House has voted that it shall be printed, and it is our duty to appropriate in accordance with the ordinary expectation of what may occur. If not printed the postage will not be used.

Mr. SENER. I understand that it was all used last year.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think not.

Mr. SENER. The chief clerk told me that it was all used last year, and yet no reports have been sent out. I withdraw my formal amendment and move to amend the paragraph by striking out "$52,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$30,000;" so that it will read, "for postage on seeds, reports, circulars, and letters, $30,000."

Mr. FORT. I would suggest to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SENER] that although this may be one-third of the whole appropriation, still it will not involve any outlay of money save for the manufacture of these stamps. It will cost the Government nothing at all to transport any matter through the mails.

Mr. SENER. I will say to the gentleman that we have just had from our own side of the House a lecture on the probability of the improper use of these stamps. Let us vote exactly as much as is necessary and no more. If any of the reports are to be sent out, and if this bill has been framed with a view to sending out reports, let us cut out the amount which would be equal to the postage on the reports.

Mr. FORT. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether the Agricultural Reports, if printed, will be distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture?

Mr. GARFIELD. That is what this appropriation is for to a large extent.

Mr. FORT. Then certainly I hope this amendment will not prevail. If we are to look to the Commissioner of Agriculture for the distribution of these reports we ought to give him a sufficient amount of stamps to enable him to transport them through the mails.

Mr. SENER. When the reports are ordered to be printed we can then make an appropriation. It will then be time enough.

Mr. HAYS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. On what authority does the gentleman say that the Agricultural Report will not be printed?

Mr. SENER. I am assured that the Committee on Printing of the Senate, where the resolution has been hanging up for some months, has no idea of reporting it. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HAYS] knew what my answer would be, for I told him so privately.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I make the point of order that it is not in order to refer to what may be done by the other branch of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. SENER. I think so.

The question being taken on Mr. SENER'S amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I understand that the objection to my amendment is withdrawn. I now offer it again as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 1466, add these words: "Provided, That the postage on Agricultural Reports shall not exceed ten cents each."

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I make the point of order upon that amendment that it proposes to change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont renews the point of order that the amendment changes existing law. The point of order is well taken, and the amendment cannot be entertained.

The question was taken upon the motion to strike out the paragraph, and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collecting agricultural statistics, and compiling and writing matter for monthly, annual, and special reports, $15,000.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I move to add to that paragraph what I send to the Clerk's desk, and I will say that it calls for information only, for the collection of facts, and I trust there will be no objection to it by any member. I have consulted with a number of gentlemen who represent agricultural districts as I do, and they are very anxious for its adoption.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

And it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Agriculture annually to ascertain, as early and as nearly as practicable, the probable amount of every agricultural product, including wool and the supplies of animal food in the United States and in each State and Territory separately; the probable demand for each in this and other countries; the cost of shipping the same to market; the prices realized from consumers; the probable profits of dealers between producers and consumers; and the prices in the principal localities where produced. And the Commissioner of Agriculture shall furnish so much of such information as may be practicable to the proper officers of State boards of agriculture, and some proper officer in each county in the United States, in such form as may be practicable, so as to enable sellers as well as buyers to determine on reasonable prices.

Mr. MERRIAM. I make the point of order on that amendment that it proposes to change the existing law.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I hope no objection will be made to the amendment. It merely asks that certain information be collected, and this duty properly belongs to the Agricultural Department.

Mr. MERRIAM. The gentleman will only waste his time in discussing it, for I shall not withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KASSON. I move to add to the paragraph the following:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be paid to any person receiving other compensation as an officer or employé of the department.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is no objection to that.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire to ask the gentleman who offers that amendment if it will not prevent the committee from employing and compensating the same person for different special services. For instance, suppose he has a person whom he has hired for the purpose of collecting seeds, and who is employed only during a portion of the year, say for thirty or forty days, that person could not be employed or paid under this amendment in compiling and writing matter for the reports.

Mr. GARFIELD. Not while paid for another class of work.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Then the amendment should have added to it the words "at the same time."

Mr. KASSON. I do not think it would be susceptible of that construction, but I will say to the gentleman that officers who are employed to collect statistics and write reports are not the class of persons to whom he refers.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Well, I suggest to the gentleman that he add to his amendment the words "at the same time," and then I will not object to it.

Mr. KASSON. I have no objection to that, although I do not think the amendment as I offered it is capable of the construction which the gentleman supposes. I will, however, add the words "at the same time;" so that it will read:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be paid to any person receiving other compensation as an officer or employé of the department at the same time.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 87, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of new and valuable seeds and plants for distribution, $60,000; for expense of putting up the same, for labor, bagging, paper, twine, gum, and other necessary materials, $5,000.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I move to amend that paragraph by striking out "60," and inserting in lieu thereof "100," so as to make the appropriation $100,000.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that that class of persons who ought to receive the highest consideration from this House are receiving the lowest. Upon the farmers depend all the wealth of the country and its credit. I do not appeal to those gentlemen who come here to represent railroads, or corporations, or cities, but I appeal to every farmer here, to every Representative of a rural district in this House, to vote to increase this appropriation.

I have felt the importance of this department. I believe it is one of the best and most useful departments of the Government. There has been more than half a ton of seed distributed to my district during the last twelve months, and the most satisfactory reports are received therefrom. I congratulate the grangers, of which association I am a humble member, that they have at least one friend in the House who has spoken in favor of the farmers this morning; I refer to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] and I hope he will sustain the amendment. I ask for a vote.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will only ask the committee not to go beyond the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations and beyond the estimate of the department itself. This is a proposition to add $40,000 to the appropriation for the purchase of seeds and plants for distribution. It was done last year, and done on the motion of the same gentleman; and I warn the Committee of the Whole, if they do not wish to swell this department beyond all reasonable proportions, that they must stand by the Committee on Appropriations and not allow this increase to be made.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I will inform the gentleman from Ohio that I hope to stay here long enough to see an appropriation made of $500,000 for this purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes; I suppose so.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia. I move to amend the amendment by striking out $100,000 and inserting in lieu thereof $75,000. I agree fully with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. YOUNG] that we are called upon to do something for the great agricultural interests of the country. Like him I represent an agricultural community, and twenty millions of the people of our country are engaged in agricultural pursuits. But, sir, when we attempt to do something for the agricultural classes of the country, we are begrudged every dollar and every cent that is to be devoted to the benefit of that great interest; an interest which extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and which does so much to build up and develop the material prosperity of the country.

I hope that this appropriation for the purpose of distributing seeds among our people, the great cereals and other seeds that tend to the improvement of the interests of agriculture, will be given not grudgingly by the members of this House, but that they will let the agricultural interest of this country see that it is not forgotten when we come to legislate about it upon this floor.

Day by day for weeks past we have been appropriating millions and millions of dollars for every other department and interest of this country. But now when we come to the agricultural interest, to a department which is of benefit to the agricultural interest, we find it assailed at every point, and each appropriation is sought to be cut down. Yet it is the only department that is of practical benefit to the people, that seeks to give them some advantage of modern improvements by the distribution of seeds and practical information. We are told that the appropriations for this department must not be increased. I would ask every member upon this floor who is from an agricultural district if the demand upon him for seeds during this session has not greatly exceeded the quota allowed him? I have had many more applications than I have had seeds to supply. My constituents want these seeds, and I concur with my friend from Georgia [Mr. YOUNG] that now is the time for agriculturists to do something for themselves. I call upon every member upon this floor who represents an agricultural district to vote for something which will benefit his constituents engaged in that interest.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for a vote.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment moved by Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, and upon a division there were—ayes 41, noes 89.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. That is not a quorum; I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 44, noes 79.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I do not ask a further count; but I give notice that I will call for the yeas and nays on the amendment in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. What on? Your amendment was not adopted.

The amendment was declared to be not adopted.

Mr. LAMPORT. I move to add to the pending paragraph the following:

Provided, That said seeds shall be sent through the mails to any person or persons in the United States who may apply for them free: And provided further, That each Senator and Representative in Congress shall be entitled to have seeds forwarded by the said Commissioner of Agriculture to any parties whose names may be furnished the said Commissioner by said Senator or Representative free.

Mr. GARFIELD. I raise the point of order that that amendment proposes to change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. MCKEE. I move to amend the pending paragraph by adding these words: "and the sum of $5,000 for cotton-seed for distribution." The Agricultural Department has always forgotten us in the South; it never has had such a thing as cotton-seed, and I presume has never thought of it. Indeed I believe that the Commissioner of Agriculture hardly knows there is such a thing as cotton-seed. You cannot find it there in the Department. Yet there is a great deal of difference in the value of the different kinds of cotton-seed. Now we are enabled sometimes to obtain cotton-seed by paying five, ten, or fifteen dollars for a little bag of twenty or thirty pounds of improved cotton-seed. For the purpose of obtaining the benefit of this department in this matter I have moved this amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. It has never been the policy of the Government to furnish people with seeds for general cultivation. This department is for the purpose of distributing seeds obtained from abroad that are new and specially valuable. Cotton-seed does not come under that head at all.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. One of the best kind of cotton-seed which we have been able to obtain in Southern Georgia was imported from India.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then say, "$5,000 of this sum to be for cotton-seed."

Mr. MCKEE. I will modify my amendment in that way.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will not object to that.

Mr. HOSKINS. I also suggest to the gentleman to insert after the words "seeds and plants" the words "including cotton-seeds."

Mr. GARFIELD. That is not necessary.

The amendment moved by Mr. MCKEE, as modified, was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For labor on experimental garden, and for flower-pots, repairs to green-house, and purchase of new plants and seeds for the same, $8,000.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I move to strike out this paragraph. I cannot see the necessity for it.

Mr. LAMPORT. I hope that will not be done. The experimental garden of this department is a matter of very great importance and of great worth to the country. Experiments are made not only with flowers and seeds, but with vegetables, with food plants, with grape-vines, and the like. In fact one of the very intents of this department was that it should be experimental. The gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] while he made a great many points that were very far from what he ought to have made, made that point: he did say that this department was intended to be experimental. I apprehend the idea of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. YOUNG] is to pay us off a little for not exactly falling in with some view he may have taken upon another point.

I insist that this Committee of the Whole should not strike out the experimental garden. They have done enough already to distinguish themselves in their antipathy against the agricultural interests of the country. We have done a great deal for the manufacturing interests of New England and all the rest of the country, and I am glad of it; but I hope we will not neglect the agricultural interest. This House has distinguished itself in almost every item of this bill so far as relates to agriculture by attempting to put it down. Gentlemen have opposed the distribution of the Agricultural Report; and now if you break up the experimental garden you may as well abolish the whole department. I think it would be more manly and becoming in gentlemen to get up here and propose to wipe out the whole department than to disparage it and attempt to starve it down as they have attempted to do every year since I have been in Congress From the Commissioner down, the officers of this department are berated. That Commissioner now expends $1,000 a year more than he receives from the Government for his services. Almost every clerk, engineer, and laborer is subjected to this process of cutting down. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] no doubt speaks the feelings of his heart when he makes his remarks against this department. He will recollect a private conversation he had with me when he attempted to draw from the Agricultural Department a report on irrigation, and when we were told by the Commissioner that to take the document away from his report would go far to injure that report. After the Commissioner, by the arrangements he had made, had obtained the report the gentleman from Iowa sought to draw it out of the department by a resolution of the House; but the good sense of this House defeated that effort. The document was, however, obtained through the Senate; and now, through the courtesy of that body, I have a copy of the Agricultural Report which they in their magnanimity have printed for their use, while the document is denied to this House, the number printed being, I believe, only twelve hundred copies.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. That is the report of 1872.

Mr. LAMPORT. Now, sir, I hope the House will sustain this, almost the last, feature of the Agricultural Department; for if members do not see fit to do so, I invite them as men to vote to wipe out this department altogether.

Mr. KASSON. I am delighted that my friend from New York, [Mr. LAMPORT,] whose hands have grown hard-fisted and horny in arranging discounts over a bank counter, as I have been informed——

Mr. LAMPORT. I never owned a dollar of bank stock in my life.

Mr. KASSON. I am delighted that the gentleman has found something good in what I said heretofore about this department.

Mr. LAMPORT. A good thing may "come out of Nazareth."

Mr. KASSON. I hope the gentleman may find something good in what I say now. In regard to this Commissioner who the gentleman says expends annually $1,000 more than his salary, and also in answer to what the gentleman has said about the Agricultural Report, I wish to call attention to a few facts. The present Commissioner came here from Pennsylvania and took the position at a salary of $3,000. He moved with his family into the department building, (my friend from New York is responsible for calling out these facts,) and he now applies for additional rooms to be rented for carrying on the business of the department. The Government thus furnishes him with what it furnishes to no other officer of the Government except the President, free apartments in addition to his salary. He has put his son into the next best office, as his chief clerk; and this House has been kind enough to-day, in abolishing the disbursing clerk, to put out of office the only man, or nearly so, who comes from any other State than Pennsylvania. This unfortunate clerk is from Illinois. We have also added $200 to the pay of the Commissioner's son. At one time he also had on the pay-roll of his department other members of his family, and perhaps still has them; and I learn (I do not vouch for the fact, and I beg any gentleman to correct the statement if I am wrong; I obtained it from a gentleman who has always taken an interest in that department and in agriculture) that his very servant, who came with the present Commissioner from Pennsylvania, was also put on the pay-roll of the department. Of this I say I have no personal knowledge. Yet in spite of all these facts the gentleman from New York says that the pay of the Commissioner is so small that it is only at a cost of $1,000 from his own pocket that he can remain in the discharge of his duties.

A word as to the other point to which the gentleman has alluded. After the Senate had refused to publish the document known as the Annual Report of the Commissioner, I am sorry to say that the Committee on Agriculture by their action, and at the request of this Commissioner, prevented this House from giving to the people of the West, and especially of the Pacific coast, the benefit of a valuable article on irrigation in the possession of that officer. They have refused to allow it to be printed. Why? Not that the course we proposed would prevent the people from having the document, for the very object of printing was to give it to them; not because it would destroy the value of the Commissioner's report, for the Commissioner could have included it all the same in the volume if published; but because Congress had not ordered the publication of the report they refused to allow a valuable article on irrigation, furnished by Mr. Marsh for that report, to be published by order of this House. In the Senate, however, a gentleman representing there an agricultural State called for the same thing; and the Senate was wise enough to authorize this publication. But, unfortunately, as yet only a few copies can be obtained, because of the limitation in the order for publication. If both Houses had concurred in that order—if the Committee on Agriculture of this House would let that article be published, it could be sent by the hundreds to men who wish to know the laws and principles which should govern irrigation in those States that need it. This information is of vast importance to the West; it ought to go there; yet my friend from New York I apprehend was one of those gentlemen who aided to prevent the people of this country from having that valuable report of Mr. Marsh. I do not know whether the gentleman still adheres to that idea, now that the Senate has ordered the document to be published. I hope he has repented, and will when the question shall again come up allow the people of the West to have the benefit of this publication.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LAMPORT. One word in reply to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] for I seldom trouble the House with any remarks; and this is a subject upon which it is to be expected I am very sensitive. Now, sir, I never was anything but a farmer. I came to this House from the plow-handle, and I expect to go back to it.

Mr. KASSON. My remark on that point was jocular and upon information only, and I take it back.

Mr. LAMPORT. Now, Mr. Chairman, you see from the statement of the gentleman from Iowa the humiliating position an honest man can be put into while in the public service who does not get an adequate compensation for his labors in being compelled to live in that establishment, for he could not afford to go elsewhere and spend $1,000 a year more than his salary. He has been actually compelled to go into that building with his family and live in it, when it is not the proper place for any gentleman in such a position to live in.

Mr. KASSON. The Auditors only get $3,000 a year as well as other high officers of the Government, and they do not ask their families shall be taken care of in the same way.

Mr. LAMPORT. While General Grant was re-elected upon the issue that he had taken such good care of his family, I do not think the gentleman from Iowa ought to find fault with Commissioner Watts for taking care of his family.

Mr. KASSON. I leave that to my friend from Massachusetts to answer.

Mr. LAMPORT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word, with all respect to the gentleman from Iowa, in reply to what he has said on this subject. The Commissioner of Agriculture had prepared by arrangement a very valuable paper by Mr. Marsh on the subject of irrigation, and it was for the purpose of incorporating it in his Agricultural Report. The gentleman from Iowa for some reason sought to obtain that report, first through the Secretary of the Interior, I think, who addressed a note to the Commissioner of Agriculture asking for it. The Commissioner very properly said to the Secretary of the Interior that to give it up would materially affect the interest of his report; that he had obtained it for that purpose and it ought to be published with the annual Agricultural Report. The gentleman from Iowa with a few more——

Mr. DAWES. Let me ask the gentleman whether it is considered any damage to take bodily articles out of other reports and put them into the Agricultural Report?

Mr. LAMPORT. This was written by Mr. Marsh for this Agricultural Report.

Mr. DAWES. That is not what I refer to; but I have had occasion to discover some articles are taken bodily out of one report and put into another report.

Mr. LAMPORT. It is true down in Massachusetts they have a way of doing that very thing.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know whether it was an objection or not, and would like to have the gentleman say what his opinion is.

Mr. LAMPORT. In Massachusetts they have a way of grafting and budding that we do not have down our way. Now, Mr. Chairman, ordinary courtesy certainly ought to have allowed the Commissioner of Agriculture to publish this report of Mr. Marsh on irrigation with the remainder of the Agricultural Report, if it could be ordered to be printed. This House did order it to be printed; and if it were not for gentlemen like my esteemed friend from Iowa, I do not doubt the Senate would have agreed to it. I am not permitted, however, to say what Senators do say about it, but when the House will agree to distribute that report, I am authorized to say it will be ordered to be printed.

A MEMBER. Is that possible?

Mr. LAMPORT. Yes; it is possible. In my judgment it was a discourtesy on the part of gentlemen to seek to draw out of that Agricultural Report this valuable article on irrigation which, as the Commissioner of Agriculture said, if it were done would materially affect the interest of his report. That valuable article was prepared especially for the Agricultural Report, and the gentleman from Iowa knew very well it was obtained for the very purpose of going into the report.

Mr. KASSON. Was it not procured for the use of the people?

Mr. LAMPORT. It was; and to be published by the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. KASSON. Why should not the people have it?

Mr. LAMPORT. They should have it, and would have had it in the Agricultural Report.

Mr. FIELD. We want the whole thing.

Mr. LAMPORT. The gentleman ought not have stopped the people from getting it by defeating the distribution of that report.

Mr. KASSON. I demanded the publication of that portion of the Agricultural Report on irrigation, but my friend opposed me. My object was to give it to the people as soon as possible.

Mr. LAMPORT. If I understand the gentleman's position, he thinks it would be quite as well to wipe out the Agricultural Department altogether.

Mr. KASSON. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. LAMPORT. I misunderstood the gentleman's position then, and I will not say further what I intended.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the experimental garden has been well illustrated.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For stationery, $2,000; for freight charges, $2,000; for fuel, $2,000; for lights, $600; for subsistence and care of horses, and repair of harness and carriage, $1,500; for paper, twine, and gum for folding-room, $500; for incidental and miscellaneous items, namely, for advertising, telegraphing, dry-goods, soap, brushes, brooms, mats, oils, paints, glass, lumber, hardware, ice, and expenses in attending fairs, and care of stationery, $4,000; in all, $12,600.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I see here an appropriation "for subsistence and care of horses, and repair of harness and carriage, $1,500." I move to strike it out, and I should like to know from the chairman whether it is all right.

Mr. GARFIELD. They have always had an appropriation for horses and carriages for that department. It has been so for a series of years; but if gentlemen think it can be dispensed with, very well; strike it out.

Mr. MCNULTA. Strike out "carriage" and insert "wheelbarrow."

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have now the information which I desired from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that this is for horses and a carriage kept for the purpose of riding about, and that they have in addition other vehicles for transmitting baggage.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no; I did not say that.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Then I did not understand what the gentleman did say.

Mr. GARFIELD. I stated that the Agricultural Department had horses and a vehicle for carrying seeds to and from the post-office, and I supposed a carriage for use in riding about, but I did not know that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by inserting in place of the word "carriage" the word "wagon." And if we get rid of these family carriages we would be enabled at the same time to reduce the amount appropriated. I therefore, also, move to amend by striking out "$1,500" and inserting "$1,000." I think the amount that would be left, $1,000, would still be extravagantly large.

Mr. FORT. I have no objection to striking out the word "carriage" and inserting "wagon;" but I do insist that if I understand the way in which the Agricultural Department is conducted, it is necessary for that department to have at least a baggage-wagon, something in which they can convey their packages to the post-office and the express offices, and with which to do a thousand things that have to be done around the grounds of the Agricultural Department in the way of hauling, &c. You cannot carry on a department of that sort without horses and wagons—without transportation. It is just as necessary as stationery or anything else. I hope the committee will not consent to reduce the appropriation, for I consider that it is not too much for the purpose.

Mr. McNULTA. There is no objection to a wagon; the only objection is to carriages and putting on this style.

Mr. HOLMAN. I modify my amendment so as to make it read "baggage-wagon."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] to substitute the word "baggage-wagon," for the word "carriage."

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

The question was next taken on Mr. HOLMAN's amendment to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$1,000."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I withdraw my amendment to strike out the clause.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move to amend the pending clause by striking out "$1,500" and inserting "$900."

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 21, noes 53; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. GARFIELD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 15, noes 71; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the call for further count.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask unanimous consent to go back to line 1427, where there is an appropriation "for keeping a horse, and repair of carriage and harness" for the Post-Office Department. We have struck out the word "carriage" in the Agricultural Department, and I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that we should make the same change in connection with the Post-Office Department.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is for a Department and not a Bureau. I object to going back.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collecting and modeling specimens of fruits and vegetables, and collecting and preparing specimens for the museum and herbarium, $2,000.

Mr. HAYS. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out "$2,000" and insert "$5,000."

I desire just to say that a salary of $1,200 is paid to a man in the department who does the modeling, and is perfectly indispensable in that branch of the department.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For entomological works of reference, $250; for botanical works of reference, $250; for works on chemistry, mineralogy, and charts, $250; for current agricultural works for the library, $250; for miscellaneous agricultural periodicals, $250; and for completion of sets, $250; in all, $1,500.

Mr. FORT. I move to reconsider the vote by which the appropriation for the disbursing clerk was stricken out at line 1448. I appeal to the committee to hear me for a moment.

Mr. HOSKINS. We cannot reconsider in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] asks unanimous consent to return to the portion of the bill which he has indicated.

Mr. FORT. I am informed that this clerk is the only man who represents west of the mountains in this Agricultural Department, and you have stricken him out.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that perhaps by unanimous consent the committee would agree to attach the additional compensation of $200 to some other clerkship when dispensing with the disbursing clerk.

Mr. FORT. I wish to state that, as I understand, this clerk performs other duties. He is called a disbursing clerk, but is constantly employed. I am informed that much of the time he is engaged as an assistant to the Commissioner himself, and that he is as valuable a man as can be found in the department.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman can call the yeas and nays in the House.

Mr. FORT. If objection is made to going back now I give notice that I will call the yeas and nays on this question in the House.

Mr. KELLOGG. I now ask the attention of the committee to the amendment which I offered yesterday as a substitute for the paragraphs under the head of the War Department, and which was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this morning.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest that the proposition of the Committee on Civil Service Reform as introduced by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] shall be offered as one amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that that was the proposition agreed to by the committee yesterday.

[The paragraphs for which Mr. KELLOGG's amendment is offered as a substitute are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

For compensation of the Secretary of War, $8,000; chief clerk, $2,500; two clerks, at $2,000 each; two clerks of class four, and additional to one clerk of class four as disbursing clerk, $200; five clerks of class three; three clerks of class two; five clerks of class one; one messenger; two assistant messengers; and one laborer; in all, $39,500.

For contingent expenses of his office, $12,000.

For the purpose of examining the rebel archives and having copies furnished for the Government, $6,000.

Office of the Adjutant-General:

For chief clerk, $2,000; four clerks of class four; eight clerks of class three; forty clerks of class two; forty clerks of class one; two messengers; one assistant messenger; and one fireman; in all, $129,120.

For postage on official matter of the War Department and its Bureaus, $120,000.

For contingent expenses, $8,000.

Office of the Quartermaster-General:

For chief clerk, $2,000; three clerks of class four; seven clerks of class three; fifteen clerks of class two; fifty clerks of class one; thirty copyists, at $900 each; superintendent of the building, $200; one messenger; two assistant messengers; and six laborers; in all, $133,400.

For contingent expenses, $7,000.

Office of the Paymaster-General:

For chief clerk, $2,000; three clerks of class four; seven clerks of class three; eighteen clerks of class two; ten clerks of class one; and two messengers; in all, $57,480.

For contingent expenses, $4,000.

Office of the Commissary-General:

For chief clerk, $2,000; one clerk of class three; six clerks of class two; twelve clerks of class one; one messenger; and two laborers; in all, $28,680.

For contingent expenses, namely: office-rent, repairs, and miscellaneous items, $5,000.

Office of the Surgeon-General:

For chief clerk, $2,000; one clerk of class three; two clerks of class two; six clerks of class one; one messenger; and one laborer; in all, $15,160.

For contingent expenses, blank books, stationery, binding, rent, fuel, and including rent of Surgeon-General's Office and Army Medical Museum, $7,000.

Office of Chief Engineer:

For chief clerk, $2,000; three clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; four clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; one messenger; and one laborer; in all, $25,760.

For contingent expenses, namely: for stationery, office furniture, miscellaneous and incidental expenses, including professional books, maps, and two daily Washington newspapers, $3,000.

Office of the Chief of Ordnance:

For chief clerk, $2,000; two clerks of class four; two clerks of class three; three clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; and one messenger; in all, $18,640.

For contingent expenses, namely: stationery, envelopes, wrapping-paper, for sending blanks to the arsenals, forts, permanent batteries, and troops in the field, telegrams, express charges, and incidentals of a similar nature, furniture, matting, carpets, oil-cloth, professional books for Ordnance Department library, pamphlets, and newspapers, $2,000.

Office of Military Justice:

For one chief clerk, at $2,000; one clerk of class three; one clerk of class one; in all, $4,800.

For contingent expenses, $500.

Signal Office:

For two clerks of class two, $2,800.

Office of the Inspector-General:

For one clerk of class three, $1,600.

The following is the substitute proposed by Mr. KELLOGG:

That on and after the 1st day of July, 1874, there may be employed in the War Department and its several branches or Bureaus, the following persons, or so many of them as may at any time be found necessary for the transaction of public business:

In the office of the Secretary of War:

One chief clerk, at an annual compensation of $2,500; one disbursing clerk, at $2,000; two chief clerks of divisions, at $2,000; seven clerks of class four; six clerks of class three; six clerks of class two; fifteen clerks of class one; two messengers, at $840 each; nine laborers, at $720; seven watchmen for northwest building, (executive,) at $720 each; in all, $70,300.

For contingent expenses of his office, $12,000.

For the purpose of examining the rebel archives and having copies furnished for the Government, $6,000.

In the office of the Adjutant-General:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; nine clerks of class four; fifteen clerks of class three; twenty-five clerks of class two; one hundred clerks of class one; three temporary clerks of class four; six temporary clerks of class three; twenty temporary clerks of class two; sixty temporary clerks of class one; ten messengers, at $840; in all, $320,600.

For postage on official matter of the War Department and its Bureaus, $120,000.

For contingent expenses, $8,000.

In the office of the Inspector-General:

One clerk of class four; one messenger, at $840; in all, $2,640.

In the office of the Quartermaster-General:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; eight clerks of class four; ten clerks of class three; twenty-four clerks of class two, forty clerks of class one; eighteen copyists, at $900; one messenger, at $840; eight laborers, at $720; one engineer, at $800; one fireman, at $720; and five watchmen, at $720 each; six temporary clerks of class two; ten temporary clerks of class one; ten temporary copyists, at $900; in all, $171,520.

For contingent expenses, $7,000.

In the office of the Paymaster-General:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; seven clerks of class four; eight clerks of class three; fifteen clerks of class two; thirteen clerks of class one; one messenger, at $840; four watchmen, at $720; five laborers, at $720; two temporary clerks of class two, three temporary clerks of class one; in all, $77,720.

For contingent expenses, $4,000.

In the office of the Commissary-General:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; two clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; five clerks of class two; twelve clerks of class one; one messenger, at $840; three laborers, at $720; two watchmen, at $720; in all, $37,840.

For contingent expenses, namely: office-rent, repairs, and miscellaneous items, $7,000.

In the Office of the Surgeon-General:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; five clerks of class four; three clerks of class three; eight clerks of class two; one hundred and fifteen clerks of class one, (twenty of whom shall be temporary;) one librarian, at $1,600; one chemist, at $1,800; one anatomist at the Army Medical Museum, at $1,600; one engineer in division of records and museum, $1,400; one messenger, at $840; twenty-two watchmen and laborers, (six temporary,) at $720 each; in all, $188,080.

For contingent expenses, blank books, stationery, binding, rent, fuel, and including rent of Surgeon-General's Office and Army Medical Museum, $7,000.

In the office of the Chief Engineer:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; five clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; four clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; one messenger, at $840; three laborers, at $720 each; in all, $30,080.

For contingent expenses, namely: for stationery, office furniture, miscellaneous and incidental expenses, including professional books, maps, and two daily Washington newspapers, $3,000.

In the office of the Chief of Ordnance:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; three clerks of class four; three clerks of class three; three clerks of class two; eight clerks of class one; one messenger, at $840; one laborer, at $720; in all, $27,560.

For contingent expenses, namely: stationery, envelopes, wrapping-paper, for sending blanks to the arsenals, forts, permanent batteries, and troops in the field, telegrams, express charges, and incidentals of a similar nature, furniture, matting, carpets, oil-cloth, professional books for Ordnance Department library, pamphlets, and newspapers, $2,000.

In the office of Military Justice:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; one clerk of class four; one clerk of class three; two clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; one messenger, at $840; in all, $13,840.

For contingent expenses, $500.

In the Signal Office:

Two clerks of class four; one messenger, at $840; in all, $4,440]

Mr. KELLOGG. I propose to offer the amendment as one proposition, and gentlemen turning to page 31 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this morning will find all printed there. The amendment covers all the salaries in the War Department, including the salary of the Secretary of War. It strikes out of the bill all from page 40, line 956, beginning with the words "War Department," down to line 1041, on page 43, inclusive.

I simply desire to say that there has been a vast deal of labor expended in preparing the amendment which I offer as a substitute, and that the credit is chiefly due to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] who was chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department during the last Congress and spent a great deal of labor on this matter. The credit is almost entirely due to him. The bill is substantially as he presented it at this session, and it saves about $178,000 and makes a regular Department of the War Department, like the others.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did I understand the gentleman from Connecticut to say that this proposition reduces the expenses of the Department below what are provided in this bill as it stands before the committee? I understand that this bill appropriates in the aggregate $549,370 and that his bill appropriates $685,190. Is that correct?

Mr. KELLOGG. No, sir; that is not correct. The gentleman states what was appropriated in the bill last year. If he will look at his Book of Estimates he will find on page 66 another item of four hundred hospital stewards assigned to the Department for work, whose compensation amounted to $144,000, and on page 67 he will find another item of three hundred and eighty-eight hospital stewards, and so on. The force in the War Department has hitherto been made up by assigning from the Army officers whose pay, rations, quarters, and everything of that kind have amounted to nearly $200,000 more than this amendment gives. If the gentleman will look at page 32 of the RECORD of to-day he will find a table which has been examined very carefully both by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILLIAMS] who prepared the bill and by the clerk of our committee, who looked over it last evening, and he will find that the appropriations last year amounted to $1,106,300.74, while the appropriations in this amendment amount to only $951,940, which is in lieu of all other appropriations from whatever source. It makes a saving of $167,360.74.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am very anxious to support this amendment if it has that effect.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is the effect of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I wish to call attention to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations report to the House this bill appropriating in the aggregate $549,370. I take the figures from the bill itself, and I find by the RECORD of to-day that the gentleman's proposition involves an appropriation of $962,180, which is a large increase over and above the appropriations proposed by the present bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman from Indiana will listen to me for a moment I think I can make him understand why the Committee on Appropriations prefer the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut to their own bill. In our regular appropriation bills we have never taken into account at all that large force employed in the War Department as clerks, who are employed under a general law giving the Secretary of War power to employ clerks from what is known as the general service, enlisted and paid for under the clause appropriating money to pay the Army in the Army appropriation bill, and to enlist persons specially for the general service. That is a power that ought never to be granted to any head of a Department except in an emergency like the emergencies through which we have passed since the war. It is proposed by this amendment to sweep that power away, and of course that would take off a class of clerks much larger in number than any reduction that we have made in our bill. It provides, also, that hereafter there shall be no such enlistments into the general service, and nobody employed as clerks excepting those herein authorized. It repeals all the vague, uncertain legislation which puts such large power into the hands of the Secretary of War, and in that respect we think those who prepared this amendment have done what is better than our bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the committee propose to adopt this whole amendment; and inasmuch as both the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service favor it, I desire to know whether any of the salaries proposed by the amendments of my colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] are increased over and above the salaries reported to the House in this appropriation bill?

Mr. KELLOGG. They are not.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand that there is no salary increased.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us take a vote.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. KELLOGG, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do I understand that the amendment which has just been adopted includes all that is printed in the RECORD this morning?

Mr. KELLOGG. No, sir; there were three paragraphs printed in the RECORD this morning which are not included in the amendment as I have offered it. They will be found at the bottom of page 31 of the RECORD. They involve new legislation, and inasmuch as a bill in relation to the matter to which they refer will be reported by the Committee on Military Affairs on Monday next, it was thought best not to incorporate them in this appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

War Department buildings:

For compensation of superintendent of the building occupied by the War Department ($250) and for four watchmen and two laborers; in all, $4,570.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I move to add to that paragraph the following:

For an engineer in charge of heating the War Department building, $1,200.

That item was accidentally omitted in the preparation of the bill. It simply provides for an officer for the War Department building, who is provided for each of the other Departments.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I move to insert after the amendment just adopted the following:

For superintendent of the building at the corner of Fifteenth and G streets occupied as the Quartermaster-General's office, $250.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is undoubtedly a messsenger employed in that building, which is a comparatively small building.

Mr. FORT. I understand that this individual is to be employed a part of the time as a watchman. There are a great many very valuable papers in that building, and it would be a great loss to have them destroyed by fire or otherwise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe it has not been estimated for, and it is not reported in this bill by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FORT. I am advised that this is very necessary.

The amendment was then agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For superintendent of the building at the corner of Seventeenth and F streets ($250) and for four watchmen and two laborers; in all, $4,570.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I move to insert after the paragraph just read the following:

For superintendent of the building on Tenth street occupied as the Surgeon-General's office, $250.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust my colleague will not seek to add a new set of employés as superintendents of these comparatively unimportant buildings. There are now messengers employed in these buildings who can perform this duty.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. This bill provides superintendents for all the Government buildings but these two,

Mr. HOLMAN. We know how these things grow. It is proposed to give $250 now; next year it will be $1,000. I trust my colleague will not provide for an increased number of employés.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. This is no increase whatever.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For one retired justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, $8,000.

Mr. EAMES. I move to strike out the clause just read. I do not know that there is now any retired justice of the Supreme Court.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is only reasonable that, as we did last year, we should make some provision in case there should be a justice retired during the year. We ought not to permit the possibility of retiring a justice of the Supreme Court without providing the means to pay him. Of course the money will not be used unless there should be a justice retired.

Mr. EAMES. Provision is made in this bill for the salaries of the Chief Justice and eight associate justices of the Supreme Court, who constitute the entire court. If either of the justices should be retired there is provision already made for his salary. And unless there is some justice already retired, it seems to me there is no occasion for this item in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For salaries of the district judges of the United States, including the salaries of the retired judges of the eastern district of Texas and of the eastern district of Delaware, $189,500.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend the paragraph just read by inserting after the word "Texas" the words "of the eastern district of Wisconsin," and adding to the aggregate amount the sum of $3,500.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. DUELL. I move to add to the paragraph as amended that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That from and after the 1st day of January, 1875, the salary of the district judges of the districts of California, Maine, Massachusetts, Connecticut, northern, southern, and eastern districts of New York, eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania, the district of New Jersey, the district of Maryland, northern and southern districts of Ohio, northern and southern districts of Illinois, district of Indiana, district of Iowa, district of Kentucky, eastern and western districts of Missouri, shall be $5,000 each; and the salary of the judge of every other district shall be $4,000 each. And said salaries shall be in full compensation of all official services performed by such judges; and no other allowance or payment shall be made to them for travel, expenses, or otherwise.

Mr. GARFIELD. I raise the point of order that that proposes a permanent change of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken.

Mr. DUELL. I suppose that an amendment which proposes simply to raise a salary is in order?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is a permanent change of the law; it provides that hereafter the salaries of these judges shall be so and so.

Mr. DUELL. If the Chair holds that the point of order is well taken——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be happy to hear from the gentleman whether the point is well taken or not.

Mr. DUELL. I am not sufficiently versed in parliamentary law to presume to instruct the Chair, but I am informed by gentlemen about me that my amendment is in order, proposing to increase salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] on this point.

Mr. GARFIELD. I admit that it is in order to increase an appropriation for the salary of an officer. But when you use language that permanently changes the law, by providing that hereafter officers shall be paid such and such salaries, it seems to me that is clearly out of order. Then toward the close of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DUELL] is a regulation about fees and allowances, changing the general provisions of law in relation to those subjects. That is clearly new legislation, having force and effect outside of and beyond an appropriation bill; not merely a change in an appropriation. I draw a distinction between the increase of an appropriation for a salary which depends upon a yearly appropriation and the fixing a salary at a permanent future rate.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I ask the Clerk to read a paragraph on page 16 of Barclay's Digest in connection with this point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

It has been decided that under this rule it is not in order to propose an amendment to a general appropriation bill which changes an existing law. But it was also decided that the latter branch of the rule not only permitted amendments increasing salaries, but was framed for that very purpose.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Will the Chair permit me to make one suggestion in answer to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD?]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very happy to hear the gentleman.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The gentleman from Ohio has said that we may on an appropriation bill appropriate a larger sum for an existing salary, but that we cannot change the law and raise the salary. Now it is very manifest that this cannot be so, because if we should appropriate the larger sum without changing the law, that larger sum could not be drawn; the officer could draw only his legal salary, and no more.

Mr. GARFIELD. That would be true, perhaps, if by an organic act the salary had been fixed at a certain figure; but a very large group of governmental salaries depend exclusively upon the annual appropriations. The Committee on the Revision of the Laws found that a majority of all the salaries under the Government are entirely dependent for their amounts upon the annual appropriation acts, and that a large number of offices have no legal existence except as they are authorized by provisions for the pay in appropriation acts. As to salaries of that kind, we may without doubt make an increase on an appropriation bill. We may cut down or increase the number of clerks in any Department; we may change a salary that has been fixed merely in an appropriation act. But where a law provides, for instance, that a judge shall be entitled to a certain salary, to say that in an appropriation bill we can utterly change the organic law in that regard, is, it seems to me, to run directly in the face of our rule about new legislation.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire to observe to the Chair that the uniform current of decisions in this House has been the other way for many years. The salaries of justices of the Supreme Court were raised on an appropriation bill two years ago, and again on an appropriation bill last winter. The salaries of the President and of members of Congress were also raised on an appropriation bill. Such has been the uniform ruling in this House ever since I have been a member and a great many years before, and it is expressly declared in the passage which has been read from the Digest.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly there has never been a permanent fixing of salaries in an appropriation bill, but only the annual appropriation for those salaries. The rule which has been read was designed to provide for the increase or diminution of salaries not actually fixed by law, as is the case with most of the clerkships in the Departments. In our appropriation bills we make merely the appropriations from year to year. But here is a proposition to increase a body of salaries permanently; and it is clearly not within the rules.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, setting aside the question whether we can on an appropriation bill raise a salary fixed by law, there is another objection to which, it seems to me, the amendment is clearly liable from the fact that it proposes to put salaries in place of fees or allowances that may at present exist. Suppose, for instance, and I think my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] will agree with me, that a judge is, under existing laws, paid entirely by fees; it will hardly be claimed that we could in such a case change the method of payment on an appropriation bill and fix a salary at a given sum. It might be a reduction or it might be an increase; nobody would know. Therefore, aside from the questions that have been discussed, the amendment seems to me liable in this view to the point of order.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I agree with the gentleman from Maine on his last proposition.

Mr. MELLISH. I would like to know from the mover of the amendment what is the proposed increase of each salary and what will be the aggregate increase?

The CHAIRMAN. That inquiry would be pertinent if the amendment were decided to be properly before the committee. The Chair rules that in its present form it is not admissible.

Mr. DUELL. I now offer the amendment in a modified form, which I trust will obviate the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

